"Is a loan at low interest for a long period of years that carries with it the delusive promise that 'it will never have to be paid' of advantage to the borrower? Does such a loan make for thrift? Does it not lead to speculation, to extravagance, and to the incurring of indebtedness that more than counterbalances any advantage of low interest? It is exceedingly doubtful whether making the borrowing of money easy is an advantage to the average human being. We know that in many cases it is most disastrous.

REPREHENSIBLE METHODS.

"The Government, in order to make these loans, paid the salaries of agents, printed thousands of circulars at Government expense, and sent them through the post office free of postage. Some of the methods used in advertising these loans were most reprehensible. They were misleading and intended to deceive. Some of these advertisements contained in large black letters these words: 'Mortgages You Never Have to Pay Back.'

"Again, it is stated: 'Under the new land-bank plan you make a "mortgage you never have to pay back"'

"Again, it is stated: 'These small payments reduce your principal and by adding to them the interest they earn they pay your mortgage off for you.'

"Such circulars, if issued by a private institution, would be denied the use of the mails on the ground of palpable fraud, and those responsible for their circulation would be lucky if they kept outside prison walls. And for such purposes, in the days when we are burdened with taxes, do we use the public money!

"But if it is an advantage to the farmer to receive these loans, remember only 1 out of 161 farmers annually gets the benefit at the present rate of loaning. If he gets any benefit, then some one must pay for it, including 160 of his neighbors who do not receive it. Why should the Government loan the public money to the farmer? Why should the farmer get public money on a mortgage on his farm and that privilege be denied to a man who has a mortgage on his home in the same town or city? The Government never made a dollar; it never did and never can produce a dollar. The money that the Government loans to one citizen is taken from another. If the fate of the Nation depended upon it, the Government could not create a single dollar. The money that this Government takes through the Federal loan banks and loans to 1 family out of 605 is money that is taken from the other 604. What right has the Nation to show such favoritism? It can not be justified on the ground of charity or philanthropy, for it is taken from all classes, rich and poor alike, and given to the well to do. While there may be some question as to whether or not the recipients of these loans are benefited thereby, there can be no question that it increases the taxes of all other taxpayers.

BENEFITS THE SUPERRICH.

"The act creating these Federal loan banks provided that the bonds of these banks be free from taxation of every kind. In justice to Congress it should be said that the most serious result of this worst feature of the act was not anticipated, and has arisen since Congress passed the law, owing to the vast issue of Government bonds to carry on the war and the heavy income taxes that have been levied. We have a remarkable situation in this country to-day. A bond issued by one of these banks is worth more than a bond issued by the Government. The creature becomes greater than the creator. A Liberty bond to-day is worth about 97, while a Federal land-bank bond is worth from 104½ to 107. If those dreaming socialistic theorists who have so persistently preached that the credit of the Government is unlimited will take a look at these figures they will change their opinion, if facts will change it. One of these tax-free bonds, drawing 5 per cent interest, in the hands of a multimillionaire, whose annual income is more than a million dollars, would enable him to save $38 out of every $50 interest that he receives, instead of paying it to the Government, as he would have to do upon other securities. In other words, the Government loses $38 out of every $50 on these bonds, and this loss the other taxpayers must make up. These tax-free 5 per cent bonds in the hands of the superrich are worth 21.75 per cent annually, the best and most profitable investment in the world, furnished by the Government at the expenses of the other taxpayers, to the 206 richest people in America. These are the legitimate fruits of this impractical socialistic plan, and yet it is done in the name of the poor.

PROPOSITION IS UNFAIR.

"The people in time of war, many of them at great sacrifice, bought Liberty bonds, and they were content to accept from the Government 4½ per cent interest, and even less, if the Liberty bonds are to remain at the present depreciation. Yet the Government takes millions of its money and uses it, not for war purposes, but gives it to these banks that issue bonds that enable the Nation's richest citizens to secure an income of 21.75 per cent. This is an unconscionable and exorbitant profit given to the very class in this country that needs it least, and at the same time increases by that much the burdens of the other taxpayers. Or, to put it in another way, while the ordinary individual must be content with 4½ per cent interest on depreciated Liberty bonds, the superrich secure on Federal farm-loan bonds 21.75 per cent. Notwithstanding all this, the theorist, saturated with his socialistic sophistry, actually thinks that this system is for the benefit of the people.

"We should not forget that there are enough individuals in the United States whose annual income is over $1,000,000 to absorb all the bonds of these banks, and he would be devoid of ordinary reason that did not know that most of these bonds will soon be owned by this rich, favored class.

ILLEGITIMATE PROFIT FOR MILLIONAIRES.

"It is no reason to condemn a millionaire because he makes annually 21.75 per cent on his money. He might be engaged in some great industrial undertaking where the executive ability required and the risk incurred and the benefit given to the public will fully justify such profits. But in the case of the farm-loan bank bond this is an illegitimate profit made by the favor of the Government, for he takes no chances, furnishes no executive ability, and adds nothing to the industry of the world. He simply escapes paying the Government his just part of the money that is necessary to meet the expenses incurred by the Great War. Here is an illustration of an unjust profit given directly to a favored few by Government favor that can not be justified on any principle of charity, honest business, or morals, or of the just exercise of Government authority.

"Another thing: The selling of these tax-free bonds has had a very marked effect in depreciating Liberty loan bonds, very largely because these tax-free bonds are worth to the very rich 21.75 per cent. Every person in America that has bought a Liberty bond has sustained a loss of from $3 to $4 on every $100 worth purchased. The poor man that gave to his country by buying a Liberty bond that cost him $100 has lost $4. The widow that from her savings or from what she has inherited that gave $1,000 has lost $40. The purchasers of the bonds of the last Liberty loan at the present price of these bonds have lost $240,000,000. This loss is largely due to the tax-free bonds of the Federal farm-loan banks.

"The Treasury Department has recognized these facts and now proposes that the Government itself shall buy these bonds. That is, the Treasury Department now proposes to take $200,000,000 of the money that the people have given to the Nation on the supposition that this sum was to be used to carry on the war and give it to these Federal loan banks in order that a favored few may be benefited as above illustrated.

PROFITS AND LOSSES.

"Here is the way this paternal socialistic institution benefits all of the people: We will take the case of a farmer, an Iowa farmer, for in that State the average beneficiary of this Government charity owns property worth at least $15,000. This farmer has a loan at 6 per cent from some private institution. He replaces it by a loan from the Federal farm-loan bank at 5½ per cent. He saves $5. The $1,000 that the farmer receives represents a bond bought by a millionaire investor. Being tax free, the entire $50 interest that the millionaire investor receives on this bond he puts in his pocket instead of giving $33.50 of it to the Government, as he would if it came from other security. In local taxes this $1,000 bond escapes at least $5 additional taxes. Here is the net result of this Government owned and operated bank scheme as at present run:

On a $1,000 loan.

Farmer saves	$5.00
Multimillionaire makes	38.50
Federal Government loses income tax	33.50
Local government loses various taxes	5.00
American people pay	38.50
To give farmer	5.00
Costs American people	7.70
To give farmer	1.00

(These computations were made when the revenue law of 1917 was in effect. Under the law of 1919 the cost would be greater.—W. E. H.)

"Never in the history of government has there been such an obnoxious and vicious example of taxing all the people for the benefit of the rich. Never has there been such a vicious and unjustifiable example of class legislation. If these farmers, owning, on an average, property worth more than $5,000, must be the objects of Government charity, then it would cost about one-eighth of the present plan to give them the money direct.

"This extravagant cost in relation to the benefits given is characteristic of all Government-operated business undertakings. I know of no Government institution that does not cost seven times as much in proportion to the benefits received as similar institutions operated by private concerns.

RESULTS EPITOMIZED.

"Is class legislation of the most vicious character.

"Benefits only the few very rich and the few that receive their salaries for conducting the business.

"Uses public money to make private loans to a favored few.

"Loans largest in States where security is poorest.

"Promotes speculation and extravagance; discourages economy and thrift.

"Does not promote home building or farm buying.

"Benefits only 1 farmer out of 161 each year. (In two years loans were made to about 1 farmer in 100.)

"Only 1 family out of 605 given the privilege.

"Borrowers are the well to do and not the poor.

"Average borrower owns property worth $5,000 or more.

"Costs the Government $7.70 to give farmer $1.

"Far cheaper to make direct appropriation from National Treasury to the borrowers.

"Enables the 206 richest individuals in America to purchase bonds drawing interest equal to 21.75 per cent.

"Enables this class to escape paying their income tax.

"Depreciates the price of Liberty bonds.

"Is a discrimination in favor of the superrich before unknown in modern government.

"Causes loss of many millions of dollars each year to the Government, that other taxpayers must pay.

"I know that the above facts in regard to this pet socialistic scheme of this administration that has received such extravagant praise from many Congressmen whose volume of words was in reverse ratio to their volume of thinking seems astonishing, but the truth of every statement made is demonstrated by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury referred to, if one will but have the patience to dig these facts out of the laudatory language that conceals them. This farm-loan banking undertaking, like all other socialistic propositions, is fundamentally wrong, based upon the idea that it is an advantage to an individual to get something for nothing. This always weakens self-reliance, takes away the incentive to endeavor, and lessens the capacity.

"The foundation of socialism is bottomed upon the proposition that a dead corpse is worth more than a live man.

SOMETHING OF NOTHING.

"Socialism and perpetual motion are born of the same hope—to create something out of nothing. The socialistic dreamer and the perpetual-motion crank 'are of imagination all compact,' both seeking the impossible, both trying to accomplish what only the Infinite can do, and both with a kink in their mental machinery that makes it impossible for them to see the futility of their hopes.

"In every department of government to-day we have these reformers, these saviors of the people, each with his own pet 'perpetual-motion' plan. Always, however, these plans agree in one respect, and that is that it must be done by the Government out of the National Treasury. The promoters of these impractical, chimerical, and crazy schemes have multiplied and prospered greatly under this administration. They have influenced even those in the seats of the mighty. In every bureau and in at least two of the Cabinet places there are to-day these socialistic uplifters, obsessed with the fatal fallacy that the world, by the use of Government money, can lift itself over the fence by its boot straps. And what makes one so infernally impatient is that so many of this class are paid by the Government while they propagate their lunacy."

COPY OF CIRCULAR ISSUED BY BANKERS' MORTGAGE CO., CHICAGO.

Tax-free "instrumentalities of the United States Government"—Five per cent farm-loan bonds, issued under the Federal farm-loan act, dated November 1, 1918, due November 1, 1938—Redeemable at par and accrued interest on any interest date after five years from date of issue—Coupon bonds fully registerable and interchangeable—Denomination, $1,000—Interest payable semiannually, May 1 and November 1—Principal and interest payable at the bank of issue or collectible through the office of the undersigned—Exempt from all Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation, excepting only inheritance taxes.

THE FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT.

The Federal farm-loan act was approved by Congress July 17, 1916, to provide capital for agricultural development, to create standard forms of investment based upon farm mortgages, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes. It creates, under the Department of the Treasury, a Federal Farm Loan Bureau, under the general supervision of the Federal Farm Loan Board. This Farm Loan Board shall consist of five members, including the Secretary of the Treasury and four members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the consent of the Senate.

Among the powers of the Federal Farm Loan Board is the power to charter joint-stock land banks with a minimum capital of $250,000. A bank can not issue bonds until its capital is fully paid. The shareholders' liability is double the amount of stock. A land bank is authorized by its charter to make farm loans in the State in which located and one adjoining State on the Government's amortization plan providing for the payment of loans in fixed installments in not less than 5 nor more than 40 years, and under the direction and control of the Federal Farm Loan Board to issue farm-loan bonds not to exceed fifteen times the amount of its capital and surplus.

SECURITY APPROVED BY UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT.

First mortgages on farm lands or United States Government bonds or certificates of indebtedness are deposited with a registrar approved by the farm loan board at Washington as collateral security for the bonds. The mortgages are limited by law to one-half of the value of the land and 20 per cent of the value of permanent, insured improvements, such value to be determined by an appraiser of the Federal farm loan board. Before bonds are issued the original application and appraiser's report, on which such loans are based, must be submitted and approved by the Federal farm loan board in Washington. The bank operates under Federal charter and Government supervision and may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury as a financial agent of the Government and a depositary of public funds.

THE ISSUING INSTITUTIONS.

The Lincoln Joint Stock Land Bank (Lincoln, Nebr.):

Mortgage loans of the Lincoln Joint Stock Land Bank are confined to the States of Nebraska and Iowa. The Lincoln Joint Stock Land Bank is closely connected with the Lincoln Trust Co., of Lincoln, Nebr., an established mortgage institution.

Virginian Joint Stock Land Bank (Charleston, W. Va.):

Mortgage loans are confined to the States of Ohio and West Virginia.

Arkansas Joint Stock Land Bank, Mississippi Joint Stock Land Bank (Memphis, Tenn.):

Mortgage loans are confined to the States of Arkansas and Mississippi. These banks are controlled by the Bank of Commerce & Trust Co., of Memphis, Tenn., which has a long, successful record handling mortgage loans on the rich alluvial Mississippi delta lands in these States.

Iowa Joint Stock Land Bank (Sioux City, Iowa):

Mortgage loans confined to the States of Iowa and South Dakota. The Iowa Joint Stock Land Bank is closely associated with the Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., of Sioux City.

LEGAL FOR TRUST FUNDS AND SECURITY FOR DEPOSITS.

The bonds of the joint-stock land banks are legal investments for all fiduciary and trust funds under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government and acceptable as security for postal savings and all other deposits of governmental funds.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION.

The act provides that "farm-loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and as such they and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation." It will be noted that this exemption clause covers completely all forms of taxation exclusive of inheritance taxes, and includes both principal and interest.

COPY OF CIRCULAR ADVERTISING FEDERAL LAND-BANK BONDS.

$54,000,000 Federal land-bank 4½ per cent farm-loan bonds. Issued under the direction and control of the Federal farm-loan board, a bureau of the Treasury Department of the United States. Dated May 1, 1919. Due May 1, 1939. Redeemable at par and interest on any interest date after five years from date of issue. Interest May 1 and November 1. Coupons payable at any Federal land bank or Federal reserve bank. Principal payable at bank of issue. Coupon and registered bonds (interchangeable) in denominations of $1,000, $500, $100, $50, and $25. Exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation.

Federal land-bank bonds are declared by Congress to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and as such, exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation.

These bonds, therefore, have as complete exemption from taxation as the first liberty loan 3½ per cent bonds.

The 12 Federal land banks were organized by the United States Government with an original $9,000,000 capital stock, which has since been increased through operations of the system to over $19,500,000. The Federal land banks were created to meet the agricultural needs of the United States as the Federal reserve banks were designed to meet the mercantile and manufacturing needs.

In order to avoid confusion it should be noted that the bonds of the Federal land banks are issued by banks created by the United States Government in which banks the Government owns a substantial amount of the stock. All 12 Federal land banks are liable for the ultimate payment of all bonds issued by each and every Federal land bank.

Joint stock land banks are organized under the same act of Congress but are owned by private interests, the United States Government holding none of the stock, and there is no liability on the part of one joint stock land bank for the obligation of the others.

Federal land bank bonds are secured by deposit of an equal amount of United States Government bonds or first mortgages on farm lands cultivated by the owner, which mortgages are appraised and guaranteed by the local National Farm Loan Association of which the borrower is a member and stockholder. Each stockholder is liable for twice the par value of his stock. Before the loan is made the property must be examined and a separate appraisal and written report made by an appraiser or appraisers appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Board. This appraisal must be finally confirmed by the directors of the Federal land bank of the district, and before a bond issue is allowed the original application and appraiser's report on which each loan is based must be examined and passed upon by the securities department of the Federal Farm Loan Board in Washington. No mortgage loan may be made in excess of $10,000 nor may it exceed one-half the appraised value of the land mortgaged and 20 per cent of the appraised value of permanent insured improvements thereon. The mortgagor contracts to reduce the amount of his loan by annual or semiannual payments of principal with payments of interest, thereby constantly increasing the margin of security.

The bonds are acceptable by the United States Treasury at par as security for Government deposits, including postal savings funds. They are lawful investments for all fiduciary and trust funds under the jurisdiction and control of the Federal Government. They are eligible under the laws of many of the States for investment of all public and private funds and are eligible for investment by savings banks in the following States:

Arkansas, California, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Minnesota, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

The Attorney General of the United States on behalf of the Government, and the Hon. Charles E. Hughes on our behalf, have approved the constitutionality of the act and the validity of the provisions exempting the bonds from taxation. For extract from opinion of Hon. Charles E. Hughes see reverse side.

Price of 100¼ and interest, netting over 4.38 per cent to the redeemable date (1924) and 4¼ per cent thereafter up to redemption or maturity.

OPINION OF THE HON. CHARLES E. HUGHES.

At our request, former Supreme Court Justice Charles E. Hughes has rendered us an opinion as to the constitutionality of the Federal farm-loan act of July 17, 1916, and particularly with respect to the validity of the farm-loan bonds and the provisions exempting these bonds and the income derived therefrom from taxation.

Copies of Judge Hughes's opinion in full may be obtained upon application. We quote as follows the concluding paragraph of the opinion:

"My conclusion is that the farm-loan bonds to be issued by the Federal land banks organized and controlled as provided in the Federal farm-loan act will be, when duly issued and paid for, valid securities, constituting as declared by Congress instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and that they and the income derived therefrom will be exempt as provided in the act from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation; and further, that, with respect to bonds duly issued and paid for under this exemption, it will constitute a continuing exemption which can not be withdrawn by subsequent legislation."

We also quote from the opinion the following paragraph with respect to the relation of the Government to these bonds, which is considered in the course of the review of the grounds sustaining their validity:

"Taking into consideration the facts which have been stated with respect to the organization and control of the Federal land banks, I am of the opinion that the farm-loan bonds which are about to be issued by these banks under the authority and direction of the Federal Farm Loan Board by virtue of the powers conferred by Congress, and which have been expressly declared by Congress to be instrumentalities of the Federal Government, must be regarded as obligations having the support of the good faith and credit of the United States. And while such obligations, because of the nature of sovereignty, confer no right of action against the United States without its consent, being 'only binding on the conscience of the sovereign,' and hence in this aspect invite reliance on the sense of justice of Congress, still the actual relation of the Government to the issue of these bonds affords additional ground for sustaining their validity."

Answer of the Comptroller of the Currency to Senate Joint Resolution No. 11, State of California.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDMUND PLATT,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 30, 1919.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, availing myself of the privilege accorded me of extending my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter of the Comptroller of the Currency relative to criticisms made in a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of California, a letter written in answer to one of mine, in which I inclosed copy of the resolution and asked for information, I desire only to say that this is the first criticism alleging "inadequate examination of national banks" that has come to my attention for a number of years. Generally the criticisms have been that examinations are too severe or too technical or too costly. The comptroller's letter follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 17, 1919.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your letter of the 12th instant, advising me that you have received recently "a number of copies of the joint resolution from the Legislature of California with regard to banks in Riverside and Santa Rosa, in that State, where, according to the resolution, 'these failures have been brought about by the inadequate examination of the national banks under the existing law,'" etc.

Your comment that this "must have been an exaggeration, for failures certainly can not be said to have been brought about in any case by inadequate examination, as all examinations can do is to serve warning and when conditions are not too bad to prevent failures already impending" is, of course, absolutely correct.

The joint resolution of the Legislature of California to which you refer is an extraordinary document and seems either to have been passed carelessly as the result of a strange ignorance of facts and to have been based upon supposed conditions which do not exist, or else the legislature was deceived and misled by some enemy of the administration or of this office.

The senate joint resolution bears date of March 20, 1919, and I quote it as follows:

"SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 11.

"(By Senators Slater and Evans.)

"Relative to more strict examination of national banks by the Federal Government.

"Whereas failures among national banks of the United States have been the cause of great suffering among innocent depositors and stockholders and, in some cases, have been brought about by the inadequate examination of national banks under the existing laws of the United States, as recently illustrated in the cities of Riverside and Santa Rosa, in the State of California; and

"Whereas it is apparent that more careful examination of national banks is required: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the senate and assembly, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California hereby memorializes Congress to provide for proper legislation for the more strict examination of national banks within the United States; and be it further

"Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they hereby are, requested to take such steps as may be necessary to institute such legislation; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be, and he hereby is, directed to forward copies of these resolutions to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and each of California's Senators and Representatives in Congress."

The declaration in the resolution that "It is apparent that more careful examination of national banks is required" is not supported by the facts; on the contrary, the records indicate clearly that the examinations of national banks now made under this administration are the most careful, the most thorough, and the most efficient in the history of the national banking system. This is the first complaint, as far as I recall, that this office has received during the five years of my administration as comptroller suggesting that the examinations now being made were either not careful or not sufficiently rigid.

Because of the conspicuously high efficiency of the bank examinations made under supervision of this bureau some of the clearing-house associations about the country have decided to abolish the position of clearing-house examiners formerly maintained. It is also noteworthy that the very first clearing-house association to do away with the clearing-house examiner on this account was the Clearing House Association of San Francisco. Within the past few days a leading banker from another important city in the Central West called at this office and, commending in strong terms the efficiency of national-bank examinations as now conducted, incidentally mentioned that the clearing-house association of his city had also done away with its clearing-house examiners because of the excellent work now done by the national-bank examiners.

The thoroughness of national-bank examinations and the policy of this office in enforcing the observance of law on the part of national banks are being clearly reflected in the increasing immunity from bank failures, as shown by official records. The time of the greatest financial strain to which this country has ever been subjected has probably been the past two years and three months of President Wilson's second administration, which includes the entire period of our war with Germany—19 months, and 8 months of reconstruction and readjustment; and yet the records show that the national-bank failures per year for each 1,000 national banks in operation was sixteen times as great in the 25 years prior to March, 1917, as during the past 27 months of war and reconstruction.

So much for the record of national banks throughout the country generally.

Now as to the State of California. The records show that for more than 10 years past there has been only one national-bank failure in California.

And in the past 24 years there have only been three national-bank failures in California, to wit:

(1) The Orange Growers' National Bank of Riverside, Calif., which failed in March, 1904, and paid its depositors 100 cents on the dollar on the principal of their deposits;

(2) The Oakland National Bank, which failed in April, 1909, and paid its depositors 100 cents on the dollar on principal, together with interest on deposits (except certain cases where interest was waived); and

(3) The Santa Rosa National Bank, of Santa Rosa, Calif., which failed in September last and which is still being liquidated. The cashier of this latter bank has already been sentenced to the penitentiary for deception and embezzlement.

(As to the circumstances under which the national-bank examiner found it necessary to require the closing of the Santa Rosa National Bank, at the time the Santa Rosa Savings Bank, under the same management was closed, I invite your attention to the inclosed extracts from the report of the national-bank examiners relative to the methods by which the officers of that bank managed to hide their crookedness and conceal the true condition of the bank from examiners, both State and National.)

The Santa Rosa National Bank, which failed in California in September, 1918, was the only national bank in the entire United States to fail in the year 1918.

It is clear that, despite the resolutions passed by the California Legislature declaring that the failures among national banks "have been the cause of great suffering among innocent depositors and stockholders," the records show that of the three national banks which have failed in California in the past 24 years, two of them paid their depositors in full and the third and last one, which failed in September last, is still in process of liquidation.

Now let us look at the showing of the banks under State supervision, as to which these resolutions are silent. As compared with the failure of only one national bank in California for more than 10 years past, or two in more than 15 years (one of which paid depositors in full), I direct your attention to the official figures, which show in California since January 1, 1908, 10 failures of banking institutions other than national, including a savings bank which failed in Santa Rosa at the time that the only national bank which has failed in California in over 10 years closed its doors.

The records further show that since the inauguration of the national banking system in 1863 there have been at least four times as many failures of banks other than national as there have been of national banks in California.

(About 40 per cent of the banking institutions in California at this time are national banks, the remainder State banks, trust companies, and private banks.)

It is not my purpose, in making these comparisons, to be understood as criticizing the methods or work of the banking department of California. As a matter of fact the work of that department is entitled to high commendation, for, although the proportion of failures of State banks in California has been high as compared with the failures of national banks, California's record, compared with various other States, is exceedingly favorable and reflects credit upon the supervising authorities. Furthermore, it is a pleasure to bear testimony to the cooperation and cordial relations existing between the State banking authorities of California and the Bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency.

May I venture to add that the very day I received your letter of 12th instant a former Member of Congress from the West, a Republican, called at this office to say that he had originally been opposed to me and had been critical of my methods and policies, but that he now desired to express strongly and unequivocally his commendation of the work of this office and of the results which are being obtained under its present administration. He commented upon the greatly reduced mortality among national banks and the increased safety of depositors, and also upon the improved status which national-bank shares now have from the standpoint of collateral or as investment, and mentioned that the stock of one national bank in the West in which he was largely interested had doubled in value in the past few years. He generously declared that although he did not agree with me politically he thought it only just to avow his unqualified approval and commendation of the administration of the comptroller's office.

In conclusion, I think it may interest you to know, in connection with the growth and development of the national banking system, that from November 1, 1914, to June 1, 1919, this office has received 2,011 applications for new national-bank charters (including 293 State banks nationalizing), for extensions of charters, and for permission to increase the capital of existing banks, while the total number of voluntary liquidations (exclusive of consolidations with other national banks) and applications for reduction of capital have aggregated only 373 for the same period.

Faithfully, yours,

JNO. SKELTON WILLIAMS,
Comptroller.

Hon. EDMUND PLATT,
Chairman Banking and Currency Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

EXTRACT FROM THE REPORTS OF NATIONAL BANK EXAMINERS TO THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY RELATIVE TO THE FAILURE, IN SEPTEMBER, 1918, OF THE SANTA ROSA NATIONAL BANK, SANTA ROSA, CALIF.

"The successful concealment during a long period of the true condition of this bank can be directly ascribed to the fact that most of the officers and employees had knowledge, more or less complete, of the irregularities and, in their respective spheres, aided in the concealment. They were participants in a systematic and effective conspiracy of remarkable completeness. * * *

"This bank was strictly a family bank, with the complement of dummy directors which usually are a part of the equipment of such banks. There appears never to have been, at least not within recent years, a director of independent strength on the board. * * * The cashier, Frank A. Brush, and other members of the Brush family not only owned most of the stock but constituted a majority of the directors and absolutely dominated the management under the immediate direction of the cashier. * * *

"The method of covering the various defalcations is set forth in great detail by the examiner in his report. The concealment was had by removing sheets from the commercial individual ledgers and cards from the savings and individual ledgers, the aggregate balances of which equaled the amount of the difference which it was desired to conceal. Between examinations all individual ledger sheets were kept in their proper places in the ledgers. When it was learned that an examiner had arrived, the individual ledger sheets of the desired aggregate were hurriedly removed and locked in a safe-deposit box, where they remained during the examination. Trial balances run by the examiners, therefore, would agree with the general ledger controlling accounts.

"To take care of checks deposited while the ledger sheets were out four fictitious accounts were opened in which were deposited the aggregate of the checks received for credit in the missing accounts."

Summarizing the situation with reference to the failure of the Santa Rosa National Bank, it can be said that the failure was caused by the systematic and cleverly concealed series of defalcations over a period of years, which even an audit of the bank would probably have failed to disclose if the officers and clerks in the bank had had the opportunity in advance of removing the individual ledger sheets, as the total balances shown by the individual ledgers agree with the total shown by the general ledger, which is the controlling account of the bank. Unless, therefore, each individual account were audited and the deposit slips and checks carefully checked, there would be nothing to disclose a shortage in the deposit account. Even the matter of calling in the pass books of the various depositors would have failed to disclose the shortage, as the auditor would necessarily have called for only such pass books of individuals as were shown by the individual ledgers to have had accounts with the bank.

With reference to the forgeries, where these forgeries were placed with correspondent bank, as was the practice in this bank, and where these notes were paid at maturity out of the bank's funds, there is no method by which the examiner could detect such forgeries.

In connection with this failure it should be borne in mind that the Union Savings Bank, a State institution, subject to State examination, occupied the same office and had the same officers as the Santa Rosa National Bank. This institution was closed by the State authorities the same time that the national bank was closed. The method of concealment was identical in both cases, according to Examiner Thompson's report.

As can be seen from the above, it was almost impossible for either the State or National examiner to discover the defalcations unless there should have been a break in the ranks of the conspirators.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM B. McKINLEY,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, July 8, 1919.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a description by Representative YATES of his trip over the battle field in France. The description is as follows:

CONGRESSMAN YATES, PRINCIPAL SPEAKER AT INDEPENDENCE DAY CELEBRATION, GIVES GRAPHIC DESCRIPTION OF HIS BATTLE FIELD TRAVELS.

A welcome-home celebration for returned service men was given at Belleville yesterday as a fitting observance of Independence Day. The day's program, which began with a parade through the main streets at 1.30 o'clock, closed with a pageant, "Our Boys," at the fair grounds last night.

The parade was led by a band, and, in addition to hundreds of the former soldiers, delegations from labor and fraternal organizations, the riding club, and Camp Fire Girls marched.

The afternoon's program was featured by athletic contests, a band concert, and a dance. Congressman RICHARD YATES, former governor of Illinois, delivered the principal address. He described in detail his recent visit to the war zones in Europe.

Scenes of the war, including the American attack at Chateau-Thierry, were depicted in the pageant, which was given under the direction of Prof. Ebsen. The township high-school girls took a prominent part in the pageant, their "peace dance" being one of the features of the program.

CONGRESSMAN YATES'S SPEECH.

Congressman YATES spoke as follows:

"The last time I was in Belleville I told you I hoped and would try to get to France—in the Army if possible, in some other capacity if that proved impossible.

"Upon my return I have the honor to report that I did get to France. I did not get into the Army, but I did get into Congress.

"So I saw France, not as a soldier but as a Congressman.

"During 32 unforgettable days, April 3 to May 5, I listened every day and almost every hour to soldiers and sailors telling of their experiences.

"During 16 days I traveled 1,600 miles in a United States Army automobile, visiting parts of France, Belgium, Luxemburg, and Germany.

"I saw great seas and great cities and great scenes of sacrifice; saw where Americans looked into the jaws of death, into the mouth of hell, into the face of God.

"I talked with a man who had given a hand, to be cut off forever from his precious body, leaving a smooth, round stump, forlorn and all but useless. I talked to many such men.

"I talked to a boy not old enough to vote who had given a leg, to be cut off forever from his precious body, leaving a smooth, round stump, almost useless. You, perhaps, have talked with such a boy. I talked with many.

"I talked with a boy who survived five bullets in one leg and another in his left thigh. He will not walk through life hereafter; his walk will only be a contorted shuffle, an ugly hobble—the walk of this tall, bright, handsome boy.

"I talked with a boy whose eyes have been put out—a reading, thinking, enterprising, forward-looking, investigating lad—doomed to the appalling captivity of blindness. These hands and feet, these eyes and faces, annihilated, put out of existence. Will they ever come back? No; they will never, never come back. Ten years from now, 20 years from now, 40, 50, 60 years, this living daily sacrifice will go on.

"And I saw such spots as Belleau Wood, where in a little forest, 3,000 feet from north to south, and 1,500 from east to west, 6,000 American boys laid down their priceless lives; a little forest, filled with tangled vines and fallen and jagged rocks, and little hidden fissures and tangled vines and fallen trees and tumbled, jumbled saplings, and deep trenches and concrete peepholes and German dugouts and interlaced branches, so that when we had followed the artillery captain, who was our escort, and who himself had fought in that fight—when we had followed him in and out and up and down and over and under, I for one was utterly exhausted without any pack and without any burden of ammunition.

"I saw the ruined towns, Chateau-Thierry, Vaux, Soissons, Rheims, Montfaucon, Grand Pre, San Mihiel, and so on, and so on, some of them, like Vaux, utterly destroyed by our own artillery fire.

WAS AT VERDUN.

"I saw the citadel of Verdun. I saw the 'sacred road' from Bar-le-duc to Verdun, well named 'the sacred road,' because, with its surface like a floor and its superb 100-foot width, it accommodated four trains, two moving to Verdun and two coming back, four trains of motor trucks, lorries, or camions going into Verdun loaded and coming back unloaded, thereby feeding the men and feeding the guns—a supply that never failed for four long, awful years—four trains of trucks, each train 20 miles long.

"I talked with Belgians in Belgium, including a Belgian staff officers of the King; talked with Luxemburgers in Luxemburg, Diekirch, Bissen, Yungeligen, and Ettelbruck.

"I talked with a few Germans in Germany and a few German prisoners. I saw Cologne, Neuwied, and Bonn, and Ansenach and Coblenz—all their factories clattering, all their furnaces burning, all their wheels turning, all their activities apparently booming but a conquered land.

"Opposite Coblenz I went up and up and up, along the 1,000-year-old royal road, and stood away at the top of the famous Eh-ren-breit-stein fortress, supposed to be impregnable, but now surrendered, and stood under the biggest Star-Spangled Banner in the world, with an American 6-inch gun on one side of me and an American 6-inch gun on the other side, and looked westward and downward into and upon the city of Coblenz, proud and populous and beautiful, occupied by American troops.

"At Cumel, at Romagne, and at every turn I saw the white crosses and the low mounds, and our escort would say: 'Here are the boys,' or 'Some of the boys are here.' They lie near where they fell. Beautiful cemeteries like that one at Romagne (ultimately to contain 30,000 bodies) are to receive them all, as they one after the other are removed from the temporary graveyards to the big, beautiful places provided by and under our Government for their final resting place.

"If a boy of mine were buried there I would, with his mother's permission, leave his precious, blessed, glorious body there—there where his blood had made a spot in France forever America.

"On Fame's eternal camping grounds
Their silent tents are spread,
And Glory guards with solemn round
The bivouac of the dead.

SPOTS THAT ARE AMERICAN.

"Two hundred and fifty thousand Americans have shed their blood—114,000 have died. Two hundred and fifty thousand spots in far-off France, once beautiful spots, have been made red by American blood, and every one of those spots is, accordingly, forever American, yea, forever America.

"The night before he was killed in action a young Englishman, Rupert Brooke, wrote his mother:

"And if I die, let
This alone be said:
That there is one
Little corner of France
That is forever England.

"Just so, that warm crimson blood, that hot-gushing blood, of America, yea, of Illinois, has made every foot of soil which it baptized American, and in rebaptizing it has made it forever America.

"How sleep the brave, who sink to rest,
By all their country's wishes blest!
When spring, with dewy fingers cold,
Returns to deck their hallowed mold,
She these shall dress a sweeter sod
Than fancy's feet have ever trod.

By fairy hands their knell is rung;
By forms unseen their dirge is sung;
There honor comes, a pilgrim gray,
To bless the turf that wraps their clay;
And freedom shall awhile repair
To dwell, a weeping hermit, there.

"Oh, they are not alone; would you bring them here, where only we, you and I, would appear, while over there, always, and forever more, honor and freedom look upon them and linger near?

"I caught one glimpse of triumph and glory—the pomp and pageantry of war.

SAW ILLINOISANS HONORED.

"It was on a broad, green field at Ettelbruck, in the Duchy of Luxembourg. It was the inspection and decoration of the Thirty-third Division of the United States Army, and its passing in review before John J. Pershing, general of the Army; Newton D. Baker, American Secretary of War; and Leopold, Crown Prince of Belgium. There were present also Maj. Gens. Bell and Harbord and Brig. Gens. Dawes, King, Todd, and Wolff, and Bishop Brent, chief of the chaplains, as well as Congressmen McKINLEY and MADDEN, of Illinois. I wished the governor of Illinois could have been present, for 20,000 Illinois boys passed in review that afternoon.

"Two brigades of Infantry and one brigade of Artillery and one regiment of Engineers swung by with a long, swinging stride, plus headquarters troops and supply trains and ammunition trains and Hospital Corps and Signal Corps and all the detachments that make up a division.

"I can see them yet. There they come, a swelling sea, a moving forest, a waving grain field, a whole mile-long section of the corn of Illinois, the aureate corn, the tasseled, castled, royal corn of Illinois, 'within whose yellow heart there is of health and wealth for all nations.' All these I have seen, but never the like of this swelling flood of Illinois. And centennial processions and world's fair dedications and inaugural parades have I seen, but never such a swelling flood as this. On they come, marching north; on and by. The First Regiment goes by, a solid square, 500 feet from north to south, 500 feet from east to west, a solid square covering as much ground as is included within the four legs or bases of the great Eiffel Tower; and this regiment is commanded by a colonel whom I myself, years ago, commissioned, first as captain, then major, then lieutenant colonel. Rest assured, I felt keenly thrilled as I saw that regiment's colors, Illinois flags, salute the renowned yet modest general of all our armies and saw the prince of Belgium uncover before those Illinois standards.

"Regiment after regiment they go by, each a solid square. Troop after troop, auxiliary corps after corps, unit after unit.

"The sun is shining; all the air is full of brightness. The bayonets—not the old, dulled, bronzed bayonets I used to carry when I was a private, but bright, polished, knifelike, pointed blades—glitter all down the long field. The battle helmets—for hats and caps are not visible—ripple like the scales of a dragon of old mythology. The 14 regimental flags and 14 other flags stream out in the stiff breeze and an airship storms o'erhead!

"And now the band—7 bands of 30 musicians consolidated into 1 band of 210 musicians—plays our Illinois marching song:

"Not without thy wondrous story,
Illinois, Illinois,
Can be writ the Nation's glory,
Illinois, Illinois,
On the record of thy years,
Abraham Lincoln's name appears,
Grant and Logan—and our tears—
Illinois, Illinois.

"I give you my word, when that magnificent band broke into that song of glory I nearly went wild—I became almost beside myself—as I realized it was Illinois in the conquered enemy's conquered territory—Illinois at war, Illinois triumphant, Illinois the glorious!"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS T. McFADDEN,

OF PENNSYLVANIA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 30, 1919.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States has seen fit to again send the nomination of John Skelton Williams to the United States Senate to be confirmed for another five-year term as Comptroller of the Currency. By this action he acknowledges and removes the doubt of the legality of the action of the Secretary of the Treasury when he attempted to assume the prerogatives and appointive powers of the President by keeping John Skelton Williams in the office of Comptroller of the Currency when his term expired on February 2, 1919. John Skelton Williams has been acting since that time under this subterfuge performing the duties of the Comptroller of the Currency, and during all this time and is now illegally in office, and favorable action by the Senate is now the only way he can legally hold this office.

It would seem to me that I should at this time place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this very interesting and I hope illuminating correspondence which I have had with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board, together with certain comment pertinent to this situation, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY,
Washington, March 14, 1919.

HON. CARTER GLASS,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have observed in the press, under date of March 7, 1919, your statement that you have continued John Skelton Williams in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and I am taking the liberty of making inquiry as to the authority upon which this appointment was made and by what right of law Mr. Williams continues to exercise the duties and receive the emoluments of this office.

While it is true that the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to appoint a Deputy Comptroller of the Currency, the power to appoint the comptroller himself is lodged solely in the President of the United States, "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." There is no ambiguity in the law as to the method of making appointments to this office, as will be seen by a reference to Article II, section 2, clause 3, of the Constitution, which provides:

"The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session."

And by reference to sections 325 and 327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as follows:

"SEC. 325. The Comptroller of the Currency shall be appointed by the President, on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold his office for the term of five years unless sooner removed by the President, upon reasons to be communicated by him to the Senate, and he shall be entitled to a salary of $5,000 a year."

"SEC. 327. There shall be in the Bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency a Deputy Comptroller of the Currency, to be appointed by the Secretary, who shall be entitled to a salary of $2,500 a year, and who shall possess the power and perform the duties attached by law to the office of comptroller during a vacancy in the office or during the absence or inability of the comptroller. The deputy comptroller shall also take the oath of office prescribed by the Constitution and laws of the United States and shall give a like bond in the penalty of $50,000."

From a reference to the above sections it will be seen that Mr. Williams's former appointment was for a definite term of five years and that it terminated at the expiration of five years from the date of his appointment and confirmation, or on the 2d day of February, 1919, and, unlike those instances wherein the holder of an office is continued "until his successor is duly elected (or appointed) and qualified," the right to exercise and to hold the office of the Comptroller of the Currency expired absolutely at a perior five years after the date of his appointment and confirmation unless sooner terminated for cause by the President. It will thus be seen that the term of this office can not be extended by tortuous and sinuous reasoning or by the meanderings of a self-seeker.

Prior to the expiration of Mr. Williams's term of office as Comptroller of the Currency the President of the United States, performing the duty imposed upon him by law, presented to the Senate of the United States the name of Mr. Williams as his appointee for this position, and hearings were had before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency on a resolution which had for its purpose the abolition of the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and upon which hearings the qualifications and temperament of Mr. Williams to properly perform the duties of this office and the matter of certain charges made against him in his past performance of the duties of the office were considered. These matters, having received much notoriety and public attention, an agreement was made by which Mr. Williams's name was not to be considered at the last executive session of the United States Senate, and it was because of this agreement and not the interjection of the filibuster, as the public has been led to believe, that the confirmation failed.

It was within the authority of the President of the United States to make a recess appointment, but this he has not seen fit to do, and, evidently, upon good and sufficient reasons. The question naturally arises why the Secretary of the Treasury assumed the authority to make such appointment, in view of the fact that the United States Senate, for reasons undisclosed, refused to confirm, and the President, in view of the failure of the Senate to confirm and the widespread publicity attendant, and additional reasons, looking to the unfitness of this man for public office, which were undoubtedly well known to him and supposedly known to you, refused to make a recess appointment, as he had the undoubted right to do.

The further question naturally arises as to whether your conduct in making this appointment was actuated by an understanding and agreement with the President or with Mr. Williams or whether you arbitrarily are making the appointment in direct opposition to the President's wishes and in accordance with Mr. Williams's desires, as implied from the refusal of the President to make the recess appointment. Of course, the conclusion irresistibly follows that such course of conduct is violative of express law.

Equally vital, important, and pertinent is the further inquiry as to the right of Mr. Williams to continue to sit as a member of the Federal Reserve Board. The Federal reserve act, creating this board, named the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency as ex officio members. Mr. Williams, therefore, sat during his term of office as comptroller on the Federal Reserve Board and, as I understand, continues to sit on such board. His term as Comptroller of the Currency having expired on February 2, 1919, and he being no longer the person designated by the Federal reserve act to sit as a member of the Federal Reserve Board, his right to exercise such duties, together with the right to receive $7,000 per year in addition to the $5,000 per year he receives as Comptroller of the Currency, by that fact ceased and determined. There is a vacancy in the Federal Reserve Board, which can only be filled by the appointment and legal confirmation of a Comptroller of the Currency. The deputy comptroller is not authorized to act in this capacity under the law.

On the eve of the flotation of the Victory loan, at the time of the borrowing by the Government of immense sums of money to meet immediate governmental necessities and for future requirements, the interdependence of the Treasury Department of the United States and the bankers of the country—National, State, and private—make it absolutely necessary and imperative that there should be a complete and whole-hearted accord and joinder of interest in the effort to discharge present duties and perform those to be thrust upon us in the future, occasioned by the trying period of world-wide disaster and the subsequent period of reconstruction. A continuation in office of men of the type of Mr. Williams, whose whole course of official conduct has been antagonistic to those who are and have been, from patriotic motives and impulses, and at great pecuniary loss and personal sacrifice, serving the Government to the best of their ability and capacity, can not secure and retain the basic confidence and whole-hearted support of these men, necessary as it is, and which, under proper conditions, would be the groundwork of a service at this time wholly desirable and, indeed, indispensable. The cooperation of the banking interests of the country with the Treasury at this time is a national necessity.

The objection to Mr. Williams and his further official connection with the Treasury Department is, of course, accentuated by the irregular method of his appointment, and the apparent disposition to keep him in office in utter disregard of his implied repudiation both by the Senate of the United States and the President himself.

Realizing the importance to the people of this inquiry, and a full and complete answer thereto, I respectfully ask for a prompt reply.

Very truly, yours,

L. T. MCFADDEN.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, March 15, 1919.

Hon. L. T. MCFADDEN,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am returning your letter of March 14, as I do not care to retain it for my files. Furthermore, I take leave to put you on notice that if you desire information concerning any official action of the Secretary of the Treasury while I am the incumbent of the office, you may get it promptly and frankly by addressing to me a halfway decent inquiry, but you are given distinctly to understand that I recognize no obligation to respond to an offensively impertinent and deliberately mendacious communication such as I am now sending back to you.

Very truly, yours,

CARTER GLASS.

MARCH 17, 1919.

Hon. CARTER GLASS,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, and am sorry it, or any part of it, caused you offense; certainly no offense to you officially or personally was intended. For you to characterize my letter of the 14th instant as "deliberately mendacious" might also be defined as offensive, but I pass that over for the present because I do not wish to obscure the real, vital point at issue, to wit:

By what authority has the Secretary of the Treasury given John Skelton Williams a recess appointment as Comptroller of the Currency following the failure of the President, who alone has such power under the Constitution and laws, as I have interpreted them, to make such appointment?

I have raised this question in my capacity as a Member of the House of Representatives, a coordinate branch of the Federal Government, and as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, whose functions, as you know, having served with distinction as its chairman, are not irrelevant to matters affecting the Treasury Department, including the comptroller's office. I did not intend to inject personalities into this question and do not intend to do so now; neither do I purpose being diverted from my legitimate and proper quest for information respecting an important public office by taking affront at the tone of your communication. Let us take for granted that you believed you had ground for offense, and then permit me to proceed to the salient features of the case.

In my letter of the 14th instant I asked you to advise me by what authority John Skelton Williams is continuing to act as Comptroller of the Currency, and I again set forth the reasons for making this inquiry:

The term of John Skelton Williams expired on February 2, 1919. The latter part of January last the President sent his nomination for a second term of five years to the Senate for confirmation. The Senate adjourned on March 4 without confirming this nomination and therefore the nomination lapsed. Since then the President has made no recess appointment as it had been announced, apparently on authority, he would do. According to my construction of the Constitution and laws, reached dispassionately and after deliberate and careful study, the office of the Comptroller of the Currency became vacant on the day the Senate adjourned; that is, on March 4, and one of the deputies should have become acting comptroller forthwith pending the appointment of a new comptroller.

While it is true the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to appoint a deputy comptroller of the currency, the power to appoint the comptroller himself is lodged solely in the President of the United States," by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." There is no ambiguity in the law as to the method of making appointments to this office, as will be seen by reference to Article II, section 2, clause 3, of the Constitution, which provides:

"The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session."

And by reference to sections 325 and 327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as follows:

"SEC. 325. The Comptroller of the Currency shall be appointed by the President, on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold his office for the term of five years unless sooner removed by the President, upon reasons to be communicated by him to the Senate, and he shall be entitled to a salary of $5,000 a year."

"SEC. 327. There will be in the bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency a Deputy Comptroller of the Currency, to be appointed by the Secretary, who shall be entitled to a salary of $2,500 a year, and who shall possess the power and perform the duties attached by law to the office of comptroller during a vacancy in the office or during the absence or inability of the comptroller. The deputy comptroller shall also take the oath of office prescribed by the Constitution and laws of the United States, and shall give a like bond in the penalty of $50,000."

From a reference to the above sections, it will be seen that Mr. Williams's former appointment was for a definite term of five years, and that it terminated at the expiration of five years from the date of his appointment and confirmation, or on the 2d day of February, 1919, and, unlike those instances wherein the holder of an office is continued "until his successor is duly elected (or appointed) and qualified," the right to exercise and to hold the office of the Comptroller of the Currency expired absolutely at a period of five years after the date of his appointment and confirmation unless sooner terminated for cause by the President.

Prior to the expiration of Mr. Williams's term of office as Comptroller of the Currency, the President of the United States, performing the duty imposed upon him by law, presented to the Senate of the United States the name of Mr. Williams as his appointee for this position, and hearings were had before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, and upon which hearings the qualifications and temperament of Mr. Williams to properly perform the duties of this office and the matter of certain charges made against him in his past performance of the duties of the office were considered. These matters having received much notoriety and public attention, an agreement was made by which Mr. Williams's name was not to be considered at the last executive session of the United States Senate, and it was because of this agreement, and not the interjection of the filibuster, that the confirmation failed.

It was within the authority of the President of the United States to make a recess appointment, but this he has not seen fit to do. The question naturally arises how the Secretary of the Treasury could assume the authority to make such an appointment.

Equally vital, important, and pertinent is the further inquiry as to the right of Mr. Williams to continue to sit as a member of the Federal Reserve Board. The Federal reserve act, creating this board, named the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency as ex officio members. Mr. Williams, therefore, sat during his term of office as Comptroller on the Federal Reserve Board, and, as I understand, continues to sit on such board. His term as Comptroller of the Currency having expired on February 2, 1919, and he being no longer the person designated by the Federal reserve act to sit as a member of the Federal Reserve Board, his right to exercise such duties, together with the right to receive $7,000 per year, in addition to the $5,000 per year he receives as Comptroller of the Currency, by that fact ceased and determined. There is a vacancy in the Federal Reserve Board which can only be filled by appointment and legal confirmation of a Comptroller of the Currency. The Deputy Comptroller is not authorized to act in this capacity under the law.

I made public my letter of the 14th instant, because I realized the widespread interest in this case, and I deem it only fair to give your reply, inadequate as it is, the same publicity, even though in so doing I may run the risk of incurring your displeasure—a thing I assure you I would deplore. Later we can take up the question whether my letter (of the 14th) was "deliberately mendacious," inasmuch as that allegation, per se, is, in my judgment, of secondary consequence to the main issue, namely, by what legal right is John Skelton Williams occupying the office of the Comptroller of the Currency?

Realizing the importance to the people of this inquiry, and a full and complete answer thereto, I respectfully ask for a prompt reply.

Very truly, yours,

L. T. MCFADDEN.

MARCH 18, 1919.

Hon. WILLIAM P. G. HARDING,
Governor Federal Reserve Board, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Under date of the 14th instant I addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, copy of which is herewith inclosed. I also inclose a copy of his reply, under date of March 15, and also copy of my letter to him under date of March 17, all of which question the legality of the continuance in office of John Skelton Williams as Comptroller of the Currency and as a member ex officio of the Federal Reserve Board.

I am sending you this letter and this correspondence so that, as governor of the Federal Reserve Board, you may be formally apprised of these concrete contentions: That John Skelton Williams is not legally a member of the Federal Reserve Board by reason of the fact that he is no longer Comptroller of the Currency, and that by virtue of this fact there is now a vacancy on the Federal Reserve Board.

Apropos of this situation, as I view it I consider it my duty to respectfully call your attention to the fact that your board is daily considering matters of vital moment to financing governmental requirements, no small part of which is that made necessary by the inability of Congress, in the closing days of the last session, to provide finances for the railroads, and it is essential to the public welfare that the validity of the board's acts should be beyond question.

In this connection I have been informed that several members of your board are or have been absent from the city of Washington. If the said John Skelton Williams's presence has been necessary to make a quorum or his vote was necessary to decide any of these important questions, this fact would raise a doubt as to the validity of such acts of the board or other matters that may come before the board for consideration and final determination.

For example, a conference of the board with the governors of the Federal reserve banks is scheduled to take place in Washington on the 20th instant, at which decisions of great consequence may be reached, and those might lawfully be disregarded by reason of the participation of Mr. Williams.

Realizing the grave importance from the public standpoint of this situation, I beg you to advise me whether or not John Skelton Williams has been acting as a member of the Federal Reserve Board since March 5; whether or not he has attended any meeting or meetings of the board, and whether or not his presence was required to make a quorum; and whether or not his vote was necessary to decide any question which came before the board for decision; and if so, by what authority of law he was permitted to sit as a member of the board since March 5.

Awaiting your reply with deep interest, I beg to remain,

Respectfully, yours,

L. T. MCFADDEN.

WASHINGTON, March 18, 1919.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of March 17 concerning the designation by me of Mr. John Skelton Williams to administer the office of Comptroller of the Currency pending the appointment by the President and confirmation by the Senate of his successor, and am pleased to observe the omission from your second letter of the surprisingly offensive implications and accusations which appeared in the letter of March 14, which I felt obliged to return to you.

I note now that you desire to know "by what authority the Secretary of the Treasury has given John Skelton Williams a recess appointment as Comptroller of the Currency following the failure of the President to make such appointment." The simple facts are that, the term of the Comptroller of the Currency having expired and a contest over his confirmation for a second term having developed, the Secretary of the Treasury, in order that the activities of the office might not be suspended, designated Mr. Williams "to continue to administer the office of the Comptroller of the Currency at the salary provided by law until the Senate shall have acted upon your renomination by the President or until your successor shall have been appointed and confirmed."

The action of the Secretary was based on an act of Congress passed March 2, 1895, which says:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to all officers under the Treasury Department whose terms of office have expired or shall expire before the appointment and qualification of their successors and who have been performing or shall perform the duties of their respective offices after the date of such expiration the salary, compensation, fees, or emoluments authorized or provided by law in each case for the respective incumbents of the offices."

An interpretation of this statute is contained in an opinion of Attorney General William Henry Moody, dated June 27, 1906, in which it was held that:

"Congress has expressly provided in the acts of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 808, 844), for the continuance in office of all officers under the Treasury Department after the date of the expiration of their terms of office and before the appointment and qualification of their successors, and also for the waiving of the requirement of a new bond during that period in the discretion of the officers whose duty it is to take and approve such bonds."

Furthermore, to be sure that I had full legal sanction of my action, I submitted the matter to Judge W. W. Warwick, Comptroller of the Treasury, who advised me that my designation of Mr. Williams to administer the office of the Comptroller of the Currency "is in accord with law and I am of the opinion that you may permit him to continue to exercise the duties of the office, and that he will be entitled to receive the salary thereof, until the President otherwise directs."

The right of Mr. Williams to act as an ex officio member of the Federal Reserve Board is sustained in an opinion rendered by M. C. Elliott, general counsel of the board, on February 3, 1919, who, after quoting the statutes and the opinion of Attorney General Moody, says:

"Under this opinion of the Attorney General the comptroller may continue in office after the expiration of his term and until his successor is appointed. So long as he continues in office as comptroller and receives compensation as such from the Treasury Department he remains ex officio a member of the Federal Reserve Board and, in the opinion of this office, is clearly entitled to receive that part of his salary which is paid by the board."

Therefore, with these legal opinions as a basis for action, the Secretary of the Treasury feels thoroughly well satisfied that he has exercised an unquestionable legal authority in designating Mr. Williams to continue in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency until after the appointment and qualification of his successor.

Yours, very truly,

CARTER GLASS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 26, 1919.

Hon. CARTER GLASS,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of the 18th, replying to mine of the 17th instant, on the subject of the designation by you of John Skelton Williams "to administer the office of Comptroller of the Currency pending the appointment by the President and confirmation by the Senate of his successor."

The above-quoted phrase from your letter contains clear recognition of the undoubted fact that there is existing now a vacancy in the office of the comptroller, and you very appropriately state that your designation of Mr. Williams was for him "to administer the office" pending appointment and confirmation of his successor. I have given careful consideration to the statutory provisions set forth in your letter, and to your quotation from the opinion of Attorney General Moody, dated June 27, 1906, construing those provisions. I was quite familiar with the statutes referred to and Attorney General Moody's opinion before I addressed you on the subject. I was also familiar with the provisions of section 327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to which you do not refer, and which expressly provide who shall "administer the office of Comptroller of the Currency" during a vacancy therein.

The Congress of the United States by section 327 of the Revised Statutes expressly enacted that there should be a Deputy Comptroller of the Currency "who shall possess the power and perform the duties attached by law to the office of the comptroller during a vacancy in the office." There are as officers of the Treasury Department at this time two such deputy comptrollers. There is, as you admit, a vacancy in the office of the comptroller, occasioned by the fact that the Senate of the United States, in the exercise of its constitutional prerogative, did not see fit to confirm the reappointment to that office of John Skelton Williams.

We are all amenable to the law as enacted by the Congress. The humblest citizen must observe it, and I am sure the Secretary of the Treasury, when its provisions are called to his attention, will obey it. Congress has expressly provided who shall possess the power and perform the duties attached to the office of the comptroller, or, to use your own phraseology, who shall "administer the office of Comptroller of the Currency" during a vacancy therein and pending appointment by the President and confirmation by the Senate. Prior to the appointment of John Skelton Williams in 1914 there existed for a considerable period of time a vacancy in the office of the comptroller, and the functions and duties of that office were performed, under the provisions of section 327 of the Revised Statutes, by Deputy Comptroller Kane, who is still in office as a deputy comptroller and under the law is not only eligible for but is legally required, unless the other deputy comptroller is especially designated, to fill the existing vacancy in the office of the comptroller until such time as there is nominated by the President a person the Senate of the United States finds fit for confirmation.

I observe that the reason given by you in your letter of the 18th instant for designating Mr. Williams to continue to administer the office of comptroller is "in order that the activities of the office might not be suspended." But the Congress of the United States has provided against the possibility of the activities of the office of comptroller being suspended by expressly providing that these activities shall be carried on by the deputy comptroller during a vacancy in the office of comptroller. It is not within the power of an executive officer to provide that these "activities" may continue in a manner different from that expressly directed by the law of the land.

The opinion of Attorney General Moody, referred to by you, related to the position of Assistant Treasurer of the United States at San Francisco and was undoubtedly correct as applied to that case. Section 303 of the Revised Statutes provides that "there shall be in the Department of the Treasury an Assistant Treasurer of the United States, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." The act of March 2, 1895, authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to all officers under the Treasury Department whose terms of office have expired the salary attached to such office when such officers perform the duties of their offices until the appointment and qualification of their successors. But the obvious difference between section 303, providing for the appointment of an Assistant Treasurer, and sections 325 and 327 of the Revised Statutes, providing for the appointment of a comptroller and deputy comptroller, is that, as above stated, section 327 expressly provides that "during a vacancy" in the office of comptroller the deputy comptroller shall possess the power and perform the duties attached by law to that office.

I respectfully but emphatically submit that there is no power in the Secretary of the Treasury to utterly ignore the law of Congress, as expressed in section 327 of the Revised Statutes; that there is no precedent in the history of the Comptroller's office for ignoring the expressed will of Congress as contained in that section; that as, concededly, there exists a vacancy in the office of Comptroller, the law requires that the power of that office should be reposed in and the duties attached to it should be performed by the Deputy Comptroller and no one else.

As your letter of the 18th makes no reference to section 327 of the Revised Statutes, as that section was not involved in the case in which Attorney General Moody rendered an opinion on in 1906, and as that section does not appear in the instant case to have been given any consideration, I must believe that its provisions have been inadvertently overlooked.

Now that it is called to your attention, may I not ask you that its provisions be observed and enforced, and that you will so advise me?

Awaiting your reply, I am,

Yours, very respectfully,

L. T. MCFADDEN.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, March 26, 1919.

Hon. L. T. MCFADDEN,
Canton, Pa.

DEAR SIR: Responding to yours of March 26th, asking if I will not be guided by your interpretation of the statutes concerning the duties of the Secretary of the Treasury rather than the construction of the law officers of the department, based upon the opinion of a former Attorney General of the United States, I venture to say, with the greatest deference, that I am going to take the hazard of accepting the judgment of the latter. It may further interest you to be told that my determination in this respect is somewhat fortified by a written opinion of Attorney General Palmer, who entirely agrees with former Attorney General Moody and with the law officers of this department in their interpretation of the statutes and of the opinion of Mr. Moody as applied to them.

Very truly, yours,

CARTER GLASS.

Mr. Speaker, the question naturally arises at this time if at the present session of the Senate Mr. Williams should fail of confirmation would he still continue in office under the authority which the Secretary of the Treasury assumed, or would the President then appoint his successor, and if Mr. Williams's successor were appointed, would he be permitted to assume office before he was confirmed the same as Mr. Williams is now doing, or would he have to await action of the Senate on his confirmation before he was legally installed in office?

I am glad the President, in the interest of lawful procedure, has seen fit to ignore the action of the Secretary of the Treasury in attempting to appoint without authority of law a Comptroller of the Currency, which authority by the statutes is vested entirely in the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. The following interview and extracts speak for themselves:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 28, 1919.

[Interview with Hon. LOUIS T. MCFADDEN, of Pennsylvania, to be released Saturday morning, Mar. 29, 1919.]

When Representative MCFADDEN, of Pennsylvania, learned to-day that Attorney General Palmer had given it as his opinion, responding to a request from the Secretary of the Treasury, that the Secretary possessed the power to assign John Skelton Williams to the post of Comptroller of the Currency after the latter's failure to get a recess appointment by the President, he issued a statement questioning the soundness of the Attorney General's position as he previously had done with the right of Secretary Glass to retain Mr. Williams in office as Comptroller of the Currency. He declared his willingness and desire to test the correctness of the opinion of the Attorney General and the validity of the action of the Secretary of the Treasury in the United States court, a method of settling this issue which has been suggested before. Mr. MCFADDEN will also reintroduce his resolution to investigate the doings in public office during the incumbency of Mr. Williams just as soon as the President calls an extra session of Congress.

Mr. MCFADDEN made the following statement apropos of the Attorney General's opinion as announced by Secretary of the Treasury Glass yesterday:

"Intending no disparagement of the legal knowledge of the new Attorney General and imputing to him no other motive than a wholesome ambition to serve the Government to the best of his ability, I contend, and in this contention I am supported by the judgment of other able lawyers, that no statutory grounds exist for the retention of John Skelton Williams in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, in view of the refusal of President Wilson to give him a recess appointment, as he saw fit to do in Mr. Palmer's case, in order that there could be no question of the latter's legal right to enter upon the duties of the Attorney General pending the forthcoming session of Congress.

"Little did I suppose that the prospect of being forced to lay aside the scepter of power over the national banks of the country would create in the heart of Mr. Williams such intense anguish as his course since objection was raised to him and his conduct of the office, which he has so grossly mismanaged. But since his soul rises in agony over the imminence of his involuntarily separation from a $12,000 job, I, myself, appeal to the President, through the vast reaches of space now intervening between Quai d'Orsay and the seat of our government in Washington, to end his distress by dispatching by the quickest route a commission reinvesting him in a perfectly lawful manner with the authority of Comptroller of the Currency during the recess of Congress.

Secretary of the Treasury Glass, behind whose bifurcated coat tails the valiant ex-comptroller is hiding, has stated publicly that a recess appointment for his charge would be forthcoming should the exigencies of the liberation require, and, therefore, since Mr. Williams's vaunted intrepidity oozes to the zero point at the very thought of himself approaching the Chief Magistrate himself, I venture to make the appeal in his behalf myself through his immediate chief, the Secretary of the Treasury.

The present phase of the controversy involving Mr. Williams is simply and strictly a matter of law. So far as I am concerned, no personal element enters into it. United States Revised Statutes, section 327, specifically prescribe the manner in which a vacancy in the office of Comptroller of the Currency shall be filled. Section 303 of the Revised Statutes, which the Attorney General now holds that Secretary Glass was justified in invoking an order to enable Mr. Williams to cling desperately to the pay roll, makes no reference whatever to the comptroller's office. It is a blanket provision covering temporary and unexpected vacancies in the Treasury Department, and was interpreted by Attorney General Moody in 1906 as permitting the Secretary of the Treasury to continue the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, Calif., in office, or until his successor was appointed and qualified. These public offices must not stop functioning, and some one must be designated to continue the work when the incumbent's time has expired and no successor duly appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate is waiting to take his place.

But Congress placed the comptroller's office in another and entirely different category, and specifically provided in section 327 that when a vacancy exists in that particular office the deputy comptroller shall act as Comptroller of the Currency until a new comptroller is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Nothing could be more unequivocal than this provision, and nothing more patent than that a deputy should have now assumed the duties of comptroller on March 4, when Mr. Williams failed to receive the confirmation after his nomination by the President for a second term. The law makes no exception in the interest of Mr. Williams, as an individual whom it pains beyond expression to retire to private life, and unless an "arbitrary and autocratic ukase" by the Secretary of the Treasury now supercedes orderly government, Mr. Williams should forthwith withdraw from office and await a new appointment from the President. I am emphasizing the illegality and irregularity of his designation as acting comptroller ad interim, solely in the interest of government by law as against government by proclamation in utter disregard of law. There has been too much personal law in this country recently; too much of a flavor of undemocratic imperiousness in defiance of government by law, and I deem it my duty to insist upon a return to an observance of the statutes of Congress by officials of the executive departments. My persistence in this respect is in no sense due to a desire to deprive Mr. Williams of office under the present administration or of his present emoluments. Personally, as I have indicated, I prefer that he should be Comptroller of the Currency under a recess appointment by the President, and I wish that the President would sign such a commission and send it to Washington so that Mr. Williams will lawfully be performing the duties of the office he now unlawfully holds.

Even assuming that there is a reasonable doubt which statute applies to this case—section 303, under which Secretary Glass says he found power to retain Mr. Williams in office, or section 327, which specifically involves the deputy comptroller to act in the event of a vacancy—should not that doubt be resolved in favor of a recess appointment by the President without further delay, so that validity be given to the official acts of Mr. Williams, and national banks be assured that the orders he issues can not be resisted on the ground of alleged illegality? As I said, I would have Mr. Wiliams given a recess appointment at once, not only in the interest of lawful procedure but in his own interest. The manner of the conduct of the comptroller's office under Mr. Williams from February, 1914, to February, 1919, has been attacked in both branches of Congress. The Senate refused to confirm him for a second term at its recent session because of these attacks. When the regular session ended on March 4 last a resolution to investigate the comptroller's administration was pending in the House of Representatives. At the extra session, which the President will call soon, that resolution will be introduced again and pressed for early passage. In the Senate the Committee on Banking and Currency will be prepared to inquire into Mr. Williams's fitness for the office (should the President decide to reappoint him again).

I insist that it will be only fair to Mr. Williams that he be regularly and legally in office when these investigations begin so that he would have all the facilities afforded by the records of his office that he may require to defend himself. If he can disprove the charges that are to be brought against him, he should be given a second full term. He would be entitled to such vindication, and I, for one, would favor his having. But out of office and with his records not so accessible and available to him, he might be at a disadvantage to which I, myself, would not desire to put him. I want a fair investigation, one which will do Mr. Williams no injustice and in which he would in no way suffer a handicap. I want him to have the full power of the national administration at his back, if the President deems it advisable to support him, and such other reinforcements as he may be able to command. Therefore I appeal again to Secretary Glass to procure for Mr. Williams a recess appointment, not alone in order to remove all doubt as to the validity of Mr. Williams's acts during the recess of Congress and in the interest of government by law, but in order to fortify him in every legitimate way in defending himself when the investigation of his office begins during the extra session.

I am not nor have I been seeking a quarrel with Secretary Glass, and I would deprecate it if any such contention should be placed on our public correspondence. The manner in which Mr. Williams procured a brief lease on his old job is tending to bring the comptroller's office into disrepute in banking circles, and as a banker and public man I deplore such a development. I am loath to believe that the Secretary of the Treasury deliberately would create such an unfortunate impression upon the public mind, but letters which are coming to me from various parts of the country indicate that such a condition is developing. It would be so easy for him to put an end to this spreading of unfavorable comment by obtaining a recess appointment for Mr. Williams, and I sincerely trust that he will do so immediately. I regard it as my duty to keep the public enlightened on this situation for the further reason Mr. Williams is presuming to sit as a member of the Federal Reserve Board and participates in the important deliberations of that body, which controls our entire financial structure. The law makes the Comptroller of the Currency an ex officio member of the Federal Reserve Board, but in the absence of an appointment by the President Mr. Williams is not now Comptroller of the Currency, and even a most attenuated construction of section 303, behind which he has taken refuge to avoid his total eclipse as an official of the Government, does not warrant his wearing the garments of an ex officio member of the Federal Reserve Board. I have already called the board's attention to this anomalous situation which I refrain from characterizing as brazen effrontery, but so far as I am advised the Federal Reserve Board has taken no action in regard to Mr. Williams continuing to act as a member of the board.

COMPTROLLER HIT AT BANK MEETING—DELEGATES ASK THAT CONGRESS ABOLISH OFFICE TO ELIMINATE POLITICS.

The National Association of Supervisors of State Banks yesterday, during their convention at Hotel Statler, adopted resolutions asking Congress to repeal a law recently enacted conferring upon national banks the power to act as fiduciary agencies, pleading that State banks and trust companies number 22,000, with combined resources of more than $22,000,000,000.

Fiduciary agencies act as trustees in administering personal and other estates. Heretofore only State banks and trust companies acted in this capacity.

Resolutions criticising the Comptroller of Currency, John Skelton Williams, also were adopted. Congress was asked to abolish the comptroller's office, "without regard to the personality of the incumbent, in order that his powers may be exercised by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve System freed from the danger of political control, which has from its inception been recognized by financiers as its greatest possible weakness."

The supervisors asserted Comptroller Williams has unjustly "taken flings at State banking institutions."

R. N. Sims, State bank supervisor of Louisiana, introduced the resolutions asking for the repeal of the law making national banks fiduciary agencies. The resolutions allege the exercise of fiduciary powers by national banks is not their function but that it is one peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the States and that the conferring of such powers upon the national banks is "an invasion, in spirit, of the constitutional rights of the States."

BANKER SCORES WILSON POLICIES—M. J. DOWLING HOLDS WILLIAMS'S POST USELESS—STATE FINANCIERS' NEW PRESIDENT ATTACKS ADMINISTRATION'S AUTOCRACY.

That John Skelton Williams, Comptroller of Currency at Washington, is no more necessary than the fifth wheel of a wagon was one of the things charged against the Democratic administration by M. J. Dowling, banker, of Olivia, Minn., who later was elected president, in a speech at the Minnesota State Bankers' Association meeting at the Saint Paul to-day.

Mr. Dowling's attack came after a discussion in which it was decided to refer to the executive council of the association the question of the numerous calls made by the State and Federal bank examiners. Bankers recommended that calls by State and Federal examiners be arranged so that they came on the same dates and not at different dates, as is now the practice.

OFFICERS ARE ELECTED.

Mr. Dowling was elected president of the association for next year. By his election the association adhered to established custom of elevating the vice president to the presidency.

TOO MUCH FEDERAL CONTROLLING.

"It is now time for State and National bankers to get together to protect themselves from the comptroller at Washington," Mr. Dowling stated. "We don't need to have him lead us anywhere. He is no more necessary than the fifth wheel on a wagon."

"All the leading should be done by us, and we should lead him to the pastures. The American people have been led by the nose so long they are getting sick of it."

He then denounced autocratic administration and stated that there has been too much regulation developed out of the war. It must be curtailed, he said.

JOHN SKELTON WILLIAMS AND HIS ATTITUDE.

Congressman MCFADDEN, of Pennsylvania, has asked for an investigation of the conduct of John Skelton Williams, National Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. Williams has been for a long time an object of dislike in banking circles and this dislike is not based upon the things the comptroller has done—it is based upon the method he has employed in the exercise of his powers. Democrats and Republicans alike have the same complaint, and the very best citizens among the bankers feel that his conduct has been oppressive, partial, and often insulting.

The very answer which Mr. Williams made to the reporter who asked him for a statement concerning the action of the Pennsylvania Congressman discloses the malignity of his thought. He ends his abrupt reply by the remark that in the end Mr. MCFADDEN will find that the investigation will be less "embarrassing to him than to the mover of the congressional motion—for reasons known to that gentleman." The plain inference is that the Congressman may have some loans in the banks which Mr. Williams will give to the public. He uses the same sort of a club as is wielded by every man who feels that he has "something on" the accuser. This is the thug's method always; he has no defense except the defense of personal attack. When this happens there is only one thing to do—to say as Grover Cleveland did on a celebrated occasion—"Tell the truth and shame the devil." If Mr. MCFADDEN has more loans in the bank than he ought to have, then the best thing for him to do is at least not to let Mr. Williams bluff him. We have very little doubt that the Comptroller of the Currency is not the right person to exercise the great powers of his office. It makes no difference what political ideas rule his thought—but it does make a difference what his attitude is with respect to the financial operations of the Nation.

When the time comes that we must say that our bankers are not entitled to common respect, then we have reached a most serious state of affairs; but the truth is that a banker who is not entitled to respect would not last in a community for any length of time—and it does not rightfully lie in the mouth of John Skelton Williams to deal with them except with that degree of courtesy which is the universal attitude of the communities in which bankers live.

AS TO COMPTROLLER WILLIAMS.

The following letter from a national bank in Vermont is in response to our recent article advising bankers to adopt some plan for bringing Comptroller Williams's arbitrary and unreasonable treatment of national banks to an end when his present term expires in February, 1919:

NOVEMBER 18, 1918.

EDITOR UNITED STATES INVESTOR:

Some prominent German in Germany a while ago asked why the whole civilized world was against Germany. We think we know why. Now, why is it that Comptroller Williams is so cordially detested by the American bankers? We think we know why.

The following letter is from President John H. Gregory, president of the Central Bank of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y., who is one of the recent presidents of the New York State Bankers Association:

THE CENTRAL BANK OF ROCHESTER,
Rochester, N. Y., November 21, 1918.

EDITOR UNITED STATES INVESTOR:

I feel impelled to congratulate you upon your editorial entitled, "Is Comptroller Williams to go?" in your November 16 number. It is very forceful, at the same time exceedingly temperate, considering the career of the gentleman under discussion. I believe it can be truthfully said that his occupancy of the office of comptroller has kept more State banks out of the system than any other cause.

Yours, very cordially,

JOHN H. GREGORY.

The Office of Comptroller of the Currency has no proper place in the economy of the Federal Reserve System. It is the fifth wheel of the wagon, and ought to be abolished now that a vacancy exists.

NEBRASKA BANKERS OPPOSE COMPTROLLER WILLIAMS.

A number of Nebraska bankers as individuals filed letters at Washington the latter part of January against the reappointment of John Skelton Williams, the drift of these protests being that he has been severely autocratic.

A VOICE FROM THE MOUNTAINS.

Opposition to the confirmation of John Skelton Williams when he comes up for renomination on February 2 is rapidly crystallizing among Republican Senators and the chances are that the administration will be called upon to make the hardest kind of a fight for the Comptroller of the Currency. Mr. Williams has been in hot water ever since he became comptroller. Bankers, large and small, in all sections of the country have felt the weight of his hand and have smarted under his treatment. Republican Senators are convinced that they will be doing their party a bad turn if they allow Williams to remain in office and have made up their minds to defeat his reappointment if it is made.

[From the Pacific Banker.]

WILLIAMS'S SUCCESSOR.

Will he succeed himself? It is understood that he will be reappointed. Confirmation rests with the Senate and there is bound to be trouble, at least, with the Republican Senators and also with a considerable sprinkling of Democratic Senators, although very few of the latter may come out into the open. The Wall Street Journal doesn't put it a bit too strong when it says he has been in hot water ever since he has been in office. Talk about the ability some men have to rub the fur the wrong way, to be everlastingly irritating those with whom they come in contact in a business way, whereas some other man could put it over without any trouble at all, John Skelton seems to have corncob and sand for every inch of the ordinary banker's epidermis and to leave all other counterirritants at the post in the race for acknowledged supremacy. The greatest joy in life some men have is to make others step lively and see that they do it. It is said that when a national banker nowadays has an unusually bad case of nightmare it usually turns on "five years more of John Skelton."

[From the Financier, Feb. 1, 1919.]

WHY IS A COMPTROLLER?

The Comptroller of the Currency is engaged in another of the periodical controversies which have marked his executive career from the beginning. Without going into the merits of the most recent of these unfortunate and, it might be said, unseeming disputes with outsiders, it is still to be affirmed that they are not adding to the imperishable fame of Mr. Williams, nor are they particularly edifying to the banking public or the public at large. No one will deny the right of any man to make a proper defense of his acts or reputation, but it is questionable whether this constant washing of soiled linen in public is neeessary.

Mr. Williams, by virtue of laws which are still operative, but to some extent supererogatory, is presumed to be the executive head of the national banking system. The Federal reserve act duplicated not a few of his functions, if, indeed, it did not annul them altogether. At any rate, there is an unnecessary conflict of authority which can be best remedied by abolishing the office of the comptroller altogether and leaving the duties of that official to be performed by the reserve board.

There is not much chance that Congress will go to this extreme length during the present session, but it is only a matter of time when such a step must be taken. In the meantime the comptroller, acting as executive head of 75 per cent of the commercial banking business of the country, should give thought to the importance of these interests. They are not promoted or benefited by his almost daily personal bickerings with banks or citizens, nor can it be said that the impression left on the public mind after reading his 57 varieties of remedial banking legislation is one to beget confidence in the American system of banking.

Some good friend should inform the comptroller that the war is over. An armistice in his office would be taken both as a graceful recognition of the fact and as a fitting conclusion to his term of office.

[From the Philadelphia Press.]

THE BANKS' RULER.

The announcement of Secretary of the Treasury Glass that the present Comptroller of the Currency is to be reappointed is bad news to the country. There has been the hope that Mr. John Skelton Williams would be retired at the end of his term, an act that would be received with very widespread approval. He has come very far from measuring up to the qualifications of this very important office. It is a place that requires first of all breadth of judgment and a mind entirely free from prejudice. Its power is tremendous; so great that in the hands of a wrong type of person it can be made a constant terror to banks and to business.

From the time that he assumed his duties Comptroller Williams has been a storm center. Bankers have considered him dictatorial in his methods and inquisitorial in his policies. There has been lacking that feeling of good will and cooperation that should exist between the national banks of the country and the Comptroller of the Currency in order to produce the best results. He has been charged with being overexacting in the things which he required banks to do; with following the policy of considering persons guilty until proven otherwise, rather than the opposite.

The Washington report that there will be strong opposition to his confirmation is doubtless based on real fact. The Republicans have it within their power to defeat it. With only some six weeks left of this Congress, it would not require extraordinary effort to prevent his confirmation before the 4th of March. Then there would be a Republican Senate to reckon with and an entirely different situation. The Comptroller of the Currency has in his keeping the fortunes, and the lives as well, of the banks of the United States. He should be a man in whom the country has entire confidence. Mr. Williams does not possess this, and he should be replaced by some man who has. There is a wealth of such material in the Nation available for appointment, and it should be utilized.

Address Delivered Before the Teachers and Students of State College, Greeley, Colo., July 4, 1919.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SIMEON D. FESS.

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, July 10, 1919.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following address delivered by me before the teachers and students of State College, Greeley, Colo., July 4, 1919.

The address is as follows:

"Mr. Chairman and fellow students, when I accepted the invitation of your honored president, Dr. Crabbe, to give you a series of addresses on our national problems induced by the World War, it was largely because I am convinced that a Congressman is justified in discussing these problems before the leading men and women upon whom public opinion is largely dependent, especially when it can be done in the recess of Congress.

"I had known something of your great institution through your former and lamented president, Dr. Snyder, and now your distinguished Dr. Crabbe. I was also assured by your very distinguished Representative in Congress, my personal friend, Hon. CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE, who, by the way, stands out as one of the most valuable men in the House, and who I have noted is always in his seat and never votes wrong, that I would be greeted by a great people in this great State.

"Fellow students, I came to address you on some problems now before us. I chose to first discuss 'Why Congress declared war.' My second address was 'The part the United States was called upon to play.' My third was 'Problems of reconstruction enumerated.' My fourth was a discussion of some of these problems with special regard to the railway and merchant marine. In addition to these addresses I discussed before the commercial club the financial problem with special reference to the extravagance of governmental expenditure, the consequent high cost of living, and suggestions of remedies. Before the rotary club I discussed the relation of capital and labor as affected by demobilization and the proposal of democratization of industry as a remedy.

"In this my concluding address I wish to say something about our position as a world power, which has been largely augmented by the war. In the onset I must remind you that our greatness does not consist of our vast territory nor our great population. It does not consist of our fertile acreage, however wonderful that may be. It does not lie in the wealth of mine or manufactory. Indeed, it can not be estimated in the markets, as it has no commodity value. Our wealth depends upon elements outside of the material. It is found in the character of men and women we produce. These material sources are but conditions for the development of men and women of great soul power, without which no nation can ever be truly great.

"When our Nation is viewed from the side of the wealth of resources, we have the ability to feed the world from a soil whose annual product will approach the $16,000,000,000 mark in normal times. We also have the ability to clothe the world, a sufficient product to put a cotton suit upon every inhabitant on the earth. We likewise have the ability from our mineral and agricultural wealth to build the world. If it were necessary we could literally build a wall about us and bid defiance to all the rest of the world. When viewed from that side of our capacity the simple recital of the undisputed facts is more striking than any Arabian Nights tale which tested the imagination of its author.

"No citizen can offer these facts without at once inviting the charge of a braggart, so fabulous do they appear.

"When viewed from the point of view of institutional life, our school system, far from being perfect, is the best in the world. Its inspiration arises from opening the door of opportunity to every boy and girl without regard to his name or race or station. Its very genius is that the hopeless boy of to-day becomes the leader of to-morrow. We make it a crime for an American youth to grow up in ignorance. True, among our foreign elements much illiteracy abounds, but this is un-American and must be removed without undue delay. Fundamentally speaking, our national greatness rests upon a tripod—a free State, a free church, and a free school.

"Without entering upon a discussion of these elements which lie at the very foundation of our national existence, I wish to pass on to our immediate problem of our relation to the world. Our material wealth, which approaches that of the combined wealth of the three next wealthiest countries of the earth, makes us the envy of the world. There is not a great nation that does not bargain for our friendship. The last five years is ample evidence, and especially are the months since the armistice was signed. Our position of vantage will quite naturally provoke jealousy, if not envy, which may become hatred. As a concrete example, I assert that our definite promise to enter the new field of merchant marine is sure to produce friction in certain quarters.

"The war's problems, both domestic and foreign, must be solved with open eyes to international relationships involved.

"We were compelled to take steps in the stress of war that no one would think of doing in time of peace. There will be tremendous pressure, both at home and abroad, to prevent retracing those steps on the one hand and to further push forward the new ventures on the other.

"We gave to the President more power than ever was exercised by any absolute monarch in the history of civilization. Of course, this power given for war purposes must be withdrawn in peace time, no matter what influences may be operative to continue them. We pushed our national personality into foreign affairs as never before dreamed of, and there are those among us who insist that such position was not only proper and must not be withdrawn, but that we must go still further as our duty to the world.

"We are informed by Clemenceau's address to the Chamber of Deputies that our Nation has entered upon a defensive alliance with France to defend her against the aggressions of Germany, and this at the very moment when French soldiers in the city of Fiume cry 'Down with Italy.' It will not be forgotten that when the war opened Italy was an ally of Germany. Through the secret treaty of London, Italy broke away from Germany, joined the Entente on the consideration of certain cessions to Italy, including Fiume, which has been for months, and is now, a most war-provoking factor, a suggestion of the inevitable consequences of alliances and secret treaties.

"Fellow students, no one can deal with our foreign relations as affected by the war without discussing the league of nations constitution. As a member of the Inter-Parlimentary Union and a member of the executive committee of that union, an interested student of the peace movement in the world, in which I have been greatly interested, I have followed the movement from its very inception. When editor of a publication back in 1905 I wrote an article on the history of the world peace conferences held prior to the famous first Hague conference. I have studied the work of the two Hague conferences and have spoken frequently to the public on a possible world federation.

"The recent movements of international peace promoters, such as the late Edward Ginn, of Boston, and Smiley, of the Lake Mohonk conference, and the various proposals and publications on international courts, have enlisted my sympathetic attention.

"The most recent effort, the League to Enforce Peace, and the most concrete proposal with the best organization, both National and State, backed by a larger host of promoters, both by voice and purse, has been under my observation constantly since its inception. It contained in it the element of force which, while demanded by its promoters, has always been of doubtful wisdom, in my mind, which is the determinant in failing to win my hearty approval.

"However, when ex-President Taft committed the President to this proposal when at the convention of the league in Washington in May, 1916, the President made his formal pronouncement in a public address May 27, I saw the idea greatly enhanced by the prestige of presidential approval.

"Quite naturally the steps since that day have not only been important but interesting, especially when it was learned that the President would demand the league as the one thing our country would seek in the peace treaty and the chief determinant in his going to Europe. On January 25, 1919, the league idea was agreed upon. On February 14 the league constitution was first made public. I at once gave it the best thought of which I was capable. As it was a proposal of a world constitution, a scheme in which I had given much thought, I scanned it closely to ascertain what dangers, if any, were included. In due time on the floor of the House I pointed out my objections and suggested eight changes it seemed necessary to make to avoid imminent danger to us. This was not done until alarm was created in the minds of some Congressmen by the very unusual urgency of the President that discussion of the league should be withheld and the assurance by him that "there was a good and sufficient reason for every article in the constitution." It is never safe to assume that what can be known of a given subject is already known, and it is exceedingly unwise in a Republic to refuse discussion for fear the subject will suffer therefrom. The danger lies not in the open consideration and debate but in the lack of it.

"The eight amendments demanded were on the following items:

"1. The jurisdiction was too general, extending to 'any question affecting the peace of the world.' This quite naturally would include immigration, deportation of undesirable aliens, tariff question, merchant marine, and the Monroe doctrine. The jurisdiction should either be specific or expressly exempt these questions.

"2. Decisions on all questions are made by majority vote of the council. It should be amended so as to require our vote to determine every question of vital importance to us to be decisive.

"3. Article 7 gave Great Britain at least 6 votes to our 1. This must be amended so as to give us equal power to Great Britain.

"4. National defense was left to a vote of the council. The constitutional provision for our national defense can not be delegated to a council the majority of which is foreign and in which we have but 1 vote.

"5. Article 10, which gives power to the league to send our Army to any quarter of the world to maintain the political and territorial integrity of the nations now existing and making up the league, should be eliminated altogether.

"6. The constitution should be amended so as to require our consent to make us the mandatory over any nation.

"7. The right to withdraw should be permitted upon due notice.

"8. The league should be considered apart from the treaty.

"Several amendments have been made which should be satisfactory, it seems to me. Two were made which are wholly unsatisfactory, namely, the jurisdiction does not exclude the questions I mentioned in the onset and is still a source of danger. The withdrawal clause is conditional, dependent upon the judgment of the league as to whether we have fulfilled our international obligation. Of course, that is equivalent to a denial of the right to withdraw.

"Two of the proposed amendments were not favorably considered—the exclusion of article 10 and the separation of the two instruments. The latter can not be done, I fear. The President's declaration that he would bring back the instrument with the treaty and the league so intertwined that they can not be separated I think has been kept. The league is mentioned 79 times in the treaty, and the enforcement of much of the latter, I fear, depends upon the former. I regret exceedingly that the changes were not made. Since there seems no chance to separate the two, the way is still open to ratify the treaty with reservations on the three objectionable features. This is a common method of treaty making, and will avoid embarrassment. The Senate can ratify the treaty in terms specifically withholding the operation upon us of the too broad jurisdiction by stating in the terms of ratification that the jurisdiction as to this Nation must not extend to include the domestic questions I before mentioned; that article 10 must not be operative upon this Nation; that the withdrawal clause must be unconditional in its application to us.

"The signing of the treaty by Germany and our ratification with the reservations will end the war between us and Germany. If the Entente will accept our reservations that places us in the league. If they refuse, which to me is incredible, it would be sufficient reason for us to remain out of the league. I am convinced we should not enter any league which would leave questions purely American, like immigration and deportation, to a vote of a council a majority of which is foreign and can not have our interest in mind.

"We are at this moment battling with our greatest national menace, the Bolshevism movement. The Lusk Committee of New York City reports that there are from 300,000 to 500,000 people in that city alone who are advocating forcible seizure of private property. It reports that there are 2,500 trained agitators on the pay roll of their propaganda with 265 publications in the United States. No man or woman of sense can be insensible to the possible fatalities of this effort to Russianize America by this proposal of making all people equal by dispossessing all people.

"The college and university authorities of American institutions should expel at once every such teacher, the State should dismiss all such from the public schools, the Nation should forcibly deport every alien who persists in this propaganda, and incarcerate every citizen who is engaged in such work of disloyalty.

"Such questions must be left to our own Nation. Internationalism has a high-sounding rhetorical flourish, but it must never supersede a real national spirit. While the war has been the occasion for emphasizing the claim of internationalism, nothing in our lifetime as a Nation has so emphasized the need of a new definition of Americanism and a reconsecration of our citizenry to its real significance.

"We love America for what she has been in the past, her great history and traditions. We love her for what she is to-day, the superior position she holds in the world. We appreciate her for what she promises to be in the future. But it would mean very little to be an American if an insipid cosmopolitan philanthropy called by whatever name would cause us to lose our nationalism in a maudlin sentimentality which would exchange our love of country for a pretended concern for all the tribes of mankind.

"Nationalism is one thing. Internationalism is an entirely different thing. The first is a rational sentiment, the second a maudlin sentimentality. The orator whose chief resource is rhetoric can talk eloquently of our soldiers battling to free the oppressed people of Europe, but the soldier himself, who talks but little, was content to suffer in a foreign land and fought for the honor and life of his own country, which to-day is his crowning glory.

The war has again renewed the age-long struggle between liberty and authority. The Bolshevist and Spartacan identify liberty with anarchy. The monarchist identifies authority with despotism. Either extreme is equally dangerous. The war has loosened the bands of government and stimulated the purposes of the leaders of disorder. Reason is giving way to impulse, judgment to passion.

"Throughout the entire world symptoms of outlawry are apparent. It grows out of an effort to escape the old order. In Russia it is the Bolshevist in his many varied groups. In Germany it is the Spartican and his many varied affiliations. In Hungary it is the followers of Bela Kun. In Mexico it is the bandit, whether in or out of office. In our own country it is the I. W. W. and his numerous affiliations.

"In this hour of governmental deterioration our words should be cautious, our steps measured, and our determination based on clear views and courageous conduct. At this moment, eight months after the signing of the armistice, and some days after the signing of the peace treaty, there are at least 18 different countries in a state of war, with actual fighting carried on—and this situation at the time when the unsophisticated peoples of Europe were led to believe that the millennium was to be ushered in. I can but believe that it is a misfortune, the results of which no one can now fully appreciate, that these people have been looking to our own country's leadership to bring to them the idealism so much talked about in recent years. They have heard of Mexico's right to spill all the blood she pleases in her governmental reforms, led by the modern reformers(?) in that most unhappy country.

"These people have been told by high American authority that this is the day of the people's rule, and the government that does not respond will give way to one that will. The fulfillment of this promise is at its height in Russia to-day. It is advancing in all Europe with amazing strides until our own country is called upon to send food to check the flood of antigovernment propaganda.

"At the moment when the cost of living is rapidly approaching the prohibitive point we are told we must increase our exports to Europe to save our own country from danger of European Bolshevism. I can not emphasize too greatly the one supreme antidote for this world disease of antigovernment. It is respect for law and order which this country must compel, rather than political flirting from high sources, so apparent in recent years, that is to be the effectual antidote of these disintegrating spasms of the doctrinaire.

"Fellow students and friends, as the molders of a safe public opinion which is to guide the Nation in its true course, I commend to you a rereading of the history of your country, this oldest and greatest Republic, to follow, step by step, the evolution of her government from the small beginning of 13 dependent Colonies fringing the Atlantic to a sovereign Republic of 48 States, embracing a continent with the largest English-speaking population under a single flag, and the happiest and most powerful people on the earth to-day. I commend a new study of the fundamental principles of the fathers as embodied in our great State papers, such as the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, the Ordinance of 1787, and Lincoln's inaugural addresses. I wish you would read anew, in the light of present-day problems, the utterances of Washington and his associates, of Webster, Clay, and Benton, and of Lincoln and his associates.

"If the progress of American peace and prosperity as illustrated by the high rank of this Republic, the envy of all the world, was reached in consonance with such guidance, it will be well to insist upon a full discussion of every suggestion to abandon the principles upon which we have builded. While it is true no one of you desires to invite the charge of your lack of sympathy with new policies, yet the mere unsupported charge of governmental theorists must have no terrors for the independent thinker.

"If in hot haste we might rush to accept untenable dogma, that error would be avoided by taking time, while no good object can be frustrated by taking time. Let us prove all things and hold fast to that which is good.

"If our mission as a world power is to exert the most wholesome influence upon humanity, that purpose will be best served by keeping close to American ideals, and while fulfilling our international obligations to other peoples still retaining our sovereignty and independence, subject to no nation or group of nations in our conduct of matters purely American. And should it ever become our lot to act as umpire in the world's quarrels or to stabilize by force of arms the world's civilization, it must be upon our own option, not by the order of foreign countries.

"Herein lies the greatest good of this Republic, both for our own people and the populations of other countries. As a student of world politics with predilection in favor of the purpose of the idea of a league of nations, I urge the reservations I have indicated, not only as the soundest policy we can adopt, but as the clear duty of our Nation."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, July 12, 1919.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last, July 8, I introduced in the House resolution 7014, to create in the Department of Labor a bureau of housing and living conditions. I now desire to insert in the RECORD a statement in explanation of the bill and the necessity of its prompt consideration.

The statement is as follows:

The Federal Government, as a result of its war housing program, has accumulated a vast fund of information and experience on industrial housing which should be made available to every community in the United States.

Under the direction of the United States Housing Corporation, the Passenger Transportation and Housing Division of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department, the United States has built homes for industrial workers at a cost of approximately $110,000,000. This has necessitated the planning of entire towns, provision of municipal utilities on wholesale scale, the design of large groups of houses in such form as to permit standardization of construction without monotony of exterior style, provision of open space in gardens, parks, playgrounds, street improvements for whole sections instead of spasmodic unrelated development, equipment of houses with modern conveniences of standard type with the advantages of large-scale production, provision of transportation, schools, stores, and other institutions necessary to community life.

Notwithstanding the high cost of part of this work, due to the war and the modification of plans because of shortage of certain materials, the bulk of this experience is of a character to be of direct, practical benefit to individual workers building their own homes, to employers desiring to provide homes for their employees, to operative builders constructing low-priced dwellings for the market, and to communities seeking to provide adequate living conditions for their citizens.

No existing agency of the Government is now authorized to collect, analyze, correlate, and interpret this experience, and to make it available to the country. It offers the greatest opportunity before the Federal Government for salvaging permanent values from our enormous war expenditures.

The cessation of home building during the war has resulted in a shortage of more than a million homes. Communities in all parts of the country are seeking ways and means to relieve the acute housing situation which confronts them.

The housing shortage is acute in virtually all American cities, and notably in New York City; Philadelphia; Harrisburg; Cleveland; Cincinnati; Newport News; Detroit; Lawrence, Mass.; Springfield, Ohio; Warrenton, Oreg.; Johnstown, Pa.; Charleston, S. C.; Green Bay, Wis.; Wilmington, Calif.; Atlanta, Ga.; Frankfort and South Bend, Ind.; Baltimore, Md.; Omaha, Nebr.; Newark; Milwaukee; Washington, D. C.; Seattle; Watervliet, N. Y.; Niles, Mich.

The difficulty of securing loans for home building is retarding construction. Many cities look forward to serious distress next winter.

Every country in Europe and most of the British colonies have taken governmental action to enable the industrial worker to provide his family with a house and decent living conditions.

Even before the war Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Hungary, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Luxemburg, Roumania, Spain, Switzerland, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Cuba, and Chile had provided, either through loans from public funds, through subsidy, or through some other form of governmental aid, the decent housing necessary to maintain the health and vigor of their people.

Great Britain now has before Parliament a bill extending the housing acts of 1890 and 1909, by making it mandatory for local government authorities to provide housing for industrial workers. In case the local authorities fail to act, the local Government board may step in, take the necessary action, and charge the cost to the local community. There seems to be no doubt but that this bill will pass substantially in the form that it was introduced.

Canada since the armistice has provided a fund of $25,000,000 to be loaned through the provincial governments to local governments, building societies, and individuals to build houses.

Australia has provided a fund of $100,000,000 for repatriating soldiers. Its provisions cover towns and cities as well as rural districts.

The rapid growth of urban population in the United States would have forced the housing and living conditions problem on the attention of the Nation even though construction had not been stopped by the war.

The urban population of the United States was 46 per cent of the whole according to the 1910 census. Its rate of increase is three times that of the rural population and there is but little question that the 1920 census will show over 50 per cent of our population living in cities. The metropolitan areas surrounding our 28 largest cities in 1910 held 24 per cent of the entire population of the United States.

The slum conditions which exist in all of our large cities have resulted in high death rates, high infant mortality rates, increased contagious disease, and general weakening of the vitality of those who are forced to live and bring up their children under such conditions.

The wage earner is realizing that high wages alone can not provide for his family a comfortable house, a wholesome neighborhood, adequate schooling, and protection against the disadvantages of city life. To secure these real values it is necessary for the local communities and the local, State, and Federal governments to provide the protection which will insure him of these benefits. He is no longer willing to accept as inevitable the intolerable conditions which a laissez faire policy has forced upon him. Bad housing causes discontent, slums create social disorder.

Increasing land values, increasing cost of construction, increasing cost of maintenance, increasing cost of transportation, are rendering more and more difficult the problem of the workingman's providing adequate shelter for his family within a reasonable distance of his work. Home ownership is steadily on the decline. Real estate operators are increasingly reluctant to hold and manage renting properties.

It is significant that the man to-day whose dissatisfaction with government leads him to propose revolutionary measures, is usually the homeless man who comes from intolerable living conditions, the man who has no stake to lose by destroying order.

In the United States, when so considerable a portion of the communities of the country are facing a problem which needs for its solution—

1. Careful investigation of conditions in all parts of the country.
2. Scientific study and experimentation to find means of relief.
3. And the wide dissemination of the experience of each community for the benefit of all communities, it becomes a national problem, and the National Government is warranted in creating an investigating advisory agency to aid in its solution.

That concern for home building is not a new policy for the Federal Government is shown by the millions of dollars worth of lands offered homesteaders. That source of relief is largely gone. The United States now faces a civilization characterized by large cities. Those cities must be made habitable.

The building of houses by the Federal Government or Federal subsidization of private construction can be most effectively avoided only by systematic cultivation of measures to assist State and local governments, civic agencies, industrial, commercial, and investment corporations, and individual citizens with advice and accurate information based on the experience of other communities and the research and experimentation conducted by experts in the employ of the Federal Government.

Evidence of the desire for assistance on housing on the part of chambers of commerce, legislatures, State and municipal authorities, operative builders, house-building corporations, real estate boards, women's clubs, labor unions is abundantly available in the daily correspondence of the United States Housing Corporation.

CHARACTER OF SERVICE TO BE RENDERED BY THE PROPOSED BUREAU OF HOUSING AND LIVING CONDITIONS.

ANALYSIS OF WAR HOUSING EXPERIENCE GAINED BY THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.

In the expenditure of $110,000,000 for housing, it was the policy of the United States Housing Corporation and the Passenger Transportation and Housing Division of the Emergency Fleet Corporation to make intensive investigations into the housing and living conditions in each of the 200 or more cities which were investigated to ascertain the housing needs of workmen engaged on Government contracts during the war. This investigation went deeply into the questions of—

Existing housing facilities of the community.
Nature of the housing shortage.
Kinds of houses desired by the workers.
Available materials.
Building and health laws.
Public utilities.
Traditional forms of construction and building materials locally preferred.
Provision of community facilities such as schools, hospitals, parks, stores, moving-picture theaters, etc.

Books, pamphlets, periodicals, and reports bearing upon the subject were accumulated so that the United States Housing Corporation might be acquainted with all that was important in the experience of this country in meeting the problem of housing the industrial worker.

Many of the leading experts of the country in the fields of architecture, engineering, real estate, town planning, construction, and other related branches of the housing science were in the employ of the Government. Their experience in private building and in large undertakings of Government construction has been embodied in their plans for the Government houses and communities.

Now that these housing projects have reached the operating stage, the Government is daily accumulating a store of experience on real estate management and house maintenance of residence properties worth $110,000,000 in different cities. The operation and disposal of these properties should set new standards in industrial housing, which should be of use to every community in the United States.

No collection of material on this subject of equal magnitude has ever been made in this country before. The material should be carefully analyzed and supplemented and rendered available in usable form to intending builders and should be so presented that it will induce home building throughout the United States.

PROBLEMS FOR SPECIAL INVESTIGATION, RESEARCH, AND EXPERIMENTATION.

During the war the United States Housing Corporation organized in war-industry centers homes-registration services under the supervision of local committees and supported by local funds. These bureaus conducted vacancy canvasses to determine the nature of the housing shortage and what kinds of dwellings were needed to relieve the shortage. They also maintained registries, at which the incoming workers could secure addresses of all vacant rooms, flats, and houses at any given price. There is no better way for a community to study its own housing needs. The Federal Government, upon local request, should continue to advise and aid such local groups as the most feasible means of getting at the facts as to housing shortage and the means of stimulating investment in home building and of improving the quality and increasing the quantity of housing facilities.

Such a bureau would make studies, for example, on the following problems:

ARCHITECTURE.

Preparation of special pamphlets containing drawings and specifications for four-room cottages, six-room cottages, bungalows, semidetached houses, row houses, dormitories for men and for women, apartment houses, barracks for workers in construction camps, cafeteria and community buildings. (Much material on these and related subjects is already on hand.)

Design of houses from the standpoint of the housekeeper.

HOUSE CONSTRUCTION.

Methods of reducing costs of building houses by large-scale construction, by standardization of plans, materials, equipment, etc. Much material on this subject has already been gathered which should be analyzed, sifted, tested, and rendered available to operative builders, architects, chambers of commerce, manufacturers, housing corporations, etc.

Provision of economical, practical, stationary equipment.

TOWN PLANNING.

What facilities and advantages of living must be provided for communities of varying sizes—school sites, parks, playgrounds, hospital sites, provision for transportation?

What should be chosen as the type and details of the entire town plan, including all essentials for family and community life with well-balanced regard for (1) meeting mechanical requirements, (2) producing an agreeable environment, (3) keeping down the cost?

Practicability in this country of cities having the economic and social advantages indicated by the term "garden cities" and "garden suburbs," as used in England.

REAL ESTATE AND HOUSING MANAGEMENT.

What service should be given tenants? How can tenant's responsibility be developed?

What is a just return on rented property? How should depreciation and obsolescence be calculated?

What are the best forms for house leases and sales contracts for wage earners?

FINANCING HOUSING.

How can investment in housing be stimulated?

Model constitution and by-laws for house-building and house-financing corporations.

Development of standards for real estate appraisals.

Manuals of accounting for home owners, realtors, house builders, building and loan associations, and house-fiancing corporations.

British copartnership tenancy plan and its applicability to conditions in the United States.

RECONSTRUCTION OF CITY SLUMS.

What are the most economical and practical methods of getting rid of existing slum districts?

Such a bureau should also study the relation of land or transportation and of the provision of public utilities to the housing of the industrial population; fire prevention and fire protection; labor-saving devices for housekeeping; methods of waste disposal; maintenance of streets, parks, etc.; and the many other problems which bear a vital relation to home ownership and satisfactory living conditions.

It should collect, analyze, and report on the experience of States and municipalities in relation to town planning, housing, and living conditions, and bring what is significant in their experience to the attention of officials and agencies which can use it to public advantage. The wider the base of information, the more reliable will be the conclusions drawn.

CLEARING-HOUSE SERVICE.

Starting with the present accumulation of books, pamphlets, special reports and special studies gathered by the United States Housing Corporation and the Housing and Transportation Division of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, the new bureau should maintain a complete file of all material bearing on these subjects. It should be made available to State and municipal authorities, labor unions, chambers of commerce, investors, builders, home owners, and renters by means of correspondence, publications, exhibits, and special agents sent out on request to advise and assist local communities.

The Prohibition Enforcement Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ISAAC SIEGEL,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, July 10, 1919.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, in looking over the remarks made by me on the floor of the House on July 10 in reference to the enforcement provisions placed in the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution I find that I stated that the same language would be in the nineteenth amendment in the event of its ratification by the States. I have endeavored to obtain time to make this correction, but on account of the many gentlemen desiring to speak on the same subject I have been unable to do so.

I take this means of correcting that impression.

The effect, however, is to give Congress power to go into each State to enforce the prohibition and woman-suffrage amendments; and if that power be exercised for political advantage, it can be used for the purpose of retaining any party in office for a very long time.

It must be borne in mind that no matter how strict a law may be, its enforcement can only become effective if the people are behind it, as has been said by the late Senator Hoar:

> It was idle to expect southern jurors or State officers to enforce the law against such crimes in the condition of sentiment existing there.

If this was true in reference to the enforcement of the fourteenth amendment, how much more so will it be true of the attempt to enforce the law in northern communities, which are just as law-abiding and in many respects more so than in other parts of the country? Of course, the time will come when even though the House of Representatives may be unable to repeal the prohibition amendment, it will refuse to make the necessary appropriations for enforcing it.

Many of the troubles which have appeared in our midst would be most quickly eliminated and cured if we but recognized the fact that we are the individuals who are to be governed, and the only time national legislation can become effective is when we are prepared to recognize the vast improvement of the general conditions of men generally and at the same time recognize the fact also that by taking away the liberty of the individual we are in many ways retarding human progress.

Much has been said on the floor of the House as to the law-abiding qualities of the residents of the District of Columbia, and great stress has been laid upon this being a prohibition city. It may astonish some individuals, but it is a fact that can not be denied that approximately one person out of ten is arrested every year in Washington. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, 39,562 persons were arrested. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, 43,245 persons had been arrested; and I am informed by the chief clerk of the police department of Washington that, although he has not received the last report for the last quarter ending June 30, 1919, he knows that the number of arrests will exceed 45,000, indicating that prohibition has in no respect decreased the commission of crime. On the contrary, it appears that it is becoming necessary to have an increased police force in Washington to enforce the law generally.

The War Department's Censorship on Death Records of American Heroes Overseas.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,

OF MICHIGAN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, July 11, 1919.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the father, mother, or wife who contributed to the cause of the world one of the American boys who died in khaki overseas is entitled to the gratitude of the Nation and to every consideration. But when such a one writes to the War Department, that organism that functions only by spells fails to answer. Several such in my district have then appealed to me to secure information as to how and where the boys died and where buried. A letter to the office of the Surgeon General asking for the information in the records of that office in due time brings the information that "there has been forwarded to you through The Adjutant General's office a transcript of the medical record on file in this office in this case." Then comes a wait. I do not know how long a Congressman would have to wait for that transcript. My patience does not extend beyond one month, with a father in Michigan waiting for the information.

I am advised that an order of the Secretary of War puts the lid on the office of the Surgeon General, but a written appeal for revocation of the order brings no response and no relief.

I have had several experiences of identical character. The War Department may still feel it unnecessary to give information of a legitimate nature to Members of Congress, but it should respond promptly to any such request from a bereaved parent or wife.

In the hope of really getting the matter to the attention of the proper authorities, I have to-day introduced the following privileged resolution, which I will call up in the House at the proper time:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to send forthwith to the House of Representatives all available information in the office of the Surgeon General concerning the death of Oscar E. Bitzer, of Three hundred and tenth Ammunition Train, while in the service of the American Expeditionary Forces; and that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, further directed to furnish to the House of Representatives the text of any order of the War Department or of the Secretary of War that forbids the office of the Surgeon General furnishing direct to the next of kin or to Representatives in Congress, on application, all available information in the office of the Surgeon General with reference to the death of an American soldier while in service in the American Expeditionary Forces.

Memorial Day Oration.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, July 16, 1919.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a memorial address delivered by Hon. Ernest Lundeen, formerly a Representative from the State of Minnesota, at Arlington, on May 30, 1919.

The address is as follows:

"When the Athenean orator of old ascended the rostrum to address the Assembly of Athens, he first offered up a prayer to the immortal gods that no unworthy word might escape his lips. To-day I am speaking straight from the shoulder and right out of my heart. What I say I say in all earnestness. It is perhaps my last word here, and I pray that no word unworthy of America and her mighty history may escape my lips.

"In Independence Hall you will find two world maps. One, in black, shows a world at the close of the eighteenth century dominated by monarchs. Our first 13 States were then the only large territory governed by the people. Another map shows the spread of popular government at the beginning of the twentieth century. That map is almost white. The power and influence of our Republic gained steadily during more than a century, and during that century America remained in splendid isolation. Aloof from Europe, apart from all entangling alliances, America grew to greatness.

"Washington, Patrick Henry, and Jefferson—these were our guiding stars. Under their leadership America challenged the world's greatest empire on the field of battle. We see them again, Minuteman and Continental, hurrying from forest, field, and farm. Husband and wife and children sobbing their farewells. The signal lights! The midnight warnings! The drums and the fifes! Then, carrying their long-barreled rifles with powder horns slung, with scanty provisions, they hurried forward. Over the hills and through the valleys they rallied around a new national standard. Then Putnam left his plow. Then Allen thundered his demands and John Paul Jones sailed the seven seas.

"At last there rose a majestic figure, one destined to command the first Americans. From Quebec to Yorktown and the Carolinas the inspired word of Washington fired every American heart. They dared at Trenton; they died at Saratoga; they suffered cold and hunger at Valley Forge. They won immortality and a nation's liberty at Yorktown.

"We are met together to-day as Americans. [Applause.] Party politics has no place here. Personal ambition is laid aside. We know only America and her glorious dead. [Applause.] Foreigners and all foreign intrigue aside, internationalism forgotten, we stand at the graves of those who made and preserved us a nation.

"In national solitude we grew to greatness, our trade circled the globe. We preserved our independence. Other nations formed alliances; we stood free. Other lands joined in European intrigue; we stood apart. Our trade relations were never jeopardized by our political independence. In fact, we drew close to the friendship of all.

"Providence placed us here to work out our great experiment in government, unfettered and unbound. We drew inspiration from our solitude. We builded a haven for the oppressed.

"As it is with the individual, so it is with a nation. Christ walked alone the shores of Gallilee. Mohammed in silence and solitude developed a new religion. Moses left the multitude and returned with the Ten Commandments. Dante alone, Demosthenes in solitude, Newton with nature, Linné with his flowers—these and other giant minds drew their inspiration far from the surging crowd. So pilgrim and pioneer, adrift from Europe and her seething politics, became the sturdy Minute Man and Continental, willing to suffer the agony of Valley Forge that America might never again be European.

"Patriotism is love of country. It is not the love of some nebulous nothing. It can not be turned into international channels. Concord and Lexington, Saratoga and Yorktown, Gettysburg and Appomatox, the precious blood of our hero dead, these, my friends, these purchased and preserved an independence never to be surrendered while an American still lives. [Cheers and applause.]

"Many years ago, on the plains of South Dakota, a little burial party wended its way to an open grave. The fife and drum were playing, and strong men in blue, wearing medals of honor, fired three volleys. A bugler sounded taps, and then we turned away, but a small flag was left flying over that grave. It was my first knowledge of the Grand Army of the Republic. That day impressed itself strongly upon my mind.

"And then came the glory of songs of that Grand Army, sung in our public schools, among these the Battle Hymn of the Republic, and a song written by an American private in time of war, while tenting at night on the old camp ground. It is well that this is so. The children of to-day will not forget these great songs of patriotism.

"Noble women of every State banded to help our heroes, veterans, daughters and sons of veterans of every war, upon you devolves the teaching of true patriotism, practical patriotism. We must be ever diligent in that duty, we must hand on untarnished these great orders dedicated to our common country.

"Memorial Day! Oh, memories, glorious memories! It was the 2d day of July, 1863. Gray uniforms filled the woods beyond and swarmed up the opposing slopes; batteries opened. The roar of artillery shook the ground. Cannon replied to cannon. And then the gray mass moved. Forward they swept into the open, down the slopes, and across the fields of grain. Now they charge with the rebel yell, bayonet to bayonet. The first line of blue goes down before them. On they come unchecked. Hancock rides up where the thin blue line of one shattered regiment holds the Union center. "What regiment is this," asks the general. "The First Minnesota," answers Col. Colville. "Charge the enemy," orders Gen. Hancock. Forward against the whole army rushes that lone regiment. They go down almost to a man before overwhelming numbers. But the charge is checked. Before they can resume fresh Union regiments fill the gap and roll back the enemy in flight. The day is won at Gettysburg. [Applause.] It was the high tide of the rebellion. From there it ebbed to final defeat at Appomattox. Memories, glorious memories! Mere lads many of you, yet men on the battle field. Fighting on for four long years. You marched with Sherman to the sea, you scaled Lookout Mountain, you stood with Thomas at Chickamauga. In the trenches at Vicksburg, at Iuka and Corinth, Antietam, Shiloh and the Wilderness, Cold Harbor and Petersburg. In the cold and in the heat, in sunshine and shower, amid the hell of war, wounded and hungry, you never wavered, but on and on until the sword compelled surrender.

"You were the backbone of the Nation. When you marched, the Nation moved forward. When you halted, our hearts hesitated. When you swept over hostile barriers, the Nation triumphed. [Applause.]

"Men of the Grand Army, a Nation owes its life to you; the fathers builded, but you saved the structure. Others founded, but you placed the capstone. With iron will and courage sublime you marched on to victory. You were then, you are now, the Grand Army of the Republic. [Applause.] Your last battalions are now silhouetted against the evening sky. Veterans of the Grand Army, the people of America salute you. Death shall not destroy nor time dim the luster of your fame.

"Sacred story tells us that Elijah gave his mantle to his followers, and they became inspired to do great deeds. May the mantle which you bore so nobly through so many desperate conflicts rest upon all who seek to emulate your example.

"Bronze and granite will recite the story. History will record your names. But in our living hearts we will carry forever the memory and love of those who fought for liberty and Union.

"As the Nation honors and cares for the veterans of the Civil War, so we will honor and care for the veterans of the Spanish-American War [applause] and the veterans of the World War. I see my comrades of the War with Spain around me. The Nation will not forget the men who remembered the Maine. [Applause.]

"The best way to honor the dead is to care for the living. [Applause.] Were the fallen to speak now they would ask for their living comrades that larger liberty in industrial affairs which will make true democracy a happy reality of their daily lives. Were they to speak now they would ask for them economic liberty, the last and greatest of the rights of man.

"The veterans of the World War want no desert grant or swamp privilege. [Applause.] They ask equal opportunity to develop our millions of idle acres of fertile lands. They want no crumbs of charity. [Applause.] Our boys if given a fair chance will win that confidence and independence which marks a sturdy race. Pomp and parade, receptions, and the cheers of the multitude, these pall upon men who faced death on the field or prepared themselves in spirit for that ordeal—men who now face the stern realities of the great industrial struggle. Glory is not a satisfactory substitute for bread. [Applause.]

"How tenderly we handle the rent and riddled battle flags, splintered staff, and war-worn colors borne by the veterans of all our wars. You lay up the battered hulks of naval victory as proud mementos of their services, while at your very door stand the men who carried those flags and manned those ships, not less tattered and torn by service and splintered by hostile bullets.

"The veterans of the World War met death in new and dreadful forms. A thousand death-dropping planes hummed and wheeled above them. The roar of giant guns, the rain of bursting shells, storms of choking poison gas, ceaseless war by day and attack by night, until the drum fire of death pitted the earth as would a new disease. Before that rain of shells forests disappeared, cities melted into dust, and through it all a roar and rumble as of a million bolts striking incessantly upon their line. In such a fire was the temper of their courage tried. Thus again America met the test of war. They turned the tide [cheers and applause], our boys; and let no beaten foe or jealous nation question that. [Applause.]

"The broken frames of a wrecked humanity now say to you by their service and by their scars that as they cared for you in times of danger and peril you shall now do justice by them. To-day our soldiers and sailors return from camp and battle field to seek a livelihood. They did not shirk at Chateau-Thierry nor hesitate in the Argonne. They sailed the seas undaunted; they added new luster to American arms. We will not forget. [Applause.] The American people will remember the dead and care for the living. They took their lives in their hands and went forth to battle. You applauded; you promised; you sent them forth to battle for American rights upon the sea.

"Men and women of America, it is for us to say that no soldier who fought our battle shall suffer from the cold hand of neglect [applause] nor from the cruel injustice bred of forgetfulness. Those who profited unduly from the war must now yield up the gold they coined out of patriotism. The burden of the poor is more than they can bear. Let the burden fall on the shoulders best able to bear it. It can not be otherwise. They are entitled to a full fair share of their native land, good land [applause], not deserts or swamps, and while we pour our billions into the laps of foreigners let us invest a billion or two for our American lads [cheers and applause], our bravest and best.

"By the solemn act of the Government these men were called to follow the flag across thousands of miles of death-infested ocean into foreign lands. They upheld the honor of our country. [Applause.] Upon them were placed the burdens, hazards, and losses of a world war. Only by the act of the Government can they be restored to their rightful place in the community.

"Memorial Day brings to mind all that our soldiers did for us. We take increased devotion from the ideals for which they died and recount the principles upon which they founded our Government.

"Fellow citizens, I will read from our great chart of liberty laid down in the Declaration of Independence, the Articles of Confederation, and the Constitution. Hear the voice of the fathers, 'We, the people of the United States.' Evidently the fathers intended 'a government of Americans, by Americans, for Americans.' 'In order to form a more perfect union' 'establish a confederation and perpetual union.' No wonder you fought to save that Union. 'To establish justice, to promote the general welfare, to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.' The militia shall only be used 'to execute the laws of the Union, to suppress insurrection, and repel invasion.' No Army appropriation can be made for more than two years. Our forefathers sought to escape the fearful burdens of foreign wars. They left Europe to escape that burden, to escape unjust taxation, conscription, large standing armies, and all oppression.

"It is provided that no title of nobility shall be granted by the United States. Those who wish to observe the spirit of this clause should refrain from humiliating themselves and their fellow citizens by accepting titles bestowed by fickle royalty. It is further provided that no officer of the United States can accept any emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever from any king, prince, or foreign state without due consent of Congress. Our Presidents are held in check by the provision requiring a two-thirds majority of the Senate to ratify all treaties. A majority of the Senate must confirm presidential appointments to office.

"The founders of the Republic were friends of progress. Within 10 years after the adoption of the Constitution no less than 11 new and vitally important amendments were added. These amendments guaranteed freedom of speech and of the press; they provided that there shall be no law respecting the establishment of religion or the free exercise thereof.

"The right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition their Government for a redress of grievances shall not be abridged. The people of the United States were made secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures. No warrants must issue except upon probable cause, and no one shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Speedy and public trials are provided by impartial juries, with the right to the assistance of counsel. Excessive bail must not be required nor unusual punishments inflicted. The people retain all power not granted by the Constitution. Thus the American citizen took the lead in human progress. [Applause.]

"The first framework of the United States Government, the Articles of Confederation of 1777, provided a 'perpetual union,' so at the very forefront of our history as a Nation was laid down the principle of 'the Union forever,' a principle which the boys in blue in '61 so gallantly kept alive. [Applause.]

"A strong and independent Congress was provided. In these days, when men cry down Congress, we may well remember that the first Government of the United States was Congress—aye, a Congress of one house of delegates. It was 10 years later that the executive and judiciary branches were added. It was Congress which declared our independence, adopted the Articles of Confederation and perpetual union, fought the War of the Revolution to a victorious end, and concluded a permanent peace.

"Independence is the corner stone of our national existence and the inspiration of our national life. The Declaration of Independence absolved us from all allegiance to the British Crown and dissolved all political connection between the United States and the State of Great Britain. Our Government was not a charter granted by some higher power; it was a declaration of the preexisting, inherent, unalienable rights of man, to secure which rights Governments are instituted among men.

"On yonder hill stands the Capitol of the United States, and over there the Executive Mansion. Let them look up to Arlington for their inspiration. Here on the hillsides of Virginia are resting the men who made America.

"When passion and prejudice grow furious, when party spirit grows narrow, and all the evils of political strife disturb the true compass of our national greatness, let them look well to Arlington for their certain course. Oh, my fellow citizens, they did not die in vain while we fare hither to recount their ideals and the principles for which they fought. [Applause.]

"Fellow citizens, it is time to complete our monuments to American heroes. Here stands the marble amphitheater unused. When Memorial Day, 1920, is here let it stand out a finished gem upon the hills. Over there Grant's unfinished statue is almost forgotten. His comrades demand its early completion. [Applause.] Lincoln's memorial, the memorial bridge to Arlington, the preservation of the Mall planned by Washington, these, my friends, may well enter our thoughts to-day. To Washington the pilgrimage of Americans is constantly streaming, and here America must be at her best. We are proud of our Capitol, proud of the White House, proud of the city itself, but prouder still are we when mention is made of the men who made America. [Applause.] They rise above field and farm and factory as the true example of American greatness.

"Arlington, the Nation's shrine. Here meet the people of every State, here lie buried men from every walk of life, of equal rank in death as they stood equal before the law in life.

"Boys in blue and rebel gray, men of the Revolutionary days, and men of the Maine, private and general, white and black, but all Americans. Here shines the sun of forgiveness through the tears of the mourners and a Grand Army president opens the gate to Dixie land. Thirty thousand men now bivouac on these hills. No bugle call arouses, no drum beat calls to battle, only the rustle of the leaves in the wind and the voice of a child calling to the forest bird. We linger a little while and go away. This is our shrine. Here God inspires, patriotism flames anew, and here men highly resolve that liberty shall not die. As the trees and the grass of the hills entice the else forgetful rain to earth, so will Arlington forever bring to our people a practical patriotism.

"And while we stand here to-day in beautiful, wonderful Arlington, American soldiers, sailors, and marines, a million of them, decorate the graves of the fallen legion across the sea.

"A hundred thousand American graves in foreign lands! Brave lads who never flinched. An arrogant aristocracy and a mighty militarism went down before their irresistible armed rush. Many of these lads lie buried in central cemeteries decorated and cared for to-day, but what of the lad who died in his trench, the next explosion burying him forever. The missing brave whose American heart is forever stilled over there. The wind moans his requiem and dewdrops are the tears. The friendly sun clothes his resting place with grasses green and covers him over with beautiful wild flowers. Nature does not forget the dead. A hundred thousand men—American dead! It is enough. Our living lads over there now demand their places in homeland [applause], motherland, God's own country. [Applause.] They are weary of Europe and Asia. The war is over and they want to come home. For them no mandatory nonsense, neither foreign entanglements and new-made graves in Africa, Asia, or Europe. They are Americans, and they want to live and die in America, to stand on their own home ground. [Applause.]

"In republican France, in imperial England, in bonnie Scotland, Wales, and the Emerald Isle, yes, in Germany and Belgium, Switzerland and Italy, in the drifting snows of Russia, in Siberia, and in the depths of the deep there sleep our brave.

"God lights the stars, He made the blue, and the white light of distant suns, and all the radiant red of morning is His handiwork, and so we wove and intertwined all these and made our flag the banner of the brave and flung it sun kissed and wind tossed into God's free air, the one flag, the great flag all else beside.

"Our country, we are proud of your glory. No slave, all free men, and every man a sovereign citizen. We read the same Declaration of Independence, the same Articles of Confederation, the same Constitution, and the rule of the ballot is supreme. Men rise and fall on the tides of fortune, but the Ship of State sails on through every storm. God has been good to America. Let us be humble lest we forget.

"Comrades and fellow citizens, to-day we pause to honor our hero dead. They died to make us independent, to give us sovereignty, to preserve our Union, to plant our banner where all men might see and here take courage anew. Look about you and behold a sea of flags. Arlington is not forgotten; Arlington will never be forgotten. [Applause.]

"Let no traitor lower our flag [applause], let no supergovernment be imposed upon us, let none question our sovereignty or seek to set aside our liberty and our independence.

"They did not die in vain. Our people are true Americans, believing in the American Nation, in its everlasting and eternal independence. We will not suffer foreigners to lord it over us, neither shall those among us whose hearts are still in Europe be our leaders. We still remember our hero dead, we remember the fight they fought and for what they fought. We shall not forget. Let us follow in their steps. [Applause.]"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SYDNEY ANDERSON,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, July 16, 1919.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a funeral oration delivered by the Hon. FRANKLIN F. ELLSWORTH at the chapel of Forest Cemetery mausoleum, St. Paul, at the funeral of the late Hon. CARL C. VAN DYKE, May 24, 1919.

The funeral oration is as follows:

FUNERAL ORATION DELIVERED BY THE HON. FRANKLIN F. ELLSWORTH AT CHAPEL OF FOREST CEMETERY MAUSOLEUM, ST. PAUL, AT FUNERAL OF THE LATE HON. CARL C. VAN DYKE, MAY 24, 1919.

"Man can not contemplate the flowers and trees, the hills and valleys, the sun and stars, without awakening in his breast the fervid hope of the life beyond.

"We are not philosophers; the mazes of theology and the processes of theosophy are to us a mystery; but we can discern beyond the twilight zone which separates the existence here from that beyond the spirit of the teachings of the Nazarene.

"We feel an intuitive sense of mighty power, of exalted ideals, of an inexplicable grandeur, in nature, and we soliloquize.

"Ah, we think, surely if the Power above breathes into the rosebuds the bloom which fills the winds of the valley with richest fragrance, it is more than chance that the assembled thoughts and hopes and aspirations of men should furnish the hidden motive power that drives the turbine and builds a city.

"If nature's alchemy in the first biting frosts of late summer will change the mountain forest into a variegated screen for the curious and reflective to ponder o'er, surely the triumph of this same master hand is the marvelous blend of the babel of the human race.

"And when the autumn is come and the sear and yellow leaves of the mountain wood glide through the chill November air to light upon the polished steel railroad rails at the mountain's foot to be crushed to bare and sapless skeletons, if the oak and the poplar and the pine will live to reproduce their wonder panorama for generations yet unborn, will the Divine Father leave neglected the souls of men when in their autumn time they shake off the barren hulks that form the biding places for their short sojourns here?

"And when the blasts of winter come, if the Father of Fathers in His all-wise and omnipotent power will cuddle the willow and the rosebush and the palm in nature's protecting robe and holds forth the prospect of returning summers, will He withhold the promise of the life beyond to the still soul waiting in the grave?

"Ah, no! Let us rather believe that the beneficent Creator who fixes the seasons and the stars, who dispenses the rainfall and the dew, who scatters the pollen to perpetuate the green verdure of mother earth, will find some sweet haven of rest for the tired soul whose earthly span has been devoted to the guardianship of the Master's creation.

"Death but marks the terminal of earth's journey and is the transition state to prepare the neophite for initiation into the ethereal splendor of the never-ending day. The finite mind can not comprehend its metaphysical state or encompass its boundless sphere.

"Earth's milestones are but weak and linkless chains with which the mortal mind is impotent to reach through the cavern of eternity's fugitive goal. Our day's fleeting sunshine and night's dazzling incandescence are but the glow and flickering of uncertain beacons on the way to the perpetual radiance of the palace in the skies. Earth's broken reeds and shrill flageolets can only form the listening ear to drink the perfect harmony of the celestial choir.

"We reach for salvation; it moves away. We grope for understanding; the mind fails. We build by the rule and guide of the prophets and philosophers, and when we would crown the superstructure it crumbles and is gone.

"Men whose dominant life's note is accomplishment of salvation for their own souls are but self-serving ambassadors, who treat in a language unspoken by the Creator; but he who holds self as an infinitesimal being save as he may commingle his impulses and aspirations with the universal scheme must become an indispensable part of the general plan.

"Ah, my friends, I do not believe that anyone in all the world could have a more difficult task to perform than have I this day.

"When the sad news came from Washington that Congressman CARL C. VAN DYKE had died, it might well be said that never in our State's history has intelligence of such nature been met with more widespread grief and sorrow.

"The tribute paid to-day by the thousands on the streets of this beautiful city of St. Paul, under the dome of our State capitol, and in this splendid mausoleum was a most magnificent one and shows but in a small degree the esteem in which Congressman VAN DYKE was held by all citizens of all walks of life.

"When this sad news came from Washington it meant to the loving and sorrowful wife, the two daughters grown to womanhood, and the seven brothers of the same character and sturdy stock, part of them gathered from distant States, that a loving and affectionate husband and kind and indulgent father and a generous-hearted and considerate brother had been taken away.

"To the little compact community of Alexandria, near fields and lakes and streams where he sported in boyhood, where the older residents point out the path to the village school of the earlier days, where he was born and reared and betrothed and took up, almost a mere youth, life's problems of husbandhood and fatherhood, the sad news meant that "CARL," native son, who had achieved distinction and reflected honor on his native city, was cut down in early life and his career was ended.

"The sad message of death meant that thousands in the Government Railway Mail Service throughout America, men who had fought valiantly behind him while he organized them and led them, in Congress and out, in their fight for their rights and privileges, had lost their loyal chief; it meant that every city and rural letter carrier and every employee of the great Post Office Department had lost their friend. I saw its mute evidence as the funeral train reached the city. Standing at the open door of a railway mail car, in working garb, cap in hand, head bowed, and with eyes fixed upon the American flag draped over the body of the former chieftain, a tall, pale-faced man, perhaps a fighter in the ranks, perhaps an official associate, and perhaps just going out on the old run through Devils Lake or Larimore where "VAN" had worked in days gone by, stood silently and unobserved among the thousands, the tears streaming down his cheeks. To him and his associates death's most exalted dignity and life's most generous impulses were embodied in the name upon their lips this day, the simple name "VAN DYKE."

"The sad news of the death of CARL C. VAN DYKE meant to 40,000 men who left their homes 21 years ago to give their services to the country's cause that their recently elected commander in chief had fallen. It meant the passing of their champion in Congress for pensions for their widows and preference in Government employment for soldiers and sailors and marines of all wars. We saw these veterans in platoon formation at the Grand Central Station at Chicago sounding taps upon the bugle as the funeral train departed; and to-day this occasion is honored by the presence of three past commanders in chief, Comrades Smith, Chisholm, and Busch, and Adjt. Gen. Raths, comrade, co-worker, lifelong friend, and beneficiary of the most sacred public trust that it was his duty during his lifetime to confer.

"To his colleagues in Congress CARL C. VAN DYKE'S death meant that there had been taken away a member of that honorable body who had always, with conspicuous courage for his convictions, faithfully performed every sacred trust. He was known in Congress as a man who was unswervingly loyal to his ideals, and whose aspirations were not for station and position, but to be able to perform a service. We saw him in our country's greatest crisis, disregarding what for the time seemed to best subserve his own personal or selfish ends as he courageously fought for his convictions and for the best interests and welfare of his country.

"But I have not spoken of the guiding motive of his life, the controlling ideal which made his career a conspicuous one. It was his attitude toward his fellow man. Reared in a country community, learning early the responsibilities of the home provider, starting as a worker in the ranks, his heart was always with the worker. He loved and trusted the men who work. He had their confidence and they enjoyed his confidence. He believed but little in the aristocracy of social caste, but was absorbed in the aristocracy of service. His friendships and sympathies were not those of utility, passing when the utilitarian purpose had been accomplished, nor of pleasure, vanishing as the flitting moments passed, but the strong, substantial friendships of admiration, of human sympathy, of common cause, and early in life he adopted, unconsciously, perhaps, the cause of the workers, and it became his life's work. Like the face chiseled in the solid granite rocks of the White Mountains of New Hampshire, reverently termed the "Old Man of the Mountain," and representing to the New Englanders who sojourn there a lofty ideal and purpose, so there will ever remain in the affections and memories of the working people of our great State the tender recollections of the ideals and purposes and of the life and character of CARL C. VAN DYKE.

"Speaking for my colleagues in Congress assembled here on this occasion, representing as we do the Senate and House of Representatives, we wish to extend our sympathy to the wife, the daughters, and brothers of our colleague and comrade, and to say to you that amidst your heavy burden of sorrow you must recognize the right to feel a just pride in future years that no man in Minnesota's history will occupy a higher place on the roster of honor, and that few men have ever contributed a more substantial and definite service to his fellow men than did CARL C. VAN DYKE."

Prohibition Enforcement Legislation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM S. VARE,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, July 11, 1919.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert an article from the Public Ledger, of Philadelphia, in which Dr. Conwell assails reform fanatics and praises prohibition, but defends workingmen's beer. The article is as follows:

DR. CONWELL ASSAILS REFORM FANATICS—PRAISES PROHIBITION, BUT DEFENDS WORKINGMAN'S BEER—URGES FREEDOM FOR DEBS.

Praising national prohibition as one of the greatest victories of the age, yet denouncing "fanatics and cranks who would go to extremes in their effort for reform," the Rev. Dr. Russell H. Conwell last night pleaded for a "fair, rational Americanism that would guard against the degeneration of prewar liberty into after-war oppression." He advocated the release of Eugene V. Debs, jailed for sedition.

In the pulpit at the Baptist Temple for the last time before departing on his summer vacation, Dr. Conwell found inspiration for his sermon in Samuel Gompers's recent declaration that America had won a victory in the war, but had lost its liberty.

"As an American I was startled by that announcement from the head of America's great labor organization," said Dr. Conwell, "when Mr. Gompers said 'We have won a victory, but we have lost our liberty.' It would not agitate us so much if the utterance had been made by an ordinary man. But Gompers, I believe, is a man of unquestionable patriotism, of unquestionable integrity. When he makes a remark like that it means something.

"I think that Mr. Gompers's influence in America is equal to that of President Wilson in so far as America's future is concerned. The American workingmen, if they wanted to combine, could rule this country, and Gompers represents these workingmen."

With Gompers's strong antagonism to prohibition, Dr. Conwell expressed a radical difference of opinion.

"Prohibition was a victory for the American people equal to the war we fought and won in France," said Dr. Conwell. "I know of no greater victory in history. Liquor is the curse of the ages, and the saloon has been the curse of America. In that the war did away with that it was a double victory. Because of the minority who misused liquor the majority were willing to forego its use, and prohibition came.

"Mr. Gompers is right, however, when he says that there is a fanatical disposition to go too far. There is danger that the whole thing will be rescinded by our going to extremes in threatening to take away things that need not be dispensed with. The fanatics, the cranks, the men who would take away everything that is called beer, whether it is intoxicating or not, give the workingman the impression that he is being persecuted. Let us be fair, rational Americans to the laboring man. The cry that 'you have lost your liberty' is the most dangerous cry that could go out to the workingman."

OF

HON. LUCIEN W. PARRISH,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, July 24, 1919.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address of Hon. Clarence Ousley, Acting Secretary of Agriculture, which I believe will be of much interest to the public. The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. CLARENCE OUSLEY, ACTING SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

"With meat prices to the consumer so high that he is denying himself, and with the prices for live stock, especially beef and lambs, so low to the producer that he is actually losing money, the Nation is confronted with a grave problem, which requires solution if we are not to suffer a decline in the live-stock industry.

"It is an anomalous situation. The department has endeavored to inform itself on the subject, and after conference with Senators and Members of the House who represent live-stock producing regions, and who also feel deep concern for the welfare of consumers, deems it important to give to the public certain outstanding facts, which may be summarized as follows:

"There is no longer need for meat conservation. The supply is plentiful, and patriotic citizens may freely disregard the meat-saving placards which are still displayed at many eating places.

"Europe needs our surplus pork, but is filling its beef requirements by importations from South America and Australia. Prices of beef cattle have fallen sharply since March 1 on account of the stoppage of exports for Army use and a slack demand for beef at home due to the continuation of beef conservation under the mistaken idea that such conservation is still necessary to feed the people of Europe. Beef producers and lamb producers who sell their products at this time are confronted with the danger of heavy financial losses which would tend to restrict production and cause a serious shortage in future.

"The United States will never have a satisfactory and permanent solution of the problem until the manufacture, sale, and distribution of meat products are officially supervised by authorized agents of the Government, working in cooperation with State and municipal authorities, whose only aim is to serve the public at large and not any particular class. When the Federal Government is enabled by law to maintain a just supervision over the meat-producing industry that will prevent unfair dealings, speculation, and profiteering, by furnishing the public from an unimpeachable source all the facts with regard to the industry, and when the States and municipalities are enabled by law to exercise similar supervision over intrastate and local business, then only can we expect to have fair and stable markets in which producer and consumer alike will have a square deal.

BEEF INDUSTRY CRISIS.

"Some of the particulars of the situation are as follows:

"The beef industry in the United States faces a most serious crisis. For a decade before the outbreak of war in Europe farmers and ranchmen had been urged to increase beef cattle production because the industry was not keeping pace with the growth of population. The lowest ebb in production was reached in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, when we practically ceased to have fresh dressed beef for export, but began to import it from the Southern Hemisphere.

"The campaign for increased production began to bear fruit with the outbreak of the war, and beef again gained volume in our exports. Prices rose and farmers were encouraged to expand their beef-making operations. With the entrance of the United States into the war a vigorous and successful effort was made to increase the supply of meat for our Army, especially beef, by civilian self-denial. Hotels and restaurants, at the request of the Government, reduced the size of their beef portions and regularly left beef off their menus. Private families by thousands did likewise. Farmers and ranchmen exerted themselves to the utmost at great risk in order that our soldiers and sailors could have the best food that skill and loving care could produce. The result is history. From an export of beef and beef products of 151,000,000 pounds in 1914, we exported 590,000,000 pounds of beef and beef products in 1918, almost equaling the great surplus of 1901, when our population was 35,000,000 people less than now. The exports of 1918 were treble the three-year prewar average.

"The war is over. In a little while the presence of American soldiers in Europe will be a memory of noble sacrifices. We must not forget that the principal use for the beef which we shipped overseas in such quantity was for the men in uniform. Europe, short of food though it is, does not need beef from the United States so much as it needs our pork. The stocks of cattle in the most of Europe have not suffered seriously in numbers during the war. Indeed, outside the areas actually overrun by the contending armies, cattle stocks have fairly held their own and in some cases even increased. Stocks of hogs and sheep have suffered much more severely than have cattle. It is also well known that Europe turned to South America and Australia for beef and lamb as soon as shipping conditions permitted. England and Italy are now buying in those markets. The United States, however, is the only large pork surplus Nation, and Europe, suffering for fats, with her stocks of swine greatly reduced, can consume our pork surplus readily. The beef and lamb now awaiting market on our farms and ranges must, therefore, find its outlet not overseas but at home.

"In 1918, for the first time in many years, the production of meat animals gained ground in the losing race with growth of population. This was made possible by the earnest and patriotic efforts of our live-stock producers, and unless beef and lamb consumption is now increased to its potential maximum, without needless waste, we are in danger of throwing away the advance we have made under war pressure.

PRICES COMPARED.

"It is important to present the facts concerning the prices for live stock and the prices for meat, wholesale and retail. The following comparison exhibits the decline in the prices of cattle on foot:

"Prices of medium and good beef steers on foot at Chicago.

"(Cents per pound.)

March 1, 1919	13.50–18.50
July 1, 1919	12.00–14.60
Decline	1.50– 3.90

Mean per cent decline, 14.

"Prices of choice and prime beef steers on foot at Chicago.

March 1, 1919	18.50–20.25
July 1, 1919	14.35–15.50
Decline	4.15– 4.75

Mean per cent decline, 23.

"The alleged reason for this situation is the stoppage of export for Army use abroad and the failure of civilian beef consumption to resume its normal status. The hotel and high-class family trade are not consuming the quantities of choice beef which they used before the war, and the families of moderate income are eating only cheaper cuts, the price of which must compensate in part for that of the cuts for which there is a smaller demand. The fact is evident that many persons who desire to eat more meat, especially beef and lamb, are denying themselves.

"People do not realize that the necessity for conservation of foods, especially meat, no longer exists except as a matter of reasonable economy and prevention of sinful waste. We have in prospect the greatest wheat crop in our history; we had in 1918 by far the largest production of pork we ever had, as well as a great increase in our beef, lamb, and dairy production. Yet one sees everywhere in hotels, restaurants, and dining cars the 'save food' signs, which were such a vital influence in the successful prosecution of the food campaign, and incidentally the winning of the war. These 'save food' signs should now be disregarded. Consumers are unconsciously working harm to themselves and to live-stock producers by now restricting their consumption of meat.

"This situation is a real menace to the farmer and to the consuming public as well. Many cattle raised in response to the demand for meat production for the Army are now maturing and if marketed on a falling market will cause heavy loss to the producers, with the result that declining production may be expected in the future. Stockmen do not deserve to be penalized for their patriotism but should be supported by the consuming public in an effort to restore consumption to the normal without delay.

RETAIL PRICES NOT JUSTIFIED.

"The department is aware that much of the reason for the hesitation of the average housewife to increase the amount of beef in the family diet is the excessive retail prices which now prevail. These prices are not justified by the wholesale quotations.

"The following comparison shows that retail prices have not declined in due ratio to wholesale prices. It shows also that the prices on hides have advanced very sharply, and this is a fair indication of the profits made by the packing industry on by-products:

"Wholesale prices of medium and good dressed-beef carcasses at various cities.

"The daily market reports of the Bureau of Markets show that prices of good and choice beef cattle on foot at Chicago have declined about $4 per hundredweight, or nearly 25 per cent, since March 1, while lower-grade beef cattle have declined as much as 15 per cent. During the same period wholesale dressed beef prices show, on the average, approximately a corresponding percentage of decrease, which varies, however, in different cities from about 15 per cent to 30 per cent. Hides, however, have advanced decidedly, while the cattle market has been breaking rapidly. The packer hide market at Chicago has gone from about 27 cents to 42 cents per pound, an increase of about 50 per cent. It is estimated that this offsets about 70 cents per hundredweight in the wholesale cost of beef and that increased prices of stearin, tallow, and other by-products, added to the increased prices of hides, bring the total saving on beef costs up to about a cent a pound since March 1.

"While the live cattle and wholesale dressed beef markets have gone down to the extent of 25 per cent, the price of retail beef cuts to the consumer has been at a standstill in many cities, has even increased as much as 20 per cent on some cuts in some cities, and where retail prices have been reduced the reductions usually are only from 5 to 7 cents per pound, which means only about 10 per cent reduction from prices prevailing March 1.

LEGISLATION REQUIRED.

"The department has not the time in this emergency to do more than to present these outstanding facts; but thus presented, the facts demonstrate clearly the commanding need for governmental supervision over the manufacture, sale, and distribution of meat products. Federal supervision of the interstate industry may well be accompanied by State and municipal legislation providing supervision over the intrastate and local industry, to the end that Federal, State, and municipal supervision may be correlated for the prevention of unfair dealings, speculation, and profiteering by furnishing to the public from unimpeachable sources all the facts with regard to the industry from the farm to the table, in order that both producer and consumer may have a square deal.

"In addition to presenting these facts in this manner to the American people, the department is communicating a summary of the situation to Mr. Herbert Hoover, who is in charge of the American relief administration in Europe, and inviting his advice and suggestion as to measures of immediate relief which may be put into effect here and abroad."

Provide Work for Thousands of Farmers Made Penniless Through Drought, Develop Hundreds of Thousands of Semiarid Slacker Acres into Permanently Productive Farm Lands by an Appropriation of $50,000,000, to Be Expended Under Reclamation Act for Irrigation Projects, All of which Money Is Merely Advanced on Sound Security and Eventually Returned to the United States Treasury.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL W. RIDDICK,

OF MONTANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, July 10, 1919.

Mr. RIDDICK. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 7026, which I introduced in the House of Representatives July 8, 1919, reads as follows:

A bill providing for employment for returning soldiers and sufferers from the drought by the construction of irrigation projects.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the provisions of the reclamation act in the construction of irrigation projects or units thereof, especially in drought-stricken sections, $50,000,000, the same to be reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the reclamation act: Provided, That in the matter of employment preference shall be given, so far as practicable, to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to drought-stricken farmers.

This is a measure to provide employment for sufferers from the unusual drought conditions now prevailing in sections of the Northwest by the construction of irrigation projects in that drought-stricken territory. Many of these sufferers from the drought are returned soldiers.

In this region many practical reclamation projects and units thereof that have been fully investigated, surveyed, and approved by the Interior Department are now ready to be constructed. On many of them work was begun, but was stopped on account of the war. If money can be made available, work can be begun at once.

There is an emergency need right now that employment be provided at once for the people in the drought-stricken territory of the Northwest. In parts of this territory this is the third consecutive year of crop failures. The failure this year is complete. There is no crop, no feed for stock, and no pasture. Unless some means of subsistence is found, literally thousands of farmers with their families will be compelled to abandon their farms and permit their obligations to go unpaid. This will result in a complete breakdown of business as well as of agricultural interests in large sections of territory. Hundreds of letters and telegrams from conservative citizens of that locality, including farmers and business men who are familiar with the conditions, have been received by me and by my colleagues who represent those districts, all showing that the situation is most unusual and critical and that immediate relief is necessary to prevent hardships and actual suffering by thousands of our citizens.

If this appropriation is made, it goes into the reclamation fund to be expended under the terms of that law. It is in no sense a gift or donation. It is an advance by the Government made on good security, and every cent will be paid back. The money will be used to employ thousands of farmers with their teams, preference being given to returned soldiers. The work that will be done will provide wages that will bring immediate relief for thousands of farmers who will otherwise be destitute. It will also bring a permanent asset to the agricultural interests of the Nation.

The funds advanced are secured by liens upon the lands, which are greatly increased in value by the reclamation work that will be done. The money will be paid back by those who will be benefited. This will be done. It is being done now. Up to June, 1918, construction charges that had accrued on projects already completed amounted to $6,564,752.34. Of this sum there has been repaid to the United States Treasury $6,055,928.30, leaving unpaid $508,824.04, and this amount unpaid will be collected.

In 1918 there was water available for about 1,800,000 acres of land, of which more than 1,260,000 acres were irrigated and cultivated, with 1,500,000 acres under contract for water delivery, leaving only about 240,000 acres for which water was available but not contracted for. Most, if not all, of this land was worthless and unproductive without irrigation. From it in 1917 were taken crops averaging in value over $58 per acre. Homes have been established, towns and cities built, and millions added to the taxable wealth of State and Nation. This in the end will have been done without expense to the Government.

With $50,000,000 made available now, another million acres or more of unproductive lands can be reclaimed within a short time.

A crisis will have been averted comparable to the crisis in the nineties, when fully one-half the population abandoned certain Western States, and thousands of people lost their lifetime savings, and untold suffering resulted. Labor will be employed, lands and live stock will not be abandoned or sacrificed, obligations will be met, needed food and clothing can be purchased, farming operations can be resumed, all kinds of business will be stabilized, and thousands of acres of semiarid land will be made as productive as the most costly farm land in the country. Taxable wealth will be permanently increased, and extravagant waste will be permanently stopped by the using what is now wasted water to produce millions of dollars' worth of crops annually.

This will all result and will all have been done without expense to the Government. The purpose of this appropriation in no way interferes with the objects of any soldier settlement or general land reclamation project. This is an emergency proposition, proposed with the belief that the American people, through the Congress, will as freely come to the aid of their fellow citizens who are in actual need and distress as they are to aid the necessities of peoples of foreign lands.

I might dwell at length upon the patriotism of the people of Montana and other Northwestern States, whose record stands high for volunteers, for valor in service, and for liberal contributions of money for all war purposes, despite short crops and a location that resulted in little increased business activity on account of the war such as contributed so materially to the business and wealth of many sister States, but all this is well known.

That the severity of the drought may be realized and that there may be information as to the suffering that will prevail, and which already does prevail, I quote from a few of the hundreds of letters and telegrams from my State alone that have reached me from men who are recognized as men of sound judgment and conservative in expression:

E. C. Baxter, rancher and banker, Harlowton, Mont.: "My travels in the State have been quite extensive of late. The conditions that confront us are alarming. The live-stock industry is in as desperate a condition as the farming industry. There are thousands of acres of land in this vicinity that were sowed to spring grain that has never sprouted. During my residence in the State covering a period of 27 years I have never experienced anything like it."

Harry Yaeger, banker, Great Falls, Mont.: "Crops are gone. The worst feature of the situation is the lack of pasture and feed for live stock. The greatest sufferers, and by way the largest numbers, will be among the small farmers and homesteaders who have from two to four horses and possibly a couple of cows. The great suffering will come in portions of our State unless this can be arranged for. There will be actual want of food and raiment, as well as fuel, unless assistance can be had."

Judge E. K. Cheadle, lawyer and farmer, Lewistown, Mont.: "Our hot, dry weather continues. It is unprecedented in my experience in Montana. The whole of Montana to the Rocky Mountains east is badly scorched and will be burned up if this dry, hot weather continues. On the 22d day of June only one-seventh as much water was passing the Rainbow Dam at Great Falls as was passed on the same day a year ago. Old-timers here tell me that the season of 1886 was like this one, but it did not have two dry years before it, so that this is the worst that they have ever known."

H. O. Folkestad, secretary Montana American Society of Equity, Great Falls, Mont.: "Conditions throughout the State are alarming and great suffering will follow unless some means can be found to furnish employment for farmers and their teams to give them enough to feed and clothe their families until another crop rolls around."

Roy J. Covert, banker and rancher, Billings, Mont.: "What our people need is an opportunity to work so that they may earn money. In other words, help them to help themselves. I have one farm as bare as a barn floor. This drought is unprecedented in the State."

A. L. Ritt, farmer and banker, Havre, Mont.: "This is the time for the Government to start irrigation projects in this section. This would relieve the hard strain of the past three years."

H. L. Bills, banker, business man, and farmer Lewistown, Mont.: "Our crop prospects are gone. It comes as close to being a complete crop failure as I have ever seen."

Josef Thorud, secretary Farmers' Cooperative Association, Fairfield, Mont.: "Again we have a total failure of crop, and this is our third in succession. One crop failure is severe on any State. Three in succession have brought us to a crisis. Try and provide some help."

David Hilger, business man and rancher, Lewistown, Mont.: "I regret to report that it is a complete crop failure for the whole State of Montana. Never in 52 years' residence in Montana have I seen conditions as bad as they are here now. More good can be done for this section in providing immediate employment on irrigation work than in any other way. The money thus earned will go into general circulation and help everyone at this critical time."

Jack A. Raitt, editor and publisher, Hobson, Mont.: "Everything is looking mighty bad, and our ranchers and business men are bitterly discouraged. If we could have an irrigation project started at once to furnish employment and wages, we could pull through."

L. L. Bannon, business man and farmer, Moccasin, Mont.: "The drought records of the State show no such condition in the past as we have now, and with our two dry years preceding this one conditions could not be worse."

George J. Wiedeman, business man and ranch owner, Lewistown, Mont.: "Our crops are all burned up and things look bad. The worst part of it is that neither our cattle nor sheep have range or hay. If you can find some means whereby our people may earn wages on irrigation or other projects, it will save the day for the farmer and the business man."

A. L. Rasmussen, business man, Winnett, Mont.: "Our wheat is burnt up with heat and drought. The stockmen are in need of pasture and feed. The merchants and bankers will lose as well as the farmer and stockmen unless something can be done. The best prospect is to begin immediate work on irrigation projects to provide labor for men and teams."

C. J. Baldwin, business man, Bridger, Mont.: "We are experiencing the most severe dry weather since I have been a resident of Clarks Fork Valley, which has been for 16 years. Farmers will suffer total loss and business men will lose with them."

Oliver W. Belden, lawyer, banker, ranch owner, and speaker of the Montana House of Representatives, Lewistown, Mont.: "In my 21 years residence in Montana I have never seen a condition so distressing and so acute as the condition that now confronts our farmers and stockmen. The grain crop is going to be almost a total failure. The hay and range is very short, and it now looks as though it will be necessary to ship a large portion of the live stock to some more favorable State for fall pasture and provision for the winter. We are very much in hopes that the present Congress may do something for the relief of the settlers that started in with but little capital and have already suffered two years of partial failure, followed by this year, when the failure is practically complete. It seems to me that the department should give especial attention just now to the relief of the homesteaders in our State. I am told that in northern and eastern Montana the conditions are so distressing that farmers are already required to abandon their lands, and I think we will lose a large representation from Montana this year due to this cause.

"Any service that you can render to the people of your district in presenting the matter to the Secretary and the commissioner, urging upon them immediate attention, will be very much appreciated. Just now we have under consideration a request to the governor to call the legislature together in extra session to see if the State can not take some action to provide work either on the roads and highways, or in some other public capacity, so that our farmers who have suffered from drought may have an opportunity to earn something to help tide them over the approaching winter."

Robert J. Moore, rancher and business man, Glasgow, Mont.: "What we need is an appropriation to continue the work of extending laterals. I have 960 acres all subject to irrigation, and am willing to place it under the Reclamation Service, yet there has been no money to do this work. Consequently I had to go without water this year, and my crops are a total failure, simply dried up, yet close to the ditch, in fact the ditch runs through the place, but I could get no turnout nor ditch built to any portion of the place."

W. A. Brubaker, banker and stockman, Terry, Mont.: "We have lost our crops, and our live stock is being sacrificed, and the wealth of our State materially reduced. If any action is taken for relief it must be done promptly."

The following recent statements handed me by the Secretary of the Interior and the Acting Secretary of the Department of Agriculture give valuable information as to drought conditions and as to the need both of irrigation and of furnishing employment to northwestern farmers. They also show the practicability and degree of success of irrigation in semiarid sections of the United States; also what projects are begun but not completed, and the cost necessary to complete same; also the new acreage that will be brought under irrigation. The statements express the favor with which the Secretary of the Interior and the Acting Secretary of Agriculture regard this proposed legislation at this time:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 17, 1919.

Hon. CARL W. RIDDICK,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. RIDDICK: I am in favor of the general proposal that $50 000 000 should be appropriated for completing irrigation projects now under way in the West. The reason for making this appropriation at this time would be this, in my judgment:

This money has got to be appropriated some time, for it has been established by experience that the income from the land sales and from the projects will not do this work as quickly as it should be done. We have the overhead expenses just the same now for a small amount as we would have for a much greater amount. I understand your particular interest in this matter arises out of the drought condition in Montana. We can largely increase our force on the Sun River, St. Marys River, and the Flathead Reservation, and give employment to these farmers who are so sorely stricken. For three years now the drought has hit them—worse the second year than the first and worse the third than the second. I personally endeavored to persuade some of these people five years ago that their hope lay in irrigation and went to Montana for the purpose of seeing conditions and talking with the farmers. It has taken this procession of bad years to demonstrate how little reliance could be put upon the rainfall in that State and how great the necessity for storage.

This bill should not be for the purpose of giving work to returned soldiers, because that is taken care of in the soldier settlement bills that have been presented in both Houses, and so as to avoid confusion, I suggest that you strike this out of the caption of your bill. It should be a measure entirely based upon the need for the completion of these works that are already undertaken. In my judgment, you ought not to attempt to swing this as anything for the soldiers but for your State. It is particularly of advantage to the drought-stricken farmers who can get work from it. The soldiers should have farms, and not opportunity merely to work.

Cordially, yours, FRANKLIN K. LANE.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, July 12, 1919.

Hon. CARL W. RIDDICK,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. RIDDICK: Referring to our conference of a few days ago and your note of the 11th instant with regard to the advisability of completing the construction of Government irrigation projects or units, especially in drought-stricken sections of the country, I think there can be no question that this is advisable where such work can be done immediately at reasonable costs under the existing conditions. Of course, it must not be overlooked that these costs must ultimately be paid by the purchasers of the land on these projects, and that care must therefore be exercised to hold such costs within the range which farmers can reasonably expect to pay from the proceeds of the farming of these lands in future years.

While neither your letter nor the bill, H. R. 7026, indicates what projects are directly contemplated for immediate emergency completion, several of those located in the region now suffering most severely from the prevailing drought are considered by the specialists of the department, who are informed as to the agricultural conditions there, as undoubtedly sound and promising from the agricultural standpoint if they can promptly be completed so that the land can be put under cultivation with a minimum of delay.

The drought emergency, which I understand is one of the purposes of your bill to reach by providing employment for drought-stricken farmers, is at present very acute in large portions of northern and eastern Montana as the result of the third dry season in succession, and to a less extent in portions of Idaho, Wyoming, and some other States. Recent reports from representatives of this department in Montana indicate that the failure of both fall and spring planted crops is so complete in extensive areas that thousands of farmers will be compelled to dispose of their live stock and leave their farms to secure employment if possible in other States within the next few weeks, remaining until rains occur in sufficient volume to make practicable the taking up again of their farming operations. Many of the farmers are relatively new settlers, and therefore without accumulated feed or credit which would enable them to tide over the emergency. Remunerative employment for these men and their teams in such work as that involved in irrigation-project construction activities appears to be a very practical way of enabling them to maintain themselves without charity through the existing acute emergency, so that they can be in position to again take up their farming operations when climatic conditions permit. At the same time, the increase of the area under irrigation would practically insure effective agricultural production on the additional acreage brought under irrigation by the completion of these projects.

The inclosed memorandum on the agricultural status of the projects in the Upper Missouri Basin, where the drought emergency is most acute, has been prepared in the Bureau of Plant Industry and may be of interest to you.

Very truly, yours, CLARENCE OUSLEY,
Acting Secretary.

[Memorandum on the agricultural status of Government reclamation projects in the upper Missouri Basin.]

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY,
OFFICE OF CHIEF OF BUREAU,
Washington, D. C., July 12, 1919.

Within the area in the Upper Missouri Basin now suffering from drought, the United States Reclamation Service has established seven major irrigation projects and five minor projects, of which three are chiefly on Indian reservations. The major projects are (1) the North Platte, in Nebraska and Wyoming; (2) the Bellefourche, in western South Dakota; (3) the Shoshone, in northern Wyoming; (4) the Huntley, in southern Montana; (5) the Lower Yellowstone, in eastern Montana; (6) the Milk River, in northern Montana; and (7) the Sun River, in northern Montana, west of the Milk River.

The minor projects are the Williston and Buford-Trenton, in northwestern North Dakota, and the three indian projects are in northern Montana, on the Fort Peck, Blackfeet, and Flathead Reservations.

Of the major projects listed above, the first four have proved to be very successful. The other major projects, and the minor projects, have not as yet been fully utilized though enough irrigation farming has been done on each to demonstrate that the soil and climatic conditions are favorable to crop production. In fact, experience has shown that in the favorable seasons at least, grain crops can be grown even without irrigation. This experience has been one of the factors in retarding irrigation development on these projects.

It is to be expected that as the agriculture of this northern region develops there will be found a constantly increasing need for irrigation even though in many seasons the rainfall is sufficient to permit grain production on the dry lands. The irrigated lands may come to serve as centers for producing forage and other special crops for which the dry lands are not suited. With this probability in mind, it would seem advisable to push on with such construction work as can now be put in for the storage and diversion of water and even to keep the construction of the distribution systems well in advance of actual demands. Much of this work is of relatively permanent character and its installation at the present time would serve the double purpose of furnishing employment to settlers from adjacent dry lands and of stabilizing the agriculture of the region by increasing the proportion of the irrigated land and producing more of the forage needed for the live stock of that section during the periods of drought that are likely to occur from time to time.

The people who make up the population of Montana and adjoining western States are very largely the sons and daughters of the citizens of the States in the East and the South and the Middle West.

They include large numbers of young people whose capital is largely their energy and optimism and a willingness to carve out their own future by great industry and undergoing the privations incidental to a new country.

They ask for help now, but they ask no gift nor charity.

They ask for an advancement to the reclamation fund which will furnish immediate employment to farmers, especially those owning teams, to aid them in conquering the difficulties and obstacles of this new country.

The Government will have ample security to make the transactions safe, as measured by business principles, and every cent of the loan will be returned.

That by passing this bill promptly, as an emergency measure, we will alleviate dire suffering in thousands of the homes of our own people, we will stabilize and aid business conditions for a vast number of our people who need and will greatly appreciate this aid, we will bring into permanent productivity hundreds of thousands of acres of waste or semiwaste land, and the people who will derive the most direct benefits will eventually pay the total cost of these projects which will add to the permanent wealth and prosperity of the Nation.

Conditions in the Near East.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM W. LARSEN,

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, July 17, 1919.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am in receipt of a letter from Mrs. O. A. Hinson, who a few months ago left the States and is now connected with the Caucasus Branch of the American Committee for Relief in the Near East. She is at Division Headquarters, Tiflis, the capital of Georgia, formerly, I believe, a part of Russia, but which, I understand, has recently declared itself a Republic. The letter bears date of May 14, 1919, but was only received during the present week.

Mrs. Hinson's permanent residence is in the district which I have the honor to represent. While I have no personal knowledge of the conditions concerning which she writes, I have known her intimately for the past 8 or 10 years. She is a woman of excellent character and combines with it splendid native ability and practical experience.

That portion of her letter relating to the situation is as follows:

The conditions in the Caucasus is totally beyond description. People are actually robbing the graves and eating the fleshy parts of the bodies. Mothers are killing their babies and eating them; others are drinking blood from the slaughter pens; some are living on grass; and goodness only knows how some of them are existing. People fall dead on the streets with no one to claim them. Just saw an old man fall dead this morning on the street and there was no one to lift his head. It is such a common thing the people simply passed on by and paid him no attention.

If you could only see the miserable creatures standing in our bread lines. We are only feeding 35,000 here in Tiflis alone. Practically all of them are refugees from Turkish Armenia. They simply flooded this country when the massacres began in Turkey, and have, of course, had no opportunity to go back. We are just beginning to move some of them southward, and hope, in time, to restore them to their homes, but we are handicapped because railroad transportation is so congested. Then, again, we have so many governments to contend with. The Georgian Government, with Tiflis as its capital; the Azerbeidjan, with headquarters at Baku; and the Southwestern Republic, with Kars as its capital.

Tiflis is the railroad center for the Caucasus. As long as the train is in Georgia, it is claimed by the Georgians. When it crosses the line into Azerbeidjan it is claimed by the Tartars, and when it crosses the boundary line into the Southwestern Republic it is claimed by that government—the same thing when it reaches Armenia on the south, it is owned by the Armenian Government—although it is the same railroad that comes out from Tiflis. The Georgian Government has now decreed that any food supplies bought in Georgia must remain in Georgia, so our hands are tied as far as buying anything here and sending it for the relief of Armenians in Turkish Armenia is concerned. Oh, but they (all the governments) tie us up, yet they pretend to want the people fed and sent home. They want us to get the refugees out of their country, but they won't turn a hand. Refugees from the North Caucasus are beginning to move this way, but it is impossible to say when he will ever get them home.

We are up against a huge problem—we need money and workers. We must have both to save the people. We have under our care at this time 27 orphanages in Tiflis. These children are motherless and fatherless, and some one must take care of them. If America doesn't, who will? They have no homes to go back to and no one to go with them if they did. We pick them up off the street every day regardless of the fact that our orphanages are overflowing and the children we now have haven't a change of clothing and absolutely nothing to sleep on but a board for a bed. We are having clothes made up out of the small supply of muslin we brought with us, which was, by the way, sent to last a year, and it will not be a drop in the bucket. No one dreamed when we left Constantinople that the condition here was so terrible, as it was impossible to get word out of here. We really need two hundred or three hundred workers here to handle the situation as it should be. This is saying nothing of the work in Turkey. This is for the Caucasus only. We need men of executive ability and a large office force. As it is, we are compelled to depend largely on native workers.

Minimum Wage Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. J. CHARLES LINTHICUM,

OF MARYLAND,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, July 17, 1919.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, the bill which is before us to-day, known as the minimum-wage bill (H. R. 5726), has been before Congress for several years. At the time it was first introduced $3 per day as a minimum wage seemed to many persons rather high, but since that time there has been such a change come over the world by virtue of the Great War we have just finished, the consequence of which has been the increase in the cost of everything necessary for our livelihood, and particularly the increased cost of food and clothing.

The purchasing power of money has been so largely decreased that when we speak of $3 per day as a minimum wage for our Federal employees we are then scarcely giving them a living wage. Men in the ordinary walks of life employed by firms and corporations, especially in the large cities, are receiving far more money than the minimum wage allowed in this bill.

I am heartily in favor of the passage of the bill, so that the Government at least may set an example before the employers of the country as to what is fair and just for those whom they employ. The laboring men of our country have long been neglected, and especially is this so of those receiving regular salaries. Mechanics, artisans, and others in the various occupations have had their wages increased several times. Railroad employees and men employed by the large steamship companies and other transportation individuals and corporations are all paying their men very largely increased wages and salaries. The salaried men and largely the Government employees have been caught between the rising prices of everything necessary for their livelihood and the stationary salary fixed many years ago. It has been impossible for them to maintain themselves and families, and the consequence is that while the men formerly were able to support their families it is now necessary that every boy and girl as soon as they are old enough are compelled to seek positions in order to maintain the family exchequer and to properly live. Where the increase in prices will cease, certainly no one knows at this time.

We all hope that it will decrease, but we do know that many in the Government employ are not receiving enough for the work performed and to properly maintain themselves. It is very essential that the Government of the United States pay its people a living wage. For years it has not done so, especially to those who are receiving small salaries. The men drawing large salaries have scarcely been able to get along, and those receiving small salaries have until the last year been almost entirely ignored and are even now only slightly increased.

It is highly gratifying, therefore, that this House has at last realized the necessity of this increase. I have heard a great deal of discussion about including postal employees in this bill. I should like to see them all receive proper compensation, but I am told that the postal employees' organizations are in favor of this bill as it stands, and they look to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads for fair treatment, which I am sure they will receive.

Certainly this House and the Members of this Congress are disposed to give the postal men and the various other employees of this Government fair treatment. We realize the decreased purchasing power of money. We realize that by virtue of this prices are soaring and no man can tell the end. This House does well, therefore, in giving immediate attention to this all-important measure, and it is my sincere hope and that of my colleagues that the Senate will not hesitate or delay in its prompt passage, which will surely receive the approval of the President.

Extortionate Prices — Capt. Kidd an Amateur — Congress Should Wake Up.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, July 18, 1919.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, since it has been clearly shown by the agricultural producers that the so-called daylight-saving law interferes with the maximum of production on the farms, the question gets directly back to the present unbearable high cost of living. Undoubtedly the cost of marketing food production is largely controlled by middlemen, who continue to advance prices of the things that sustain human life, notwithstanding the fact that actual war, so far as this country is concerned, ceased more than six months ago. The cry against the middlemen, or profiteers, is now wide, extended, and comes with an emphasis that can no longer be ignored. The city of Washington is a notable example of the base heartlessness of these men, who take advantage of their opportunity to extort the last dollar from the purchasing public. As an example, I have been paying 75 cents per pound for butter in this city, while at the same time, according to newspapers I receive from my district, the same article, if not better, is being sold in central Pennsylvania at 35 cents per pound.

To be specific, I notice the quotations in the Mercersburg Journal of last week that the prices in that thriving town in the Cumberland Valley are about one-half that charged here in Washington. This is clear evidence that the farmer is not getting these big profits, but that it is being combed off by the market man, who looks you squarely in the face and tells you that the top price charged here leaves him but a small margin!

I submit below an article published in the Waynesboro (Franklin County) Record-Herald of July 15, which should be ample notice that the people are aroused and will brook no further delay on our part in bringing the necessaries of life somewhere within the reach of the average wage earner, and more commensurate with the wages now paid the worker, whose first thought and concern at the present time is to be able to supply enough food for himself and family:

LABOR STARTS DRIVE AGAINST FOOD PIRATES—CHAMBERSBURG WORKERS PLACE BOYCOTT ON WATERMELONS, UNREASONABLY PRICED, AS CONGRESS WABBLES—SOME EXAMPLES OF PRICES NOW PREVAILING AND WHAT FUTURE MAY BRING FORTH.

Chambersburg labor has taken the initial step in driving the food pirates to their hole in that community.

It has placed a boycott on watermelons, which are retailing for 3 cents a pound. It is intimated other foods for which exorbitant prices are being charged will soon be blacklisted by workingmen, who have about reached their burden-bearing capacity. It is a small beginning, but only the Lord knows how gigantic may be the ending.

In commenting on the watermelon question Public Opinion this morning said: "At the present time melons are selling at 3 cents a pound retail, and an ordinary sized melon brings about 80 cents. It is stated that the wholesale price of melons is from 18 to 20 cents each, with slightly higher prices for extra fine melons."

With the war ended, business returning to normal conditions, millions of soldiers being turned back into the labor market, and everything assuming a shape which should point to more reasonable prices for food and clothing, the cost of those necessary commodities is soaring out of sight.

To the ordinary observer, who works for his money, and then takes his dollars to market and comes home with a flat and empty pocketbook, it must appear that the modern day pirates make Capt. Kidd and his cohorts of old look like amateurs.

RETAILERS POWERLESS.

Local retail merchants are as powerless as their customers. They are compelled to pay outrageous prices for everything they buy. Local grocers, clothiers, and dry-goods men state that with every order for goods they are faced with a terrific increase in price. Of course, that must be passed along to the customer, else the merchant would be compelled to close his doors.

There can be but one conclusion drawn by the worker—the man who really pays the bills. That is, that the wholesalers, the manufacturers, the heads of combines and trusts "need the money."

They know that labor is making more money than ever in the history of the country. Wages are higher to-day than ever in the history of the world. There are no laws adequate to curb these wolves, these parasites who feed on the blood of the Nation.

CONGRESS FIDDLES.

Congress is "fiddling while Rome burns." Asinine, stupid, childish arguments as to whether a thing should be called twiddledee or twiddlededum block progress in both Houses of Congress. "Great" men argue over the daylight-saving law, they squabble over the question of whether beer containing one-half of 1 per cent or 2¾ per cent alcohol is intoxicating.

In the meantime the profiteers and grafters, daylight highway robbers, are reaching into the pockets of the people and helping themselves. And no one says them nay. They don't exactly "need the money," but they "want the money," and they are getting it, leaving the poor devil who earns his dollars honestly to hold the empty bag.

"SOME" BREAKFAST.

Recently a party of Waynesborians went to Washington. They stopped at a good hotel and naturally in the morning went to the dining room for breakfast. Here they were charged 60 cents each for one-half a cantaloupe, or $1.20 for one whole melon. For boiled eggs they were charged 25 cents each. The breakfast for the party of three, one-half a cantaloupe each, some boiled eggs, coffee and toast ran near the $5 mark.

A young man and his sister went for a trip to Atlantic City. Their first evening there they attended a theater. On their way back to their hotel they stopped at a soft-drink parlor. They had each a dish of ice cream and some pastry, and the bill was $2.40. They were charged 60 cents each for ice cream, 70 cents for two or three little cakes, and 50 cents for cover service—which means placing on the table a small white cloth. The young man tipped the waiter 50 cents, which made the bill for ice cream and cake and tip $2.90.

A Waynesboro father went into a local shoe store to purchase footwear for his young son, aged 6 years. He was informed by the dealer that when he last ordered from the wholesalers 65 cents a pair had been tacked onto the price of infants' shoes. He apologized for being compelled to make the extra charge, he was ashamed of it, but in order to protect himself was compelled to make it.

Local clothiers declare they can not get the material they order, even at the advanced prices. One merchant stated recently he would be satisfied if he received 50 per cent of his order, even at the greatly advanced prices.

Almost every time a housewife purchases coffee there is an increase of from 1 to 3 cents per pound. The coffee trust is squeezing down on the retailers, acting probably on the theory that as other wholesalers are robbing the people they might as well "get theirs."

DOLLAR BUTTER NEXT.

It is freely predicted, without a blush of shame, but rather with bold effrontery, almost insultingly, that next winter butter will retail at $1 a pound, that eggs will sell at from 75 to 90 cents a dozen, that all other foods will go up in proportion.

During the war Americans learned they could live without meat on certain days in the week. If they could do without it one day, many reason they can do without it three, perhaps four, days a week. And they have been doing it.

The great barons are frantic over this abstinence of the people. Their receipts are falling off. Millions upon millions of dollars worth of meat are stacked, crowded into the refrigerating plants. People buy sparingly because of the unreasonable, exorbitant prices, so the meat barons have commenced a campaign of advertising, a national campaign, to induce the people to buy their high-priced meat. They are endeavoring to make the people forget the lesson they learned in war days, trying to create a market for their unsalable meat—unsalable only because the price is beyond the reach of the public and certainly out of all reason.

WHAT EUROPE IS DOING.

France is facing a nation-wide strike over the high cost of living. To appease the people a bill has been introduced in the Chamber of Deputies providing the death penalty for profiteers. Still the French people will not be appeased, and the Government is worried for fear the spread of Bolshevism and anarchy will overthrow the Government.

In Italy returned soldiers and workmen are confiscating the stores of shopkeepers in many cities. First they give the dealer an opportunity to make a reduction of prices, which he, of course, can not do, because he has been compelled to pay unreasonable wholesale prices. But that makes no difference. The mob spirit, born of oppression and highwaymanism, has taken hold on the Italian people, and another Government is fearful of the outcome.

A few days ago the Labor Party in England spoke. The Labor Party controls in England. It ordered Premier Lloyd-George and his cabinet to at once see to it the prices of food are reduced or to resign. They are at work on the job, because they, too, are fearful, for it is said without contradiction that Carl Marx has more followers in England than Jesus Christ, and Carl Marx does not teach love for profiteers.

CONGRESS SHOULD WAKE UP.

Labor, the workers, hold the whip hand in this and every other country. Some of them have not awakened to the fact, but it is true, nevertheless.

Chambersburg has set a good example locally.

And while labor is preparing to abstain, which is only a temporary makeshift, Congress should read the handwriting on the wall. If its Members have the sense of which they boast when seeking office, and for which many people give them credit, they will cease their quibbling and squabbling over trifling things, they will leave to the peoples of the Nation the regulation of their own morals, while they get on the job of putting to rout the rapidly increasing horde of twentieth century pirates.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOREN E. WHEELER,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, July 15, 1919,

On the provision of the sundry civil bill covering the vocational rehabilitation of our injured soldiers, which provided an appropriation of $6,000,000. Mr. MADDEN, of Illinois, moved to amend the bill by striking out the figures "$6,000,000" and inserting the figures "$8,000,000," whereupon Mr. BUCHANAN, of Texas, offered the following substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN:

"Amend the bill by striking out the figures '$6,000,000' and insert in lieu thereof the figures '$12,000,000' and add at the end of the provision, after the word 'each,' the following provision, to wit:

"'And provided further, That not more than 18 per cent of all appropriations made by Congress on this subject shall be used for the payment of salaries.'"

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, the adoption of the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] providing for an appropriation of $12,000,000 instead of $8,000,000 is in my estimation the only fair way to treat this subject. Members on both sides of the House agree that the Board for Vocational Education is being conducted along lines and in a manner deserving of only the highest praise. They all agree the work being undertaken is of vital importance to the Nation as well as to those individual members of that army of wounded soldiers, sailors, and marines who, returning to the United States, find themselves unable to compete in the fight for an honest living at home.

They were incapacitated for this fight for existence by their determination to win the fight for liberty and humanity in the trenches and on the battle fields of Europe.

Pay a visit to Walter Reed Hospital, to the camps or other places where these wounded boys gather. There you will find an army of men, formerly perfect specimens of physical manhood, some broken in health by the dreadful ordeals through which they have passed; others walking on crutches due to the loss of one or both limbs; some displaying an empty coat sleeve as mute evidence of the sincerity of their loyalty to flag and country; while still others are to be seen clinging to the arm of a guide or friend, trying to feel their way along and to picture what is going on about them. They have been blinded by enemy bullets.

Is it any wonder that they look worried? Is it any wonder that many of these boys, as I am told, cry themselves to sleep every night when they try to figure out how they are going to get along in this life, handicapped as they are? Things must look dark for them. And the spectacle of a Congress, a Congress which has been loud in its praise of the soldier, sailor, and marine who played so valiant a part in winning this war, questioning the wisdom of appropriating a few million dollars for the training of these boys to fit them for some gainful occupation in order that they may avoid becoming wards of charity, certainly can not contribute to their confidence in the future.

This is not a party issue. Republicans and Democrats are to be found on both sides of this debate. It is simply a question of whether or not we are going to be fair to those to whom we can well afford to be generous. It is simply a question of whether or not we are going to meet our duty as those boys met theirs.

Why, I have sat here, gentlemen, and witnessed this body vote to spend $27,000,000 on proposed river and harbor projects, even when the Government engineers who made an investigation reported $13,000,000 would be sufficient. I have witnessed Members voting to pour millions into useless ditches and to provide vast sums for many projects about which there was grave doubt as to their necessity.

Now, when the welfare of these poor wounded soldiers, sailors, and marines, who made the winning of the war possible, is up for consideration, I see many of my colleagues who voted for those so-called "pork-barrel" appropriations, which I have always consistently opposed, fighting to prevent an adequate sum being appropriated to carry on this great work of rehabilitation. And that, too, in spite of the fact that only a few million dollars, which our President in his veto message says are needed, are involved.

While I have no doubt Congress, as soon as it becomes apparent that this appropriation will not suffice for the great work being undertaken, will immediately provide for any deficiency, yet I believe we should at this time provide what is needed to properly train these boys. It would do more than all else to relieve the anxiety of those brave lads. They are not seeking charity. They simply want a square deal.

So why wait until later, when from all the facts and figures now available it is apparent that the sum provided in this bill will not be sufficient to carry out the work outlined by the Board for Vocational Education for the fiscal year?

In my opinion our obligation to these boys is too great to avoid meeting it at the first opportunity, and I shall vote against the amendment limiting the sum to $8,000,000 in the hope that sufficient votes will be found to make the sum carried in this bill at least $12,000,000, as proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN].

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN.

OF NEW YORK.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, July 8, 1919.

On a privileged report from the Committee on Rules calling for the immediate consideration of H. R. 6810, known as the Prohibition Enforcement Act.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the question now is whether this proposed Federal measure, defining intoxicants and making it a crime to sell light wines and beers or to make them in the family, ought to be made the subject of Federal legislation. Never before, where the Congress of the United States has passed a resolution amending the Constitution, has it attempted to follow it up by enacting a code of criminal laws to enforce it. As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] said, you did not attempt it with the fourteenth amendment and you did not do it with any other constitutional amendment. Why do you want to do it with this amendment? You entirely upset all the traditions of our Government and the whole history of constitutional amendments. It is essentially wrong for the Federal Government to undertake to enact criminal laws that ought better be left to the administration and the control of the respective States.

I desire to point out the fact that the eighteenth amendment is the only amendment that curtails human rights. A casual examination of these amendments will bear out that contention.

They prohibited the establishment of a State religion and the making of laws prohibiting the free exercise of religion, abridging the freedom of speech or the press, the right of assembly, and the right to petition for redress of grievances. They established the right of the people to keep arms, and protected the people on the other hand from having soldiers quartered upon them. They secured the right of the people in the sanctity of their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures. They protected the individual against tyrannical persecution by providing certain processes of law, and secured the defendant from being twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; saved him from being compelled to be a witness against himself, and protected him from being deprived of life, liberty, or freedom without due process of law. They gave him the right to speedy trial in criminal prosecutions by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime was committed. They gave him the right to be notified of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and entitled him to be confronted with the witnesses against him; giving him the right to compulsory process for the attendance of witnesses in his favor, and secured to him the assistance of counsel for his defense. They gave the citizen the right to trial by jury in all suits where the value in controversy shall exceed $20. They provided that excessive bail shall not be required nor excessive fines imposed nor cruel or unusual punishment inflicted.

The above provisions are embraced in the first eight articles of the Constitution, and constitute what is called the bill of rights, embodying privileges which the wisdom of mankind for several hundred years had recognized in all civilized lands, but had not fully crystallized into specific provisions of law.

Articles 9 and 10 deal with the principles governing the construction of the Constitution.

Article 9 provides that where the Constitution enumerates certain rights, the fact that such enumeration has been made shall not be construed to deny or disparage other rights retained by the people.

Article 10 was intended to protect the people in the various States from the usurpation of powers by the Federal Government not specifically delegated to it by the Constitution itself.

Article 11 limits the judicial power of the Federal Government.

Article 12 provides for the amendment of the awkward provisions of the Constitution governing the election of president and vice president, which created so much confusion in the Jefferson and Burr contest.

Article 13 was the outcome of the Civil War and prohibits slavery and involuntary servitude except for crime.

Article 14 thrust open the doors of citizenship to all persons born or naturalized in the United States.

Article 15 was intended to remove all ambiguity as to the right of citizens of the United States to vote. It was under this amendment that women claimed the right of suffrage and, in my opinion, should have been given it; but the United States Supreme Court undertook to and did construe it as not having been intended to apply to the female sex.

Article 16 authorized the imposition and collection of the income tax without apportionment among the several States.

The seventeenth amendment gave to the people and took back from the legislatures of the several States the right to elect Senators.

Looking back at all of these amendments it is impossible to find one which curtailed the rights or privileges of the people or, trespassed upon the sovereignty of the States except to enlarge individual freedom.

It remained for the eighteenth amendment to curtail personal liberty and trespass upon State rights by crystallizing into the Constitution a sumptuary law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of certain beverages.

This amendment is clearly antagonistic to the spirit of the Constitution, the principles which governed its creation and guided its gradual modification for over 130 years. It has broken ground in a new direction—establishes a new precedent which is fraught with many dangers and may lead to efforts in the future to engraft upon our Constitution further trespasses upon personal rights. It is an unhappy augury of the future that we have abandoned the wise maxim of our forefathers that the Federal Government may enlarge but shall not diminish individual liberty.

Of course, having been accepted by the requisite number of States to insure ratification, we must abide by the result. The people are assumed to be in their right mind, and clearly have the privilege to divest themselves of inherent rights, no matter how sacred. If they consent, then it is obvious that they do not esteem the rights thus surrendered as worthy of preservation.

The most that can be made of the point I here emphasize is that the amendment, being highly penal, is subject to the same careful scrutiny and rigor of construction as the courts have been accustomed to observe in the case of ordinary statutes. Having this principle in view, what is likely to be the attitude of the highest court in our land in reviewing our present attempt to define by statute any term embraced in this amendment?

When Congress initiated this amendment it could have embodied in the resolution of submission to the States any definition of the term "intoxicating liquors" that it deemed expedient. It could have made the definition as precise or as loose as it pleased. It chose to leave the meaning open. Can it be possible that the promoters of this amendment failed deliberately to be precise lest the amendment should not pass, hoping later to limit the alcoholic contents of beverages by congressional enactment? If this is so, it is manifestly a fraud upon the people. But it is a fraud by which they will never profit, for, having submitted the constitutional amendment without precisely defining its terms, I maintain that Congress has shot its bolt and is now estopped from further meddling with its destiny. Here do we stand: Congress having spoken by the passage of the resolution submitting the amendment, and the amendment in that form having been ratified by the people, we have now no right either to add or to take away. The defining of the terms of the amendment now rests with the judicial branch of the Government. It is a question of judicial construction and not of legislative opinion. It is only fair to the people of this land that they should not be tricked into ratifying an amendment, purposely vague and indefinite, in order later to enact statutes practically amending the amendment. When the people of the several States ratified the eighteenth amendment, they had a clearly defined notion in their minds as to the meaning of the term "intoxicating." They did not believe it could possibly be applied to a beverage with alcoholic contents so trifling as not to be intoxicating. To permit Congress now, or even the legislatures of the several States, to fix an arbitrary percentage of alcohol as constituting an intoxicant is to rob the judicial branch of our Government of its functions. If this assumption of power is confirmed by the Supreme Court of our country, it will be tantamount to conceding to Congress the right to amend a constitutional amendment. If the Supreme Court confirms this usurpation, we may in time see a bill introduced and passed in Congress defining the term "religion" in the first amendment to the Constitution. That amendment provides in part as follows:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

If the right of Congress to define constitutional terms by statute is once conceded, we may reasonably expect to see a bill introduced reading like this: "Any sect or aggregation of persons containing one-half per cent or more of communicants of foreign birth shall not be deemed a religion within the purview of the first amendment of the Constitution, and the practice thereof may be prohibited."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SAM RAYBURN,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, July 18, 1919.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the report of the committee headed by ex-Justice of the Supreme Court Charles E. Hughes on the Bureau of War Risk Insurance in reference to the consultation they have been having the last few days.

The report is as follows:

The advisory committee of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, formed by Director R. G. Cholmeley-Jones and headed by former Supreme Court Justice Charles Evans Hughes, to-day submitted the following report and recommendations to the director:

Hon. R. G. CHOLMELEY-JONES,
Director Bureau of War Risk Insurance, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In response to your invitation we have convened as an advisory committee for a three days' conference touching the work of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

You have not requested that we should inquire as an investigating committee into the past operations of the bureau, and, of course, it would have been impossible in the short period of our conference to conduct an investigation with respect to the payment of allotments and allowances, the determination and payment of claims, and the activities of the bureau in relation to insurance. Our conference has been solely for the purpose of giving you such counsel as we could appropriately give with respect to the future work of the bureau upon the basis of the facts you have submitted.

We have had the opportunity of listening not only to your own review of the situation but to the statements of the heads of departments, and we have been impressed with the earnestness and sincerity of those now in charge of the administration of the bureau and with the evident desire of yourself and your assistants to perfect administrative methods in every possible way.

It is manifest that the administrative difficulties in an enterprise of this magnitude are very great. The stupendous character of the undertaking may be judged by the fact that approximately forty billions of insurance have been written through the bureau upon the lives of soldiers, sailors, and marines. Under the law, the original term insurance may be converted without medical examination into ordinary life, 20-payment life, endowment maturing at the age of 62, and other usual forms of insurance, so that the Government in the interest of our soldiers, sailors, and marines in service during the great war has entered into a business enterprise of colossal proportions, which is to continue for a long period of years.

One difficulty of paramount importance at the moment lies in the fact that about 30 per cent of the addresses of discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines are found to be incorrect, and consequently notices are returned and the bureau has found itself unable to communicate with this large proportion of those for whose benefit the bureau was established. This, of course, must be immediately rectified and correct addresses secured. The remedy for this present difficulty, however, raises a broader question and we are persuaded that the bureau can not properly perform its function in furnishing suitable contact with its beneficiaries and prompt and satisfactory discharge of business, unless there is accomplished without delay a systematic decentralization so that there may be at suitable points throughout the country local representatives of the bureau through which the business in the defined districts may be transacted. This vast undertaking can not, we are persuaded, be carried out merely through correspondence with a central office in Washington. To attempt to do so would inevitably cause delays and misunderstandings and create a widespread dissatisfaction with an enterprise which to be successful must command a high degree of confidence.

It is regrettable to note that approximately three-fourths of the holders of existing policies have not continued their payments, and it is highly important that during the period allowed for reinstatement every effort should be made to bring home to our soldiers, sailors, and marines the importance of continuing their insurance which has behind it the obligation of the United States, and thus to secure to the full the advantages which it was the intention of Congress that they should enjoy.

The Government gave its term insurance virtually at cost on a basis of peace conditions—that is, upon the basis of the American experience table of mortality, without any additional charge for the war risk and without any charge for administrative expenses. Under the plan for converted insurance the Government continues to assume the burden of the expenses of administration. It is thus obvious that this insurance with the guaranty of the United States behind it should be availed of by our soldiers, sailors, and marines—an opportunity accorded to them in recognition of their service and sacrifice.

We are informed that a considerable number of applications for permanent insurance have been received. The Government is committed to the plan of permanent insurance and it is advisable, in order to prevent a possible or avoidable loss, to attract the favorable as well as the less favorable risks. The interest of the soldiers, sailors, and marines and the interest of the Government in carrying out the plan which it has undertaken may be said to coincide, and it is to be hoped that there will be a general reinstatement of policies and an acceptance by all of the exceptional opportunity for insurance at low cost which the Government has offered. To accomplish this it will be necessary to be in constant touch with the insured during the period of insurance.

We understand that it is the opinion of the bureau that some changes are desirable to make the terms of the converted policies more just in certain particulars and thus to make the policies more attractive. Thus, for example, the permitted class of persons who may be expressly designated by the insured as beneficiaries should be extended so as to include a person who has stood in loco parentis to the insured or his wife for a period of not less than a year. The proposed changes have already formed the subject of recommendations to Congress by the bureau, and doubtless will receive the most careful consideration.

We make the following recommendations:

First. We recommend that a qualified representative of the bureau be instructed to proceed immediately to the capital of each State to confer with the governor of the State for the purpose of securing the aid of the State and the officers of cities and counties in obtaining correct addresses of soldiers, sailors, and marines and their dependents residing within the State. We recommend, further, that in order to correct the address list, immediate effort be made to elicit the cooperation of all voluntary agencies available for the purpose, such as the American Red Cross, the American Federation of Labor, and the other associations which have so helpfully contributed their aid in connection with war activities.

Second. We recommend that the bureau immediately proceed to establish local representatives in each State, or in such districts as it may seem advisable to divide the country for this purpose, to the end that there may be constant provision for personal contact with the insured soldiers, sailors, and marines, and their dependents, for the procuring by them of information with respect to their privileges and obligations, for the local payment of premiums and furnishing of proofs, and for whatever local business may be conveniently transacted within the district.

Third. That the cooperation of voluntary agencies desired to meet the immediate exigencies of the bureau should be secured to the fullest extent possible, to the end that their aid may always be available for the purpose of reaching the insured.

Fourth. That in addition to the means already suggested, and the cooperation of these agencies, there should be started a publicity campaign through adequate advertising for the purpose of giving information to soldiers, sailors, and marines, and their dependents, with respect to allotments, allowances, and compensation, and for the purpose of directing attention to the importance of the reinstatement of policies and the continuance of their insurance by the soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Fifth. It is apparent that the undertaking of the Government to provide permanent insurance for the soldiers, sailors, and marines is a business undertaking which can not successfully be continued except upon business principles. We deem it of vital importance that immediate steps should be taken and appropriate legislation should be secured for the purpose of adequately organizing the bureau upon a permanent business basis, with such provision for compensation to the head of the bureau and to the experts who must be employed that men of the highest executive ability which the magnitude of the undertaking demands may always be available.

The bureau at present has been able to secure the services of experts at considerable personal sacrifice in view of the war emergency, but the Government can not contemplate the continuance of the business upon such a basis. The Government has entered a field calling for special knowledge and administrative skill, and the enterprise will not be successfully conducted unless the bureau is so equipped and supported that men of superior talent and wide experience may be called to the service.

It has been a pleasure to attend the conference at your request, and we desire to record our appreciation of the courteous response which has been made to our inquiries.

Respectfully, yours, CHARLES E. HUGHES, Chairman.

Belmont; Hannah J. Patterson; Colin H. Livingstone, president Boy Scouts of America; Livingston Farrand, chairman executive committee American Red Cross; John G. EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS H. CULLEN.
OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, July 21, 1919.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the so-called prohibition enforcement bill. As a member of the New York State Legislature I was opposed to the ratification of the original resolution amending the Federal Constitution. I have been and I still am opposed to the very principle of prohibition. My opinions upon the matter have been formulated not by any individual argument, but by an accumulation of convincing reasons, which, although familiar to most of the Members, I desire to present in a cumulative or summarized form. I am opposed to the principle of prohibition for the following reasons:

1. It is plainly a question to be submitted directly to the people of the Nation, whose personal liberties are involved.

2. It is embodied in the Constitution by the action of legislation which did not reflect the popular desire.

3. It was recommended by Congress in response to a strong agitation which arose not out of the merits of the question, but under the guise of a war emergency, which no longer exists.

4. It is a matter for State regulation, which in the past has been adequately effective under the police powers of the States.

5. It is an unwise tendency toward centralization of power in the Federal Government.

6. It is an unwarranted invasion of the police power which is inherent in the sovereignty of the States.

7. It is contrary to the first principles of our Government, which never intended to accomplish by Federal law what could be sufficiently provided for by legislative enactment of the States.

8. It is an unprecedented attempt to embody in the Federal Constitution and in the Federal law a restriction upon the private life and personal habits of the people.

9. It is an opportunity on the part of a small minority of States to coerce the remainder of the States, regardless of population.

10. It can be maintained in the Constitution by the opposition of 13 States, with an aggregate population of a little over 5,000,000, against the voice of the other 100,000,000 people in the Nation.

11. It encourages other invasions of personal rights, such as restriction upon the use of tobacco, and so forth.

12. It is a serious mistake to enforce a law when its constitutionality will be surely attacked, it being alleged that the necessary two-thirds of Congress were not present upon the adoption of the original resolution.

13. It is not a legislative question, but plainly one of morality, and it is impossible to legislate morality into a community.

14. The original resolution is defectively drawn, providing for an impossibility, namely, the concurrent power on the part of Congress and the States to enforce prohibition by appropriate legislation.

15. It drives the weak and irresponsible to the use of other stimulants and encourages drug addiction.

16. It is tantamount to actual confiscation of millions of dollars of invested capital and changes prosperous business men into bankrupts overnight.

17. It deprives the Federal Government of a huge income now collected by the internal-revenue office.

18. It deprives the various States of an immense revenue now derived from a well-regulated liquor traffic.

19. It leads to an overwhelming increase in taxation, in order to supply the State and National Governments with the money now acquired from the liquor business.

20. It leads to the illicit distillation of liquors on a large scale.

21. It is destructive of real estate values and invites financial catastrophe in the large cities.

22. It affects the poor man alone and permits the rich man to hoard a supply of liquor for consumption.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to develop any of the arguments above delineated except to address myself to the financial loss which will accrue to the State of New York and to the political subdivisions thereof. Since the 1st day of May, 1896, there has been collected under the liquor-tax law in the State of New York the tremendous sum of $376,844,678.70. How the State of New York is going to replace this revenue is beyond the possibilities of human imagination. Between the 1st day of October, 1917, and the 30th day of September, 1918, there was in like manner collected $22,616,442.77. This enormous income for one year is equivalent to the entire budgets of many of the States of the Union. It exceeds the entire appropriation of the State of New York under the last year of Gov. Odell's administration. It is more than sufficient to discharge the entire pay roll of the State of New York to-day. Deprive the State of New York of this revenue and you compel the State to add an enormous burden of taxation to a community which contributes the greatest amount to the support and maintenance of the Nation. Not only is the State of New York itself affected, but every municipal government within the State must necessarily feel the loss. Under the liquor-tax law of the State of New York, one half of the excise taxes belong to the locality in which the same are collected and the other half is paid to the credit of the general fund of the State. The enforcement of prohibition will do more to paralyze municipal government in the State of New York than can ever be effected by any other measure. In addition to this the charitable or eleemosynary system of my State is dependent to a great extent upon the moneys received as excise taxes. Let me direct your attention to some of these features as they exist in the city of New York.

Section 165 of the charter permits the retirement on a pension of honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines who in the employment of the city shall have become physically or mentally incapacitated.

Section 167 provides that the city comptroller shall pay these annuities out of the receipts of the excise moneys or liquor taxes belonging to the city of New York.

The police pension fund of the city of New York providing pensions for disabled police officers or the widows of policemen killed in the service is supported by a contribution of nearly $500,000 per year out of the excise moneys belonging to the city.

The fire department pension fund, established for the relief of disabled firemen and the widows and orphans of firemen killed in the performance of their duty, is in like manner maintained by annual donations from the city of about 15 per cent of the excise moneys belonging to the municipality.

The school-teachers' retirement fund, intended to relieve teachers who have grown old in the service of the city, is endowed annually by the city with an amount equal to 5 per cent of the excise taxes.

Under section 240 of the charter provision is made for appropriations from the excise moneys for the purpose of supporting benevolent and charitable institutions which shall aid, support, or assist the poor in the city.

The enforcement of prohibition will disorganize and possibly destroy all these charitable enterprises of New York State and City.

But there is another peril which can be appreciated best by the residents of the State of New York. Under the constitution of the State of New York the city is limited in its borrowing capacity to 10 per cent of the assessed valuation of its real estate. Financial experts now claim that the city debt limit has been reached; some claim that that limit has been passed, and that the city of New York is now being maintained on funds unconstitutionally obtained. If you take away from the city of New York the great revenue to which I have referred, you will paralyze every municipal endeavor along the lines that I have indicated, for the city of New York can not constitutionally borrow another dollar to support its institutions, much less the millions that would be required to replace the excise moneys.

What is true of the city of New York is true of every other city in the State. If you cut off the excise revenues, you will bring in unspeakable hardships, confusion, insolvency. If you deprive the State of New York of over $22,000,000 annually, the people of that State and of every other State will soon realize its effect. We certainly should go slow before we enact legislation that, to my mind, is only the thought of a small minority of our people. Let us think seriously and hold our balance—aye, let us stand firmly and solidly against this wave of fanaticism that happens upon us at this time, to the end that the people's rights and liberties shall be preserved.

Address Delivered at Winding Gulf, Raleigh County, W. Va., on July 4, 1919.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. STUART F. REED,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, July 22, 1919.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following Fourth of July address delivered by my colleague, Hon. L. S. ECHOLS:

Mr. ECHOLS. Ladies and gentlemen, we only do honor to ourselves when we celebrate the Fourth of July. We can not honor, we can not hallow, this day. No day in the year recalls to our minds more vividly the work of bringing into existence and building a new nation than this. It is the greatest Fourth of July our Nation has ever known.

Here let me make an especial reference to the Sunday schools, the Odd Fellows, and Knights of Pythias who have turned out to do us honor. I personally know something of each organization. And let me say to you, my friends, it is organizations like these that make the world fit to live in. Any man who lives up to the precepts and teachings of the two secret orders here to-day will be a good American citizen and need have no fear of the hereafter.

THE WAR.

Since we last celebrated this day the most gigantic struggle that history records has closed. The purpose of that struggle was to test whether this world in the future should be dominated by an autocracy, drunk with military power, or whether the nations should be governed in an orderly fashion by the people themselves. We are told that in a little over four years this awful conflict cost the nations engaged therein more than 20,000,000 of men, either killed or permanently disabled. It took from England alone more than 3,000,000 of men, and left for her future care 2,000,000 widows and 5,000,000 orphans.

No tongue can picture the tortures borne by those engaged in this awful conflict against a brutal, barbarous nation. We thank God that this was no fratricidal contest; no brother's hand was red with brother's blood. John J. Pershing, the leader of our mighty hosts against the Huns on the banks of the Rhine, is as near Alabama's hearts and homes as to New England's Yankee hearts. The illustrious sons of Robert E. Lee and the brave sons of Stonewall Jackson fought side by side with the noble sons of Ulysses S. Grant and William Tecumseh Sherman.

Now, as we slowly emerge from under the shadow of this horrible carnage, the world is filled with the widow's wail and the orphan's cry; but amid this wail and cry, and while the earth is yet draped in black, a light is breaking forth after the darkest hour in the world's history. The heroism of Belgium, the glory of France, the gallantry of England, and the bravery of Italy will never be fully told by the historian who attempts to record the deeds that were performed. "To add brightness to the sun or glory" to the soldiers who won this war "are both alike impossible." "In solemn awe" recall "their deeds and in their naked, deathless splendor leave them shining on."

This morning's sun sheds its beams upon 50,000 lonely American homes. There sleep to-day in the flowery fields of France more than 50,000 American boys who made the supreme sacrifice, and there are over 200,000 more who are maimed and crippled and blind, and, in addition to this, more than 70,000 died of disease, while in the military service. "There are tears for our unreturning dead," and hope and love and compassion for the boys, maimed and crippled and blind, who have returned to their fathers, their mothers, their sisters, and their brothers.

While we are in no sense a military Nation and our soldiers never fought for military glory, yet a braver set of boys never faced a foe than those that went from this land across the sea to crush the most gigantic, brutal force ever assembled under the blue sky. This was a war of home-loving people, of peaceful people, against a powerful monarchy which had for 40 years been constructing a military machine for the purpose of subjecting the world to its autocratic will. Our boys were not soldiers because they were trained in military tactics; they were not soldiers because they loved to engage in the destruction of human life; but they were soldiers because they were citizens of the greatest, best Government yet devised by the ingenuity of man. They were soldiers because they were patriots. They were patriots because they had a Government for which to live and for which to fight.

He took the American flag in his hands and marched against an army that had for more than three years held the world at bay; against an army which had swept before it the flower of France, the manhood of England, and the courage of Belgium. In the thickest of battle he knew no such word as retreat. There was never a dead American soldier found on the battle fields of the war with his back toward the enemy. He started to crush the Hindenburg line, and he never faltered or failed in his undertaking.

The American soldier is without a peer in the annals of warfare. Never did soldiers acquit themselves with more glory than the American soldiers on the battle fields of Chateau-Thierry, Belleau Wood, St. Mihiel, and the Argonne Forest. For nearly four years in the Argonne Forest, the Hun on one side of the mountain, the Frenchman on the other, stood facing each other, each fearful of the result should either make the attack. When the American Army arrived on that field she swept up the valley between the Frenchman and the Hun, and with her rapid fire and swift movement drove the Hun out of his cement nest and forced him to fight or flee. He chose the latter, and in less than 24 hours after the American Army arrived there not a single live Hun was left in his entrenchment.

We, therefore, to-day only do honor to ourselves by honoring the memory of the American soldier who fought and died on these battle fields. To-day all over this broad land, as never before in the history of the Republic, will the Sunday-school children, the patriotic societies, and the fraternal lodges gather together to pay their admiration and appreciation of our soldiers who fought beneath the flag beyond the seas.

While the war has given back our wounded and maimed soldiers, it can never give back our dead who died at St. Mihiel. We may, by care and other means, in a measure compensate those who have returned to us; but we can never compensate those who were left over there. And far beyond that, there can be no compensation to the mothers whose sons made the supreme sacrifice that civilization might live. As a token of love and sympathy, I wish I could to-day lay a flower at the feet of every mother whose son has failed to return.

We think of Washington as a statesman, yet we know that in our heart of hearts our admiration for Washington is more as a soldier than as a statesman. We think of Lee as an educator, yet we know that Lee as a soldier challenges the admiration of the world. As long as lips of love speak words of admiration, they shall never cease to do honor to our gallant soldiers who now sleep in the charnel house of death beneath the stars of France. I will close this part of my remarks with the words of Annette Kohn:

In Flanders fields, where poppies blow,
In France, where beauteous roses grow,
There let them rest—forever sleep—
While we eternal vigil keep
With our hearts' love, with our souls' prayer
For all our fallen "over there."
The morning sun will guild with light,
The stars keep holy watch at night.
The winter spread soft pall of snow,
The summer flowers about them grow,
The birds sing their sweet springtime call—
God's love and mercy guard them all.

To break away from talking about the glorious deeds of these heroic dead to a cold, practical reality that faces us to-day is no easy task. The subject assigned me is the league of nations. What I say to-day is not said for the purpose of changing your political views. It is, therefore, only fair to you to say in the beginning that I am opposed, unalterably opposed, to the ratification of the league of nations in its present form, or to any combination of governments, or any alliances, that in the future will compel this Nation to send its soldiers across the seas to the hot sands of the deserts, to the "ice hell of Siberia," to Japan, or to India to fight for a cause regardless of the righteousness of that cause.

Before going further I desire to call to your attention that part of article 11 of the proposed covenant, the league of nations, as follows:

Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the members of the league or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the whole league, and the league shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations.

In addition to this, as found in article 10:

The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league.

LOYALTY.

It would be unjust for me to say that William Howard Taft and Woodrow Wilson are not loyal and are not patriotic. It is just as unfair for them, or for those who support their views, to say that those who oppose the league are not loyal and are not patriotic.

REQUIREMENT.

What does the league require? I admit that there are many good features in it and think they ought to be preserved. On the other hand, I am so thoroughly convinced that the bad so far overbalances the good that we ought not to support the whole of it. In the first place it undertakes to put all nations upon an equality. It places Siam, Haiti, Hedjaz, and many other half-civilized nations of the world on an equality with that of the United States. It gives to Siam the same voting power in the assembly as it gives to the United States. Are you willing that Haiti, Hedjaz, and Siam, and other nations of like enlightenment shall cast the deciding vote requiring you to send your boy to South Africa or to India to fight a war in which you believe there is no righteousness on the side of the cause for which your boy must fight?

If the league of nations had been in existence in 1776, when the American Colonies declared their independence of the British Empire, then, instead of fighting Great Britain only, as soon as France came to our aid we should have been compelled to fight all the nations members of the league. If the league of nations had been in existence in 1898, when this Government went to the aid of Cuba, then we should have been compelled to fight all nations members of the league instead of Spain. If the league of nations had been in existence in 1914, when the German autocracy marshaled its forces against France, France would have been compelled to await the decision of the league before she could have raised her hand in self-defense. The Germans would have reached Paris before a blow could have been struck to save the French Republic.

SELF-DETERMINATION.

The babbling tongues for the league of nations spew forth much these days about self-determination. Under the league there can be no self-determination. As "territorial integrity" now exists it must forever exist. Independence of any people now under the control of a foreign nation is impossible. I will tell you why. Just to the north of us we have a great and rich country under the control of the British Empire. I do not raise any objection to that control, but suppose the people of Canada some time within the next thousand years should decide to sever their connection from the British Empire. A war ensues, a revolution. Although our kith and kin have mingled with Canada, our sympathies might be with her 10 to 1, the righteousness of her cause may be unquestioned, yet under the league of nations we could lend Canada no aid without involving ourselves in war with the rest of the world.

Again, there is much talk these days about self-government for Ireland. Much of the best blood that runs through patriotic veins in this land is of Irish descent. As I now recall it, about 35 per cent of the inhabitants of this land have Irish blood in their veins. There can be no self-government of Ireland under the league of nations. England knew that when she wrote article 10.

Another illustration: Suppose the great Province of Shantung that has been stolen from China should decide to return to China instead of remaining under the control of Japan, and China, with her more than 400,000,000 people, should decide to assist her. A war ensues; the league of nations steps in and decides that Shantung, although stolen from China, belongs to Japan. Will you submit to a law drafting your boy to go to Shantung and fight for a cause that he knows and you know is unjust? The taking of Shantung from China and turning it over to Japan by the Versailles conference is without defense or justification. By barter the conference steals a great, rich Province of one nation, gives it to another to secure the latter's signature to the league, and then with our blood and treasure we guarantee the "territorial integrity" of the latter nation.

This Government can not engage in war under our Constitution except by an act of Congress declaring a state of war exists. Is it possible that these half-civilized, half-barbarous nations can establish a world government that will surpass and supersede the government under which we live? So far as this Government is concerned, the only thing that I desire is that the people be given an opportunity to study the league of nations before it is forced upon them by a secret conference at Versailles. If the people of this country, when they once understand what it means, are willing to accept the terms, I shall interpose no objection.

WILL THE LEAGUE PROMOTE PEACE?

They ask you if you are in favor of a league that "will promote peace and prevent war." You answer you are; so do I. Any combination of nations that will safeguard liberty and maintain the peace of the world has my unqualified support. Any league or combination of nations that takes from the United States Congress the right to declare war takes from us our sovereignty. When our sovereignty as a Nation is surrendered, our power as a Nation is likewise surrendered. If the council of the league of nations, or the league itself, has the right to declare war, say to us when we shall or shall not engage in hostilities, then our sovereignty as a Nation is destroyed. Our forefathers wisely placed the power of declaring war in both branches of the United States Congress. Neither the council at Versailles, the President of the United States, the United States Senate, nor the league of nations can take that power, by any agreement of nations, from the Congress. Yes; I am for anything that "will promote peace and prevent war," but when this Government undertakes to settle all the disputes between the smaller, barbaric, and half-civilized nations of the earth, we undertake the very thing that will involve us in the quarrels that now infest the earth. In spite of the council at Versailles and the league, war is to-day raging in at least 18 different places in Europe. If the United States undertakes to settle all of these petty disputes, is it possible that we can evade another World War such as that through which we have gone?

It has developed in the peace conference at Versailles that Great Britain has spent her whole time and her whole energy protecting herself. The same is true of France; the same is true of Italy; the same is true of Japan. The United States is the only Government that had representatives there representing humanity instead of our Government.

RUSSIA.

There is not a mother who hears me that would be willing that her boy should go to India, China, or Japan to fight in any cause except that cause be to preserve our own independence. There is now a seething, boiling terrorism pervading the whole of Russia. No brain can picture what will be the culmination of the internal difficulties now going on there. Russia is a tremendously large nation, with more than 180,000,000 people. The area of Russia is greater than that of the United States. She has 50,000,000 more people than we have. Her difficulties are caused by her own failure to keep step with the progress of the world. No outside influence will ever be able to quell the disturbances that are now going on there. Any outside interference only intensifies them. Russia as a Government has failed. The Russian people must pay the penalty of their own indiscretion. It is not fair to the world to make it pay the penalty for the crimes that have been committed there. It can not be done.

I do not recall a single speech made by the proponents of the league of nations in which those who think first of America have not been condemned. There have been millions and millions of dollars spent for the purpose of spreading propaganda throughout this land in favor of the league of nations. A great deal of this money has been furnished by the international bankers of the world. Why? Because they love America? Choose your own answer. Not only has money been spent by the international bankers of the world to spread propaganda in behalf of this monstrous thing called the league of nations, but there has been wrenched from the taxpayers untold millions for this purpose. I submit that it is unfair to tax the people to pay for a world league that will deprive them of their sovereignty as a nation. No one pretends that if the United States joins this league of nations it will not have the burden of the world to bear, both from the standpoint of furnishing soldiers and money. We give everything; we get nothing. We lower our standard under the pretense of helping to raise the standard of the inhabitants of Siam or Hedjaz.

Who has the right to say that the American soldier fought and died on Flanders Field for a league of nations? Who has the right to say that the American soldier fought for the 14 points, of which he never heard until after the fighting was done? Who has the right to say that he fought for anything except the preservation of this Republic and as a protest against the murder of innocent children and helpless women on the high seas? Who has the right to say that he fought for the privilege of sending his son or his grandson to the remotest parts of Asia, the Fiji Islands, or to Siberia to fight for a cause that he does not believe to be just? If we adopt the league of nations, we surrender that right and place the destiny of our sons and the destiny of this Government not in the Congress of the United States, where the Constitution drafted by our forefathers placed it, but in the representatives of India, of Africa, of Japan, of Liberia, Siam, Haiti, and the rest of the half-civilized, half-barbarous nations of the earth. Would you rather the Congress of the United States, whose Members you elect, have the destiny of your son and this Government in its hands than to place it in the hands of any foreign country, however intelligent, however patriotic?

If you want the destiny of your son and the destiny of this country to remain in your hands, you want to advise your Senators in the United States Congress to reject the league of nations, or to at least so modify it as to leave the control of both of them in your hands instead of placing it where the league of nations places it. It has recently been brought to our attention that the covenant of the league of nations has been so modified as to admit Germany at an early date. There is one hope from that source, that is, that if Germany is admitted she will soon break up the league. The nature of the German people has not been changed. "So long as the world goes round" there will be international disputes. The peace of the world to-day depends as much upon free nations now as it ever did. If England, France, Italy, and America should fall out, the peace of the world would be demoralized, it does not matter if there were a dozen or a hundred leagues. Who can stop the progress of science in manufacturing the implements of destruction? Not a league of nations. It does not undertake to do so. Who can stop secret treaties between unscrupulous and even scrupulous nations? Great Britain admits to-day that she has a treaty with Japan which she refuses to abrogate. Under the league of nations, the President, the chief proponent of the league, admits that he intends to recommend to the United States Senate that in case France is again attacked by Germany that we bind ourselves to come to the aid of France. If we are permitted to enter into such a contract with France, and I make no objection thereto, then why should or how could we prevent Germany from making a similar contract with Russia and Russia likewise with Japan?

The injunction "Thou shalt not kill" has come thundering down through the ages from every forest, hill, and valley, yet that injunction has been daily broken. The league of nations may command to the members thereof "Thou shalt not war," but from the dawn of history men and nations have warred, and they will continue to do so. There is no more possibility, with human nature as it is, of preventing international disputes than there is of preventing individual disputes. In spite of the execution of men for murder, men still continue to commit murder.

If the league of nations is in effect in the year of our good Lord 1920, it will be an excuse for Germany, if she should then be a member, failing to comply with the peace treaty she has just signed. Suppose Germany immediately becomes a member of the league of nations, and suppose next year she refuses to comply with the terms of the peace treaty that she has just signed. What power on earth, under the terms of the league of nations, is there to compel her to comply with her solemn contract?

It does seem to me that even President Wilson or ex-President Taft would have intelligence enough to know that Germany does not intend to join the league of nations for the purpose of helping the world. The admission of Germany to the league of nations only complicates and confuses an already bad situation; and right here, before I overlook it, I want to direct your attention to the fact that under the terms of the league eight of the nine in the controlling body of that league known as the council will be non-American. Five members of the council have already been named. They are Japan, France, Italy, England, and the United States. This council is to be increased to nine members, but it is not at all likely another American nation will have a vote therein. There is no provision, either in the terms of the league or existing anywhere, that binds or controls the actions of these nine members. They may work by intrigue, in secret, or otherwise. Their findings may be as unjust as the attack of Germany upon Belgium, yet there is no appeal from their decision. They can vote the United States into war. They can prevent the United States from entering war in self-defense or can involve us in a world war. A good illustration of what the league might do is found in the case of taking 44,000,000 Chinese and one of the richest Provinces of China from the only democracy in the East and putting it under the control of the most tyrannical autocracy that exists upon this earth to-day.

There have been a dozen or more of leagues, alliances, and combinations of nations for the purpose of promoting peace and preventing war, yet every single league ever devised has gone to wreck for the simple reason that no legal machinery was ever provided to compel any member of such league to perform its part when the stress of war came. So it is with this league. If every American had the time and opportunity to read the many leagues and alliances that have been organized to prevent war and then reflect that each and all of them have failed, I am inclined to the opinion that the league of nations now proposed by the council at Versailles would be as unpopular in America as the War of the Rebellion is to-day, and yet you may travel this country from one end to the other and you will not find a single intelligent citizen who will express the wish that the South had succeeded.

The league of nations undertakes to say that all progress is at an end. There can be no betterment of any nation under the terms of the league, and just one nation is burdened with the task of maintaining the present territorial integrity of every other nation of the earth with its blood and its treasure, and that Nation is ours. It is not conceivable that any American ever wrote article 10 of the league of nations. The men who penned that article knew what it meant and what they were doing. Why should the burden of England's maintaining her sundry colonies throughout the world be placed upon us? Why should the burden of Japan in her effort to hold Shantung be placed upon us, or why should the burden of the maintenance of the "territorial integrity" of any nation under the sun, except our own, be placed upon us?

For the past decade we have heard the dreamers talk about the world needing builders, and yet for two years while nothing stood between this Government and ruin except the English and French Armies and the English fleet, these dreamers lulled the world into a false security by their talk of "peace at any price" and their song "I Did Not Raise My Boy to be a Soldier." Our failure to prepare for what we knew was inevitable is the blackest spot in our history. It cost us billions of dollars, thousands of lives, floods of tears, and untold agony.

Now the same people who dreamt their dreams and saw their visions are to-day undertaking to promulgate and fasten upon our sons and our son's sons this monstrous thing called the league of nations that will involve us in untold debt and everlasting controversy with the people of Europe, Asia, and the rest of the world.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

We have in this Nation what is known as the Monroe doctrine. Every school child knows what it means. In short, it is that we will permit no interference by any European or Asiatic country in questions pertaining purely to American affairs. We have cherished that doctrine for a century. It has kept us out of endless controversies and, no doubt, numerous wars. The league of nations undertakes to destroy, and does destroy, that doctrine by undertaking to define the same.

Article 21 of the league of nations contains the following:

Nothing in this covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of international engagements such as treaties of arbitration or regional understandings like the Monroe doctrine for securing the maintenance of peace.

The proponents of the league tell us that this saves the Monroe doctrine. I deny it. Who ever heard of the Monroe doctrine being termed a "treaty of arbitration"? Who ever heard of it being called an "international engagement"? The Monroe doctrine is in no sense now and never has been a "regional understanding," nor is it in any sense a "treaty of arbitration" or an "international engagement." The Monroe doctrine is a policy, an American policy, and no other kind of engagement, contract, understanding, or alliance. It has been and is to-day one of our strongest means of self-protection and self-preservation. It was never treated lightly by an American administration, no matter what its political policy was, until the present. I would rather retain the Monroe doctrine for the future guidance of America than to have all the leagues of nations that could be conceived by the Versailles conference. It is the great bulwark of American preservation. I do not care what the Monroe doctrine is called, but I am everlastingly attached to the principle of that doctrine, namely, that it is applicable only to America, and it never can be extended so as to include the world. The minute the Monroe doctrine is so extended as to include any nation beyond the seas then it ceases to be our Monroe doctrine.

If America is going to be the master of America and not sponsor for the world, then we must stick close to the Monroe doctrine, and the closer we stick the better for America.

WITHDRAWAL.

Once a member of the league of nations, always a member. I am not unmindful of a provision in the league which undertakes to say how a member once signatory thereto may be released. In the first place, at least two years' notice must be given before withdrawal can be had. In the next place, "all international obligations and all obligations under the covenant shall have been fulfilled at the time of withdrawal." Then unanimous consent must be obtained. Who is to determine when all "international obligations" have been fulfilled? Who is to determine when all "obligations" under the covenant have been fulfilled—the nation seeking withdrawal? No! But Great Britain, with her six votes, and Japan, with stolen Shantung, and then Haiti, Siam, and the rest of the half-civilized, half-barbarous nations of the earth. When do you suppose that America, the Nation which is fully intended by the terms of the covenant to bear the burdens, furnish the soldiers, the money, and the equipment to settle all the petty disputes between Asiatic and European nations, can ever obtain her withdrawal? Not for a thousand years to come.

The man who left an injunction with us to keep out of European entanglements and alliances, the man who spoke into being and put into practice the Monroe doctrine, and the men who have perpetuated that doctrine and followed the advice of Washington spoke not to us in dreams. They knew the difficulties that would result should America ever undertake to interfere in European politics. There has been no change in the politics of Europe in the last hundred years. There is as much treachery, chicanery, fighting over spoils, and greed over territory to-day as there was a hundred years ago.

NO NEED FOR HASTE.

Why this unprecedented haste for a ratification of the league? This document called the covenant of the league of nations transcends in importance any document which has ever been presented to the American people, unless it would be the Constitution, and it in some respects undertakes to modify that. A document that purports to go so far as its proponents themselves advocate, a document with such tremendous possibilities, a document about which there is so much controversy as to what it does actually mean by the statesmen of the world, and especially among our own great men, should be well considered before final ratification thereof. Yet if we are to follow the advice of the advocates of the league we are to ratify it without time to consider it for a moment. The people should be given time to consider what the consequences might be. There should be a splendid reason for every word found in a document of such far-reaching importance.

DISARMAMENT.

Mr. Taft says that an adoption of the league covenant means disarmament of the nations who are members of the league. Gen. March said, in his testimony before the Military Committee a few days ago, that we should have the largest Navy in the world; and Secretary of War Baker said, before the same committee, that our Army should be kept at 509,000 men, nearly three times the number of men that were in the Regular Army when we engaged in the World War. Why do we need this tremendous Army in time of peace? The advocates of the league tell us that we will need them to carry out our promises and contract under the league of nations; and they further admit that if the rest of the nations, members of the league, do not comply and carry out their portion of the contract that even an Army of 509,000 men will not be sufficient for us to maintain.

Who has any confidence in a contract made by Germany, by Siam, or by a dozen other of the nations who are to be members of the league?

Only a few days ago the lower branch of Congress passed a bill reducing our Army to 300,000 men. That is about twice what it was prior to our entrance into the World War. Baker says it is not enough. March says it is not enough. All of the league advocates say it is not enough. I make this solemn prediction that no sooner will we enter the league of nations than these same men will be before Congress asking for a conscription act in time of peace. Mr. Baker, one of the chief league proponents, asked for twelve hundred million dollars to carry on our military activities under the league this fiscal year. England has not only refused to reduce her navy by a single ship, but she is to-day making appropriations for a greater army and a stronger navy than she ever had at any time in her history. France and Japan are doing the same thing. Disarmament—what does it mean? If I understand what it means, it is to reduce the armies and navies of the world. The league theorists think it means to increase the armies and navies of the world.

PERSONAL OBSERVATION.

Within the past six weeks I have sat for hours in the Senate of the United States and heard discussions of the league of nations. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in so far as it is a record of matters in the Senate, is filled with debates upon this question. Most of the discussions have been upon articles 10, 11, and 16 of the league. There has never been a time in these discussions when the proponents of the league, when put to the test upon these articles, did not seek refuge in the statement that they do not mean what the language they contain implies they mean. It has been said we will be under no moral obligation to follow the advice of the council. Is this Government going to enter into a contract by which it hopes to create a world government, and then refuse to comply with the very thing that it agrees it will do? If that is what the league means, then it is a fraud; and the people who have been running this Government for more than a century and a quarter are not in the habit of perpetrating frauds upon the people of the world. We have never made an agreement that we did not carry out. May God forbid that we ever shall make such an agreement.

I belong to that class of people known as "nationalists." We have the distinction of having made this the greatest Government on earth, "a Government that stands out to-day the constant champion of those principles upon which human liberty and the peaceful development of the world are founded—grand in her splendid achievements—grander still in her hope for the future, she stands out to-day unparalleled, without precedent or example." Her people are the most loyal of any people on earth, always ready to defend her flag and her honor, no matter what political party may be in power. She never waged a war for conquest; she never sought a war for any purpose; she never faltered when war came. When international issues come she meets them square in the face. She will meet the problems of the present generation with a grim determination that no nation will outdo her in her desire to achieve justice and protect her honor. I am proud to be a citizen of such a country.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BENJAMIN F. WELTY,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, July 22, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 6810) to prohibit intoxicating beverages, and to regulate the manufacture, production, use, and sale of high-proof spirits for other than beverage purposes, and to insure an ample supply of alcohol and promote its use in scientific research and in the development of fuel, dye, and other lawful industries.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker, not having been permitted to discuss my amendment when this bill was being considered by the committee, but being permitted now to extend my remarks on the prohibition bill, I beg leave to submit my views under leave granted by the House. The amendment offered, had it been adopted, would permit farmers who have apple orchards to make cider vinegar without being prima facie guilty of the offenses under this law.

As the bill now stands no farmer can make cider vinegar without being presumed to be guilty under this section of "possessing liquor" unlawfully and for the purpose of being disposed of in violation of the provisions of this act. It is asserted that section 4 of the bill permits the manufacture of cider vinegar. The section simply has reference to "the purchase, sale, transportation, importation, exportation," but does not permit the manufacture. After enumerating the permitted articles, of which vinegar is one, the following words appear:

A person who manufactures any of the articles mentioned in this section may purchase and possess liquor for that purpose, but he shall secure permits to manufacture such articles and to purchase such liquor, give the bonds, keep the records, and make reports specified in this act and as directed by the commissioner.

There is no provision in the act permitting the manufacture of vinegar unless the farmer first procures a permit. Again, the burden of proof will be upon the person making the vinegar to prove that the cider, after it contains more than one-half of 1 per cent alcohol, was not possessed for unlawful purposes. In other words, by this act you reverse our jurisprudence.

Heretofore a person was presumed to be innocent until he was found guilty by a court or jury, but this act presumes that any person is guilty who possesses cider containing more than one-half of 1 per cent alcohol, even though he procured this for no other purpose than to manufacture vinegar. There are Members of Congress favoring this legislation who tell us that no court or jury would ever convict anyone manufacturing vinegar from fruits. That may all be true, but I hope the day will never come when the farmer will make himself liable to prosecution for making cider vinegar. This bill, if not amended, opens the doors so that anyone can be justified in swearing out a warrant against a person manufacturing cider vinegar. If it is the intent of Congress that these persons should not be prosecuted, why not protect them by inserting the word "manufacture" in section 4, or strike out the provision in section 35 placing the burden of proof upon those who make the cider vinegar?

Is it possible that persons engaged in the manufacture of chemical vinegar are attempting to create a monopoly in the manufacture of vinegar by preventing the farmer with the fruit orchards from manufacturing cider vinegar? If the friends of this bill do not want to make it odious, they should see to it that it is amended so as not to create a monopoly and that innocent persons need not fear prosecution.

Personally whenever the liquor question came up in my State I always voted dry, because of the evils constantly arising from the American saloon; but I did not vote to amend the Constitution providing for national prohibition, because I did not think that the Federal Government should take on the added burden to enforce sumptuary laws and police regulations—drag the defendant away from home, to be tried by a court who not only is a total stranger to him but passes on the weight of evidence in jury trials. Police matters have always been left with the States and their political subdivisions; and I was hoping that this reform could be brought about in harmony with our theory of Government. The fact that all but two or three States ratified the amendment justifies my belief that it would have been only a matter of time when the Nation would be dry by action of the people and not their representatives. It is not an easy matter to maintain the Government for the people so long as all wealth is being centered in Washington. All the money interests desire that the several States, with their political subdivisions, should be deprived of their sovereignty and the same transferred to the National Government, because it is not so easily accessible by the people as, for instance, a local municipal government. But since a large majority in Congress passed it and the same was ratified by all but two or three States in the Union, it becomes very essential that we should have a law to enforce this provision of the Constitution and thus not make it a dead letter.

I want to support this bill, and was hoping that the House would be patient enough to listen to a discussion of my proposed amendment, but it seems that there are Members on this floor who did not consider any amendment unless it was sanctioned by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. That a matter so vital as this should be overlooked by the Committee on the Judiciary seems surprising. That the committee of the House should have shown a spirit of prejudice in the discussion of this bill leads me to believe that for the time being some Members might have possibly been affected in their unfairness by the lawless spirit now causing the streets of the Capital to run with innocent blood, just because a few burly negroes brutally assaulted a number of white women.

I warn you that unless reason will be encouraged, you will likely pass a law which will not be enforced, because those who desire to engage in the unlawful traffic can point to provisions of the law never intended to be enforced. Because of this I propose to support the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE], which makes it unlawful for anyone to knowingly manufacture, sell, or transport intoxicating liquor, and provides a most effective machinery for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. However, if the same is not adopted, I shall support the bill, with a hope that the Senate will correct these amendments and give us a law in harmony, so that the constitutional provisions can be enforced, without bringing an odium upon our heads, by incorporating provisions in the bill never intended to be enforced by a jury or court. I am going to support some measure of enforcement, because we must have some law to enforce the constitutional amendment, and because I believe that the Senate will eliminate this matter from the bill; and if not, the President will surely veto the same, if called to his attention, which I intend doing, before the same becomes a law.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM F. STEVENSON, OF SOUTH CAROLINA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, July 23, 1919.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I will insert the proceedings in the awarding of a congressional medal to a soldier in my district who was killed on the 8th of October, it being the second medal awarded in that town of 1,500 inhabitants.

The proceedings are as follows:

THE FORT MILL LIGHT INFANTRY.

The presentation yesterday afternoon by Col. B. D. Proctor, as the representative of the President, to Mr. William L. Hall, of the congressional medal of honor won by his son, Sergt. Thomas Lee Hall, who was mortally wounded in battle in France, October 8, 1918, brings to mind the remarkable record of Company G (the Fort Mill "Light Infantry"), One hundred and eighteenth regiment, Thirtieth Division, of which Sergt. Hall was a member.

Already this highest of American awards for gallantry had been bestowed on another member of the company, and four other members had received the distinguished-service cross. Two others were cited for bravery. Where is another company in the United States that won greater distinction? Has any other company equaled its record?

HIGH HONOR PAID GALLANT SOLDIER—CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL FOR SERGT. HALL'S BRAVERY—PRESENTED TO FATHER—GEN. TYSON DESCRIBES SACRIFICES OF FORT MILL COMPANY, OF WHICH DEAD HERO WAS MEMBER.

FORT MILL, July 20.

An event occurred in Fort Mill this afternoon which establishes a record unique in the annals of the world war, at least so far as the forces of the American Army are concerned, with the presentation of a congressional medal of honor to the father of Sergt. Thomas L. Hall (W. Lee Hall), a member of the Fort Mill Light Infantry (Company G, One hundred and eighteenth Infantry, Thirtieth Division), this being the second award of this most coveted honor, the highest within the gift of the American Nation, to members of the Fort Mill company, a fact more remarkable when it is considered that only 70 of these medals were awarded the 2,000,000 men composing the American Expeditionary Forces, 6 of them to members of the regiment of which the Fort Mill company was a unit.

The presentation was made by Col. B. D. Proctor as the representative of the President of the United States, through the War Department, to the father of Sergt. Hall, to whom the medal was posthumously awarded, this heroic young soldier having been mortally wounded in action on October 8, 1918, on the battle fields of France. Few deeds in the World War equaled the heroism of Sergt. Hall, whose act, according to official citation, was calmly calculated. It was not a feat performed on the spur of a moment, but a deliberate deed of daring done in the full consciousness of the risk assumed.

LEWIS'S CITATION.

In General Orders, No. 6, issued February 8, 1919, by Maj. Gen. Lewis, of the Thirtieth Division, appears this citation with reference to Sergt. Hall:

"During the engagement near Montbrehain, October 8, 1918, this noncommissioned officer was in command of a platoon, and through his courage and initiative succeeded in knocking out a number of hostile machine-gun posts. On one occasion, while advancing with his platoon, an enemy machine-gun fire was interfering seriously with the advance of his men. Sergt. Hall discovered the enemy in a near-by shell hole and, not willing to sacrifice his men, advanced alone and wiped out the five occupants with his bayonet. Later in the day, while advancing upon another enemy machine-gun post, he was mortally wounded by machine-gun fire and later died. His skill as a leader and his conduct in the face of danger had won the admiration of all ranks."

The official record of his act, which accompanies the distinguished honor is: "For conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity above and beyond the call of duty in action with the enemy near Montbrehain, France, October 8, 1918. Having overcome two machine-gun nests under his skillful leadership, Sergt. Hall's platoon was stopped 800 yards from its final objective by machine-gun fire of particular intensity. Ordering his men to take cover in a sunken road, he advanced alone on the enemy machine-gun post and killed five members of the crew with his bayonet, and thereby made possible the further advance of the line."

CEREMONY IN PARK.

The ceremony of presentation occurred at 4 o'clock, and was made from the stand in Confederate Park. The steady rains of the past 48 hours continued to-day until after 2 o'clock, and many of those who expected to attend were unable to do so on account of the condition of the roads. About 500 people, however, were present, and the speakers were introduced by Col. Thomas B. Spratt, of the One hundred and eighteenth Infantry.

A splendid address was made by Brig. Gen. L. D. Tyson, who commanded the Fifty-ninth Brigade, Thirtieth Division. This distinguished soldier and citizen traveled several hundred miles under adverse conditions to appear on the occasion of the delivery of the medal, because, as he stated in a telegram to Col. Spratt, he "could not miss the opportunity to see and be with my boys." Gen. Tyson quoted some interesting information relative to Fort Mill to Company G as regards the part taken in the recent conflict. In the severe fighting in the early part of October of 39 native Fort Mill men in Company G 7 were killed and 22 wounded; of the whole company of 185 men, 33 were killed and 95 wounded; of the 12 sergeants, 10 were either killed or wounded.

In commenting on these facts, together with his statement that the town of Fort Mill had furnished to the United States Army during the conflict no less than 27 commissioned officers, Gen. Tyson stated that he was of the opinion that such a showing could not be duplicated throughout the whole country.

The address of General Tyson covered the whole range of the service of the Thirtieth Division during the war, and especially of the units with which he was more closely connected. It was a masterly presentation and won frequent and enthusiastic applause from his audience, which listened intently to his words for more than an hour.

Profiteering in Coal.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE HUDDLESTON,

OF ALABAMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, July 24, 1919.

STATEMENT OF HON. GEORGE HUDDLESTON, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF ALABAMA, BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON RULES, JULY 21, 1919.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I feel like trespassing for several minutes on the time of the committee because of the tremendous importance of this subject.

Mr. GARRETT. I understand that on Saturday Mr. HUDDLESTON introduced a resolution (H. Res. 183), which is before the committee, supplemental to the resolution presented by Mr. MACGREGOR.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a short resolution, and it will be placed in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

Whereas there has been a great decrease in the production of coal in the United States for the elapsed part of the current year as compared with the same portion of last year; and

Whereas there has been a lowering of the cost of production of coal since November 11, 1918, yet prices are being maintained generally throughout the United States at the maximum prices fixed by the Fuel Administration, and in some sections prices have been increased beyond such maximum prices; and

Whereas an organized propaganda is being carried on with the obvious purpose of frightening consumers into the purchase of coal at present prices under the threat of a coal shortage and higher prices, such propaganda including representations of a shortage in labor, shortage in transportation facilitities, and increased cost of production: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, directed and empowered to appoint a committee of five Representatives in Congress, which committee shall be charged with the duty to ascertain and report:

First. The origin, methods, and financiering of the propaganda herein above referred to.

Second. The cause of the decrease in production of bituminous and anthracite coal in the United States during the present year and what may be done to remedy said situation, and whether such decrease in production is due in any measure to combinations among operators, controllers, or owners of coal mines or sales agents or dealers in coal.

Third. The cause of the high prices being charged for coal, whether the same are justifiable, and to what extent, if any, such prices are affected by agreements or combinations among owners, controllers, or operators of coal mines or sales agents or dealers in coal, and whether coal price limiting legislation should be adopted.

Fourth. Whether there is danger of a shortage in coal and what may be done to avert same.

Fifth. Whether there is a combination or agreement, express or tacit, among owners, controllers, or operators of coal mines or sales agents or dealers in coal which affects the production, transportation, distribution, sale, or prices thereof.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The resolution introduced by Mr. MACGREGOR deals merely with anthracite coal, while the resolution which I have offered deals with the entire coal situation. Mr. MACGREGOR'S resolution, which is House resolution 157, resolves:

That the Speaker appoint a committee of five Members, the duty of which committee shall be to devise plans and methods, in so far as possible, to provide to the people an adequate supply of anthracite coal properly distributed and at fair prices during the winter of 1919–20, and to report to the House of Representatives such legislation or method as may or shall tend to accomplish the end in view.

The resolution which I have offered, House Resolution 183, has a much wider scope. It directs the appointment of a committee which shall be charged with the duty of investigating the whole coal question.

I have been considering offering this resolution for several weeks, and I did so on Saturday, being advised that hearings were being held on Mr. MACGREGOR'S resolution, and with the view to urging the committee to take a broader view of the situation, because it is even more acute in the bituminous-coal industry than in the anthracite industry.

BIRMINGHAM'S INTEREST IN COAL.

I live in a bituminous-coal district. I represent the Birmingham (Ala.) district, which consists solely of Jefferson County. It is the heart of the coal industry in Alabama, and produces three-fourths of the coal that is produced in Alabama, the industry being centered in that county. The people who own the mines, or control and operate them, live in that county, and the surrounding coal territory is tributary to that county. We have in my district between 15,000 and 20,000 men engaged in the production of bituminous coal, and in the Alabama field perhaps 22,000 or 23,000. The subject is of great importance to my constituents from every angle—first, the operators' standpoint; second, the standpoint of the man who digs the coal, the coal miner; and, third, the standpoint of my district as a manufacturing community. The price of coal and its supply control the prosperity of our industries, because without a reasonable price and an adequate supply there can be no prosperity among those industries. Then, fourth, I might say, are the professional and financial classes, merchants, and others who depend wholly for their prosperity upon the condition of the coal industry in that district. So that really the situation touches every man in my district except a few of the farmers.

The CHAIRMAN. Are the mines running full time?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, no. I will deal with that in a moment, if you will permit me. I know nothing about the anthracite industry beyond what is known by people generally, but I do know about the bituminous industry. I have been closely observant of it for many years. I have friends who are engaged in operating mines. I have a great many more friends who are engaged in getting the coal out. I am in close touch with the consumers of coal, and am the confidant of the retail coal dealers, so that I know something about the subject.

COAL OPERATORS' PROPAGANDA.

There is a nation-wide propaganda being carried on by the bituminous-coal operators with the clear purpose of frightening the people of the United States into stocking up on coal at its present price. Even the hearings of this committee are being used for that purpose. I have here a clipping referring to the hearings to be held before this committee which I took from a Birmingham newspaper, dated Friday, July 18, 1919. The heavy headline of the article reads:

Coal shortage is facing country. Congressional inquiry into situation is urged by operators.

Then follow statements calculated to encourage consumers to buy coal at present prices, threats of higher prices, and so forth.

The members of the committee will observe from a reading of this item that while it is put out as a regular news dispatch, it is a clear piece of propaganda. It is not a news item but an item of propaganda and put out for the purpose of furthering this propaganda that I speak of. The propaganda seems to have its origin in the National Coal Association, a combination of bituminous-coal operators, which has an office in the Commercial Bank Building in Washington. I have in my hand an expensive advertisement of nearly a half page that was recently printed in Birmingham newspapers; also appeared in papers throughout the entire country. This advertisement was followed up in some of the papers with another advertisement along similar lines. This effort is being made to bluff the people into taking coal now at the present high prices. In addition to this newspaper advertising this propaganda is being carried in news articles and in editorials. I have seen it in news articles carried in papers throughout the country, ranging from the Christian Science Monitor, which is exceedingly reliable for a newspaper, to papers of the far West. Some of it purports to emanate from the United States Bureau of Mines. I do not know what that bureau has to do with things of this kind, because the Geological Survey has the duty to collect statistics on this subject, but every little while we see a quotation from somebody connected with the Bureau of Mines, or somebody else who pretends to know, all with the evident purpose of alarming the people and causing them to buy coal.

These advertisements are nearly always preceded or followed by inspired news articles and editorials based on the advertisements and repeating their false statements. I have in mind one of the Birmingham papers, a copy of which, dated July 1, I hold in my hand, which carries in big headlines in the most conspicuous place on its front page: "Birmingham in grip of domestic fuel famine, despite summer heat," followed by similar arguments to those put forth in the advertisements of the National Coal Association.

That gives you some idea as to the news articles being carried in the newspapers. In the editorial column of the same issue of this Birmingham paper there is an editorial with the sensational head, "Buy winter's coal now or suffer later on," repeating the deceitful statements of the National Coal Association.

By a remarkable coincidence the very next issue of this newspaper carried this expensive advertisement of the National Coal Association, which, of course, was well paid for.

In the advertisements, special articles, and editorials which are being printed as a part of the "buy-coal-now" propaganda there is the deliberate purpose to give official color to the propaganda. Numerous purported quotations of Government officials are made. In some instances there is the representation of authorized governmental approval of the statements. Everybody ought to know, but perhaps some do not, that no official of the Government can properly lend himself to this propaganda, or has any authority to give it countenance.

FALSE STATEMENTS.

This statement is made in the advertisement of the National Coal Association:

Forty thousand foreign-born miners are returning to Europe. There is virtually no immigration, consequently the men can not be replaced. Their departure alone means a reduction of 40,000,000 tons in the coal output of the year—20,000,000 tons for the remainder of 1919.

This is absolutely false as a statement of fact. The number of alien miners returning to Europe is grossly exaggerated. Thousands of discharged soldiers are returning to their former occupation as miners—thousands more than the immigrant miners who are returning home—thousands of soldier miners, who can not get work because the mines are not going. A few hundred immigrant miners are returning home because work is slack; that is all. I have just received the following letter from Director General Densmore, of the United States Employment Service, which shows how false the advertisement is:

MY DEAR MR. HUDDLESTON:

1. Acknowledgment is made of your communication under date of July 12, in which you requested information regarding labor conditions in the coal-mining industry.

2. There are approximately 1,000,000 men employed in and around the bituminous and anthracite coal mines. Ever since the armistice was signed thousands of miners have been idle. Unemployment has been keenly felt in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and the southwestern districts. Production of bituminous coal has decreased for the period ending June 28, 1919, from 212,000,000 as compared with 284,000,000 for the same period in 1918 and the production of anthracite coal from 49,000,000 to 38,000,000 tons.

3. This is due to the fact that coal mines have been shut down and thousands of men have been forced out of employment. The coal operators allege that this idleness is caused because there has been no market for coal.

4. Unemployment in certain sections of Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio is such as to create distress and want among a large number of miners and their families.

5. There are approximately the same number of men employed in and around the coal mines now as there were in 1918. In some sections, due to idleness, Italians and Slavs from Europe have returned to their native land, but this has been offset by the return of thousands of men who served in the Army and Navy during the war.

Very truly, yours,

J. B. DENSMORE,
Director General.

Another misleading statement made in the advertisement is:

The movement of crops is impending. When that begins the opportunity to make up the shortage in coal will be gone. Cars and motive power must be shared with grain and other export products.

Coal can not be stored at the mines; its production must keep pace with the capacity of cars turned over to the mine operators. Cars can not be sent to the mines unless the coal has been ordered. The orders must come from you, the coal user.

The true facts as to the coal transportation situation are shown by a letter, dated July 19, 1919, which I received from W. T. Tyler, Director of Division of Operation, United States Railroad Administration, from which I quote:

Estimated by the Geological Survey as the bituminous coal production necessary to satisfy the country's requirements in the calendar year 1919, 500,000,000 tons; produced up to and including July 5, 220,000,000 tons. Balance necessary to produce in the remaining six months, 280,000,000 tons, or almost 11,000,000 tons per week.

The low production in the present year thus far is due almost entirely to lack of market. This is amply shown by the weekly reports of the Geological Survey, which for months past have shown that the mines have lost 30 to 40 per cent of working time on account of no market, while the loss on account of car shortage has never reached 5 per cent and seldom went over 3 per cent. The low production in 1919 is the direct result of this condition, and is emphasized by the fact that up to the same date—July 5—the production in 1918 was 295,000,000 tons.

The fact is that the railroads are in much better shape than they were for several years preceding the war. We now have more than 4,000 locomotives in good repair stored and ready for service, whereas at no time during the two years preceding the war did any such condition exist. There are on the railroads under Federal control 975,851 coal cars, and during the week of June 14, 1919, the average in bad order was only 9 per cent, and this 9 per cent included a large number of light coal cars actually withdrawn from service but not taken off the books. The system adopted by the Railroad Administration classes cars as being in bad order when they are undergoing only light repairs as well as heavy repairs. While figures on the same basis are not available for the years preceding the war, there can be no question but what the situation in this respect is more favorable now than it was then.

The coal operators' propaganda emphasizes the fact that France desires to buy 1,000,000 tons of coal in America. This is piffle. One million tons is nothing compared to our total annual production of over 500,000,000 tons.

The operators threaten higher coal prices. Why should the prices go higher? Wages are not being increased. Mine rails, timbers, and other mine supplies are cheaper. Why an increase in prices? There will be none, unless there is criminal profiteering.

I agree that one item of the propaganda may prove true. We may have a coal shortage. The prices being demanded by coal operators are so high that the people will not buy. Consumers of domestic coal must eventually have coal, and it may be that later on they will have to buy it at the operators' price. This is what I am protesting against. The sufferings of the people should not be exploited for the benefit of the operators. The people should not be forced to make a choice between suffering from a coal shortage and buying at extortionate prices.

These are the methods of propaganda being used throughout the country at large and are worthy of the committee's attention.

COAL MINES SHOULD BE OPERATED.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. HUDDLESTON, do you think it important, or otherwise, that the mines should be operated during the summer in order to produce coal for the ensuing winter?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do, indeed. That is the object of all my efforts in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you suggest any way of getting the mines to resume a production that will help to meet the necessities of the American people next winter?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have tried to reach that very matter by a bill which I have introduced (H. R. 7196). The object of my bill is to force the operators to run their mines for the double purpose of preventing a coal shortage which may cause suffering next winter and to provide work for their employees, who are depending on their wages for bread. I am willing to allow the operators a fair profit, and believe that they will get it by charging not more than the Fuel Administration's maximum prices. But on that point they could well afford to run for a few months on little or no profit, for without doubt they have made big money during the war:

Be it enacted, etc., That, by reason of the recent existence of a state of war, it is essential for the national security and defense and for the restoration of peace and order, to insure an adequate supply of fuel and the equitable distribution and the sale thereof at reasonable prices, and to facilitate the movement of fuel and to prevent scarcity, monopolization, hoarding, injurious speculations, manipulations, and controls affecting the supply, distribution, and movement thereof.

SEC. 2. That the words used in this act shall be construed to import the plural or the singular as the case demands. The word "person" wherever used in this act shall include persons, firms, associations, and corporations. The words "sales agents" shall include persons, firms, corporations, and associations selling coal or coke for hire or for a commission, or buying and reselling coal or coke as brokers or without unloading same on their yards. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any person, firm, association, or corporation within the scope of his employment or office shall in every case also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such person, firm, association, or corporation, as well as that of such person.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall cease to be in effect at the expiration of five years after the date of the termination of the war between the United States and Germany as same shall be ascertained and proclaimed by the President under section 24 of the act approved August 10, 1917, known as public law No. 41, Sixty-fifth Congress, but the termination of this act shall not affect any act done or any right or obligation accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil case before the said termination pursuant to this act; but all rights and liabilities under this act arising before its termination shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if the act had not terminated. Any offense committed and all penalties, forfeitures, or liabilities incurred prior to such termination may be prosecuted or punished in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been terminated.

SEC. 4. That any willful violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person not a retail dealer actually delivering same from yards to sell or offer for sale, directly or indirectly, any coal or coke in quantity in excess of 15 tons, at a price greater than the maximum price which may have been fixed thereon by the President or under his direction under section 25 of the act approved August 10, 1917, known as Public Law No. 41, Sixty-fifth Congress, plus any amount which such person may have actually paid or incurred for the transportation of such coal or coke.

SEC. 6. That it shall be unlawful for any producer or dealer in coal or coke, other than a retail dealer actually delivering same from yards, to willfully refuse to sell or deliver coal or coke to any person offering to buy same at the maximum price therefor as mentioned in section 5 of this act, but this shall not prevent such producer or dealer from selling at less than said maximum price.

SEC. 7. That it shall be unlawful for any person to willfully fail to operate to its full capacity any coal mine owned, operated, or controlled by him when its product may be sold at the maximum price mentioned in section 5 hereof, or to refuse to sell the product thereof to consumers or retail dealers, or to unreasonably discriminate among persons who may desire to purchase such product, or to agree with other persons to sell the product of said mine exclusively to sales agents for resale; or, being a sales agent or the owner, operator, or controller of a coal mine, to agree with any person to in any way limit the output of a coal mine, to fix a price on coal, or to limit in any way the production, distribution, transportation, or sale of coal.

SEC. 8. That this act shall not have effect to repeal the act approved August 10, 1917, nor any other existing law, but shall be construed as a cumulative remedy for the evils and practices set forth herein.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. My bill provides that the Fuel Administration's maximum prices shall continue to be the maximum prices for the next five years, and further provides that every operator of a coal mine shall operate his mine to full capacity so long as he can sell the output at the Fuel Administration's maximum price. This bill also forbids all kinds of combinations among operators, dealers, and sales agents which would affect the output and the sale of coal. That bill has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SNELL. Would your bill necessitate a man's selling his coal at a certain price, regardless of what it cost?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. My bill would necessitate that not exceeding the maximum price fixed by the Fuel Administration should be charged for the coal.

Mr. SNELL. What if conditions were such that he could not produce it for that?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Before passing the bill it is incumbent upon Congress to go into the question of cost and see whether he can do it or not. That is the purpose of the investigation I am asking. I have some facts as to costs of production which I shall give to the committee.

A CONSPIRACY TO MAINTAIN PRICES.

Mr. POU. It seems that one reason for the shutting down of the mines is the absolute scarcity of labor.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I want to correct that impression. The letter from the director general of the Employment Service shows beyond question that there is no shortage of labor. The decrease in production is due wholly to other causes. The reports of the Geological Survey show that. The operators say there is "no market." I say there is no market because the prices are too high. There is no doubt but that there is a combination, either express or implied, or in some kind of fashion, among the men who have to do with the production and distribution of coal—bituminous coal. I would say first, and it seems highly probable anthracite—to maintain prices and perhaps also to restrict production. I brought this matter to the attention of the Attorney General several weeks ago and urged that an investigation be made by him with a view to ascertaining whether the laws are not being violated.

The CHAIRMAN. By the operators urging people to buy coal now?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No; that is not a violation of law, but agreeing among themselves to maintain prices, to limit production, or to limit transportation or affect distribution would be a violation of law.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it your contention that the operators are responsible for the suspension of the production of coal in the bituminous coal fields?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That does not necessarily follow. The restriction, it seems to me, comes on account of the high price being demanded for the coal. The consumers know it is too high and will not buy the coal.

The Attorney General—I may say to my surprise and without any such intention on my part—referred my request for an investigation to the district attorney of my own district, instructing him to investigate there. My district produces only about 5 per cent of the bituminous coal produced throughout the country—a very small part of it, comparatively speaking. I had expected that the Attorney General would begin at the head of the thing—we will say with the National Coal Association—to find out if there is not an agreement over the country at large as to what is being done; of course I expected that inquiry to include my district. The investigation is now going on, and I am hoping for some results.

Now, there has been a great decrease in production, and I may say that that decrease is in anthracite as well as bituminous coal. I have in my hand the latest statement issued by the Geological Survey, which bureau is charged with the collection of statistics on the subject of coal. It is dated July 12, and as to bituminous coal the statement is this:

> The production of bituminous coal in the week ended July 5 is estimated at 7,469,000 net tons, an average per day for the five working days of 1,494,000 tons, compared with an average per day of 1,576,000 tons in the previous week, as against 2,050,000 tons in the week ended July 6, 1918. The production for the calendar year to date was 220,361,000 tons, nearly 74,500,000 tons less than in the corresponding period last year. The average daily production, considering only working days, has been about 500,000 tons less this year than last year.

The figures given are taken from the latest reports available, July 5. To that time 220,361,000 tons had been produced as against 294,837,000 tons for the same period in 1918. Now, as to anthracite coal, the production up to July 5 of this year is 40,204,000 tons, while for the same period of last year it was 50,812,000 tons, being 10,000,000 tons short in the production of anthracite up to July 5. The production of anthracite for the week ended July 5 was 1,408,000 tons of anthracite as against 1,735,000 tons of anthracite for the corresponding week in 1918.

The CHAIRMAN. I will say to you at this point that gentlemen have appeared before this committee and said—representing both anthracite and bituminous coal—that they were selling all the coal that the consuming public would take.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do not doubt that, and I wish to call further attention to my own district. The production for the week ending June 21 was 69 per cent of capacity, and for June 28 it was 74 per cent of capacity.

The previous witness stated, as I understood, that in the production of anthracite coal at this particular time, as compared with 1918, there was no shortage, while this statement shows that for the week ending on July 5 the production was 327,000 less than for the corresponding week of 1918. I know nothing about this of my own knowledge; I am merely using these reports of the Geological Survey. I have here a letter from Director Smith, of the Geological Survey, dated July 17, from which I quote. He says:

> The information contained in the weekly bulletins, particularly that in the table on page 3, each week shows that the reason for the decrease in the production of bituminous coal is lack of market, or "no demand," as it is classified in that table. The same is true for the anthracite, although the details have not been compiled in the same manner as for bituminous coal.

There is a great decrease in production. That decrease is due primarily to lack of demand for the coal, and that lack of demand is due to the high prices being demanded by the coal operators for their product. I make that assertion dogmatically, but, of course, I am merely expressing my opinion, based on data which I have collected.

COAL PRICES ARE TOO HIGH.

Mr. POU. And the high price demanded is within the maximum set by the Government?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The price demanded exceeds the maximum fixed by the Fuel Administration in many sections; it exceeds the maximum in my own district.

Now, as to the maximum price fixed by the Fuel Administration. I have in my hand publication No. 29 of the United States Fuel Administration, dated September 22, 1918, which gives a statement as to how prices were fixed on bituminous coal. These prices, fixed on bituminous coal—as anyone who reads this document will conclude—were extremely favorable to the operators. They allowed handsome profits. In the first place, the operators were called upon by the Federal Trade Commission for statements as to their costs. Of course, they knew what the statements were being obtained for, and the statements were very largely made, as they show for themselves, with a view to swelling the costs. It is easy enough for anybody connected with the coal industry to swell his showing of costs. He can add in a lot of things, and so on, and it is very difficult indeed to catch up with it. These statements were collected by the Federal Trade Commission for the purpose of fixing coal prices. The statements were turned over to the Fuel Administration, and there they were taken up by men who were themselves connected with the coal industry. I want to say now that the Fuel Administration's activities—and I realize that this is a very severe criticism—seem to have been carried on always from the standpoint of the coal operators. I know this was especially so in my district. In fixing the price the Fuel Administration acted upon these figures given by the coal operators themselves and allowed them large profits upon the operators' own representations as to their costs of production. This is obvious from publication No. 29 itself, for it shows that 84 per cent of the coal averaged in cost f. o. b. mines only $1.69.

The CHAIRMAN. How does the increase in the cost of coal compare with the increase in the cost of other necessities in that section of the country—cotton, wheat, meats, shoes, and other elements that enter into the necessities of life?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is a big and important question. The average increase to the present in the cost of the necessaries of life in my section, in yours, and over the country as a whole, as compared with 1914 is 82 per cent. In other words, what you could buy in 1914 for $1 in the way of food, shelter, clothing, and other things that the working man has to buy he must now pay $1.82 for.

The CHAIRMAN. How does the cost of coal compare with that average?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. To give you some specific figures, I will say this: In my district we have a number of seams of coal, and the price varies according to the quality of the coal. We will take what we call the Black Creek seam, which is the best steam coal we have in the district and the highest-priced coal that is ordinarily used for steam purposes; in 1914 that coal was being loaded on the cars and sold f. o. b. at from $1.10 to $1.45 per ton, run of the mine. I know what I am talking about; this is not a guess. Most of that coal was sold in 1914 for $1.15, $1.25, and $1.35 f. o. b. mines.

The CHAIRMAN. In what year was that?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That was in 1914. The Fuel Administration's maximum war price on that coal was $3.45, but you can not buy any of it now at that price; it is actually selling now at from $3.75 to $4.50, and there has been a corresponding advance in various other kinds of coal. I hold in my hand a letter from the Fuel Administrator, dated June 25, 1919, giving the maximum Fuel Administration prices for various kinds of coal, in which he says:

Replying to your letter of the 21st instant, we beg to say that prices named by the United States Fuel Administration were maximum prices and were all based on mine costs. The following, effective August 23, 1918, were the last f. o. b. mine prices allocated to the respective grades to enable the industry to obtain a reasonable realization on its run-of-mine output, namely:

	Run of mine.	Prepared.	Screenings.
Big Seam Group	$2.45	$2.75	$2.40
Cahaba	3.45	3.75	3.10
Pratt-Jagger Group	3.85	3.05	3.45
Helena Harkness Group	2.90	3.20	2.70
Climax	4.60	4.85	2.50

Cahaba, which is largely a domestic coal, with Fuel Administration's maximum price, $3.75 for lump, is now sold at $4.20. Climax, maximum $4.85, now sells at $5.50. Pratt-Jagger, maximum price $3.05, is being sold at from $3.50 to $4.50.

The poorest coal we have in that district is what we call the Big Seam; it is a dirty coal and has to be washed; in 1914 it sold f. o. b. mines from 90 cents to $1.20; the Fuel Administration maximum was $2.45, but it is now selling at from $2.50 to $2.75. The increase in prices that the operators are now receiving in my district, as compared to 1914, ranges from 100 to 200 per cent.

PRICES MORE THAN DOUBLED.

The CHAIRMAN. That much of an increase?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes; that much of an increase. In 1914 the miners in my district were being paid on the Pratt basis 57½ cents a ton for mining coal.

The CHAIRMAN. What are the miners paid now?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will get to that. I may say that the United States Steel Corporation is the principal producer of coal in my district; they consume in their manufacturing operations practically all they produce; however, whatever wages they pay to miners other operators are eventually compelled to pay, so as to meet competition. They have given the miners, since 1914, increases from time to time of 5 per cent, 10 per cent, and so on, until now the price on the Pratt basis is 85 cents, an increase of 27½ cents to the miner, while the miner is compelled to pay an 82 per cent increase for his cost of living. The miner gets an increase of only 47 per cent in his wages—that is what it figures out—while the operator has increased his price from 100 to 200 per cent. I would say 150 per cent would be a conservative average.

The CHAIRMAN. Where do you get those figures, from the mines in your district?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes; I am referring to my district. There is not any doubt in the world but that the Fuel Administration's maximum price to the coal operator yielded him at the time it was given in 1917 not less than $1 a ton more in the way of profit than he had been receiving in 1914.

Mr. SNELL. This applies purely to bituminous coal?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It applies to my district, which produces only bituminous coal. This intimate knowledge of the situation that enables me to speak with such confidence, of course, could not exist with reference to any other field.

Mr. POU. It would seem that the Attorney General was not very far wrong in referring the matter to the district attorney of your district?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think it is a mistake to assume that one field that has a very limited production and a limited market is a fair test for the country over.

Mr. POU. I think you are right—that he ought to look at it from the standpoint of the country at large.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I replied to the Attorney General, and urged that he conduct a nation-wide investigation. Only last week I called his attention to the fact that the National Coal Association was having a meeting in Kansas City of coal operators from the country over, and urged him to find out what they were doing at these meetings and what the purposes of the association are. I will say this: In my district I believe that higher prices are being demanded than in the neighboring fields of Tennessee, Kentucky, and West Virginia, because my operators are losing a great deal of business to those fields. The coal purchasing agent of the Southern Railway told me 10 days or so ago that he had withdrawn his orders from Alabama territory and would not send any more there, because the operators were demanding full Fuel Administration prices, which he considered too high. I then asked him: "Do you not find other operators in other fields just as greedy?" He said: "They are greedy everywhere, but they are more extortionate in your field than they are elsewhere."

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). How much of the time are the mines running now in your district?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I had a letter from a coal-digger friend of mine on last Saturday saying that he was getting work only one day a week. It is impossible for me to generalize, because you will realize that some of the mines are running every day, some of them are shut down, while others are on half time, and so on, so that it is not possible to say with any degree of exactness.

ONLY 60 PER CENT PRODUCTION.

The CHAIRMAN. In any event, the mines are not running to exceed three-fourths of the time?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In my district the production is 60 per cent of capacity for the elapsed part of the year 1919.

Bituminous coal is of two kinds, not necessarily in quality, but in use; one is commercial coal and the other coking coal. More than half the coal produced in my district is used for coking purposes, which, in turn, is used in manufacturing iron, steel, and so on. The big steel and iron companies produce their own coal from their own mines and use their own coke ovens for their manufacturing purposes. Commercial coal, in turn, has two uses—one steam coal, the other domestic coal.

These are facts of general application. In order to understand the coal situation, you must bear these facts in mind. Now, as has been stated with reference to the anthracite-coal industry, the demand for steam coal has a relation to the production of domestic coal. Steam coal is always the run of the mine or worse—that is to say, it is either the coal as loaded on the cars by the miners or it is that coal with the lumps taken out. Mines devoted primarily to the production of domestic coal screen the coal, taking out the lumps, and sell the lower grades for steam purposes. Where they have no demand for this steam coal they frequently do not produce the domestic coal. The demand for steam coal is so low, due to high prices and the falling off in consumption by the railroads and in the use by other people who use steam coal that these mines can not produce domestic coal; they have not got it to sell, and they can not supply the demand. The retail dealers in my city can not get coal.

The CHAIRMAN. Have any industries in your section of the country suspended operations during the last few months that were large users of coal?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The large users of coal in my district are the iron-producing concerns. Out of 45 iron blast furnaces only 18 are now in operation.

Mr. SNELL. I understood you to say that the United States Steel Corporation produced most of the coal that it uses.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Then it does not make much difference what the price is if they produce it and use it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It would make quite a difference to them if the price represented the cost of production, for it would go into the cost of their iron and steel. I am not after the Tennessee company, which is the local branch of the United States Steel Corporation, about coal prices, because they do not produce coal to sell to others; I am after the men who produce coal for commercial purposes, and put such a big price on it that the people can not buy it for domestic use or for steam purposes. I want them to run their mines so as to give men work and so there will be no suffering for coal next winter.

Mr. SNELL. Have any plants actually shut down because of the high price of coal?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would not say for that cause exclusively.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there not a suspension of coal operations or activities in every coal field of the country?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. So that the condition does not apply to your district solely?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The consumers of coal that formerly purchased in your district are not coming to my district to get it, although that is as large a coal district as yours, or larger.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have boasted that I represented more coal diggers than anybody else in Congress. It may be that you are entitled to that credit; but if you are not sure of your number, I would like to match mine against yours. The consumers are not going to your district.

The CHAIRMAN. No; because the coal operators in my district are endeavoring to sell coal now and can not find a market. The mines are idle nearly half the time.

INDUSTRY DEADLOCKED AGAINST ITSELF.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I believe if you will investigate the facts you will find that your operators are endeavoring to sell coal by scaring the people by talking about a shortage, and a lot of stuff like that, instead of trying to create business by making proper prices. That is what they are doing in my district. The trouble to-day, in my opinion, is that the industries of the United States are deadlocked against themselves on account of extortionate prices. I do not know of any other word that ought to be used in that connection; that is the cause for the existing general business depression and idleness. It is caused by the extortionate prices being demanded for raw materials. Of course, I mean by that for such fundamental commodities as coal, iron——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Cotton.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes; cotton, wheat, oil, steel, lumber, etc., that other things are made out of. The people who produce them have made a pocket full of money during the war and they are not willing to go back to prewar profits. They are holding the prices up, and the result is that we are not doing business in this country. Just to give an illustration, during the first three months of 1919 the railroads consumed 4,752,697 tons of coal less than for the same months of 1918. They are consumers of bituminous coal, but they are not using as much coal, because they do not need it. They are not using anybody's coal. Why are they not using it? It is because the transportation of commodities has fallen off. They are not hauling lumber, coal, steel, iron, and so on, and therefore they do not need coal. The man who owns a plant does not start it up. He was engaged in war work, which has stopped, and he does not start up because of the excessive cost of coal and other materials. A man wants to build a house, but he does not build it because of the cost of nails and other materials. Paint, for instance, sells for from $3.50 to $4 per gallon. All of those things are kept up at such high prices that business is stopped.

Labor has increased in cost, but it would be preposterous to expect a man using his muscle and skill in building a house to reduce the price of his labor when, with the proceeds of his day's work, he can buy to-day only from 60 to 80 per cent of what a day's wages would buy of the necessaries of life in 1914. The man who is laboring can not bring down the cost of his labor until you reduce the cost of living. He is a manufacturer himself. He manufactures muscle which he uses in labor, and bread, meat, house rent, and one thing after another enter into the cost of that product. Necessarily, he must use those raw materials. You must bring down the price of the materials of living, just as you should bring down the cost of steel. Do you expect a man who is making nails out of steel at the present prices to sell his nails at the 1914 prices? He can not do it. No more can a workingman paying present prices for the necessaries of life reduce the cost of his labor. Therefore you must strike first at the great basic commodities and in that way control prices.

The CHAIRMAN. Where would you suggest that the reduction should begin?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would suggest that it should begin first with such things as coal and iron. Those are the two great commodities produced in my district; they are what my people live on; yet that fact does not blind my eyes to the general public welfare. I am not so selfish that I would desire the advantage of my constituents to stand in the way of the welfare of the people of the whole country.

The CHAIRMAN. How would you suggest that the reductions in prices be brought about?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. By a thoroughgoing system of price fixing which would include not merely raw materials but all of the common necessaries of life. We have got to do that or conditions may arise in this country that are not pleasant.

The CHAIRMAN. Could you force production to meet the demands of consumption if the cost of production was to be the price fixed?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No; of course, I would not have the price fixed below the cost of the production, but I would have a price fixed that would allow a reasonable profit only. A few minutes ago the chairman referred to the high price of cotton; I want to say that in no other product is there a greater profit between the producer and the consumer. The manufacturer of cotton, the jobber, the retailer of cotton goods, and everybody who touches cotton are eating the people alive.

Mr. POU. Cotton is bought for 35 cents per pound and is sold for $5 per pound.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The profits are enormous. The men who are buying cotton are now paying 35 cents per pound to the farmers, but the price that you must pay for that cotton in the form of a shirt is on a basis of something above $1 per pound for the raw cotton. That is after allowing every expense that is involved, including the wages, cost of distribution, and everything else.

Mr. POU. I did not mean that they got $5 per pound for it, as a rule, but there are numerous instances in which they do get that.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes. There is a disposition on the part of these profiteers—and that is exactly what they are—to lay it all on the workingman. The chairman will pardon me for suggesting that it was unfortunate for him to make that suggestion with reference to the cost of building——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). It was not unfortunate. I did not state where the cause lay.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But there was an intimation in what the chairman said that the price of labor was keeping building back.

INCREASE IN WAGES HAS NOT EQUALED INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING.

I made an investigation of this subject and collected statistics from many different sources as of the date of November 11, 1918. I found that the average increase in wages to labor of all kinds throughout the United States over 1914 was only 34½ per cent. In other words, where a workingman in 1914 got $1 for a given amount of work, on an average, on November 11, 1918, he was getting $1.34½ for that same work. On the latter date he was paying $1.77 for the necessaries of life for which he paid $1 back in 1914. Therefore let us have done with the suggestion that the man who uses his muscle and skill is responsible for these conditions.

What I am saying is not addressed especially to the chairman or to his observation, but to the general propaganda sent throughout the whole country, appearing in various forms and coming from various organizations. It is coming from men who have made millions out of the war, and who want to keep on making millions in time of peace. They want to continue to profiteer just as they did during the war. That suggestion—and it is a sinister suggestion—is coming from all of these sources—that is, that the workingman ought to be punished and that there should be first a reduction in the cost of labor.

The CHAIRMAN. I confess that I have not heard that suggestion made anywhere by anybody.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Then the chairman has been exceedingly fortunate, because it has been dinned into my ears until I am sick of it. I have heard it not only on the floor of the House but I read it in practically every newspaper. The workingman, instead of being the cause of high prices, is their especial victim.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to have you, who have given careful attention to this subject, to make some suggestions to the committee as to how the prices that the producer gets can be brought nearer to the prices that the consumer ought to pay for the necessities of life.

A REMEDY FOR HIGH PRICES.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The only answer I can make to that is the one I have made—that is, that we must have a thoroughgoing system of price fixing in the United States which will protect the people from profiteering.

Mr. SNELL. Would you fix the price on everything?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Especially on the great basic commodities.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think that the volume of money that is in circulation now has anything to do with the price of everything being so high? In other words, is there any inflation?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Undoubtedly. In July, 1914, we had a per capita circulation of a few cents over $33; a few months ago, the last time I looked at it, the per capita circulation had increased to $55. Of course, that is a very important factor. Another very important factor is that we have had the flotation of immense issues of bonds, which are used as a basis of credit, and have caused further inflated prices. The shortage in commodities that actually occurred during the war was on account of the fact that a great many men, both here and in Europe, were withdrawn from productive labor.

Before I close on this phase of the subject, as long as it has been brought up, I would like to take, for illustration, the matter of wheat. We have fixed the price of wheat at $2.26 per bushel. That is the Government's guaranty, and wheat is quoted at Kansas City from $2.26 to $2.27 per bushel. At the same time, Australian wheat sells for only $1.05 per bushel. We appropriated $1,000,000,000 for the pretended purpose of paying the loss on the Government's guaranty to the wheat farmer, or the difference between the market price and the Government's guaranty. But what is actually being done with that $1,000,000,000 under the law that went along with that appropriation is to monopolize the wheat market and arbitrarily fix the price so that the people who consume wheat must absorb this loss instead of having it to come out of the Public Treasury, as other war losses are paid. It is being borne at the expense of the pockets—sometimes at the expense of the stomachs—of men, women, and children who eat bread. What we have done, in effect, is to levy a tax on the bread of the people of the United States to pay the loss that the Government sustained by reason of its guaranty on wheat. The other day all of us received from the wheat director specimen contracts that he had sent out to the people in the business, including dealers, millers, etc. Flour has increased in price $1.50 per barrel since the armistice was signed.

Those specimen contracts that were sent out show beyond doubt that it is the purpose of the wheat administration to keep the price of wheat up artificially by manipulating the market through a system of license and control, so that the people will have to pay the loss sustained by reason of that guaranty.

I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that I am grateful for the hearing that the committee has accorded me. I had no intention of being so discursive, but I was led into it by the observations that were made. I apologize for having taken up so much of your time.

War Risk Insurance

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BURTON E. SWEET,
OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, July 26, 1919.

The House had under consideration the bill H. R. 6450, which was as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That section 12 of an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department, approved September 2, 1914," as amended,' be, and is hereby, amended as follows:

"At the end of subdivision II, section 12, insert: 'Except in case of loss of both hands and both eyes, or in case of loss of both feet and both eyes, or in case of loss of both hands and both feet, in which cases there shall be an allowance of $100 per month for a nurse or attendant, the same in addition to the $100 per month allowed in this act for the loss of both feet or both hands or both eyes.'"

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I beg your indulgence for a few moments while I tell the tragic story of Henry A. Bitter, a soldier of the Republic.

He is a resident of Dubuque, Iowa, and on May 27, 1918, he enlisted in Company C, Three hundred and fifty-second United States Infantry. He then went to Camp Dodge, Iowa; then to Camp Mills, near New York City; across the ocean; then to Liverpool, England; then to Southampton; then across the English Channel to La Havre, France; then to Gringon; then to Rappe, on the Alsace front. When the armistice was signed he was back of the Alsace front. Just after the armistice was signed he was ordered to the Toul sector and was billeted at Lucey. He was then detailed to go to Luneville to a divisional gas school.

On the 16th day of November, 1918, five days after the armistice was signed, the captain in command ordered a maneuver in honor of an American brigadier general and some French officers. The participants were to simulate an advance through a smoke screen, and carried their rifles in one hand and an offensive hand grenade in the other. The pin or key in the hand grenade which he carried worked its way out, and the grenade prematurely exploded, blowing off both of his hands and utterly destroying the sight of both his eyes. He was sent to a base hospital near Toul, and both arms were immediately amputated just above the wrist joints. The surgeon gave him some hope that he might regain the sight in one eye. Some five weeks after he received his injuries he was examined by an eye specialist, and was told that he would never recover his sight and that he would always be totally blind. Since returning to the United States he has consulted eye specialists in New York City and Baltimore, and they have given him no hope whatever of recovering his eyesight. Before entering the Army he was a pharmacist in the employ of the Torbet Drug Co., of Dubuque, Iowa. He had worked his way through school and obtained his position on merit. He is now 23 years of age. At the time of his enlistment he was receiving a little over $100 per month. A short time before his enlistment a proposition was offered him whereby he could purchase a part interest in the Torbet Drug Co., of Dubuque, paying for it on time. If he had accepted this proposition he would now be making $130 or $150 per month, besides having a part interest in the business.

His father is now 63 years of age and a tailor by trade, residing at Dubuque, Iowa. His mother is 60 years of age. There are five children in the family, three of whom are still living at home. His mother's hands are filled with household duties. His father's home is not fully paid for as yet. He has no other trade or profession besides that of pharmacist.

He is receiving $100 per month from the Government as compensation allowance and $57.50 from his war-risk insurance.

He must have an attendant at all times. He can not feed or dress himself. He can not go about without some one to guide him. He can not attend to his personal wants. The money that he receives from the Government will not pay for the services of a competent attendant. He has tried artificial hands, but he can not use them; he finds that they are a handicap and that they are impracticable to use, because artificial hands have no sense of feeling and he can not see to use them. A competent attendant will cost him at least $100 per month. He has been honorably discharged from the Army. When he appeared before our committee he said:

I have lost much and have tried to keep from becoming despondent. I will try to fight for what there is left in life.

He has an abiding faith that the Government for which he has sacrificed so much will treat him justly. He made a statement to that effect to the committee.

The bill that I have introduced provides that men in his condition shall receive $100 per month for an attendant. This bill is not special legislation but general.

Thus far, however, this is the only case that has come to the attention of the Director of the War Risk Insurance Bureau that will come within the provisions of the bill.

This bill provides that in case of a loss of both hands and both eyes, or in case of loss of both feet and both eyes, or in case of loss of both feet and both hands, $100 per month shall be allowed for an attendant in addition to the amount now allowed under the present law.

A more worthy case was never presented to the representatives of a free people.

Gentlemen of the House, if you could see this young man of 23 summers, with both hands gone and both eyes destroyed, if you could see him in his helplessness and hopelessness, I am sure that you would not hesitate to immediately pass this bill for an extra paltry $100 per month for an attendant. He is but a semblance of his former self. His eyes have been curtained by the everlasting dark. He will never again witness the sun in its course in the heavens. The haunts of his youth and the scenes of his childhood are a closed book to him. The forms and faces of those he loves are but a recollection; for him there is no day, only a memory. His hands will never again wield the pestle in the pharmacist's mortar, for they are gone. He will never again feel the friendly handclasps of acquaintances and relatives. No art, artifice, or artisan, no skill of the mechanic or the carpenter, can replace the human hand, for it was formed and fashioned by the Infinite.

Gentlemen of the House, we know something of the ordinary man. We know something of his failures and successes. We know something of his struggles, of his sorrows, of his joys, his triumphs. We know something of the mysterious sea of life. We do not understand why fate and chance should be so unkind to him. He has an existence, to be sure, but he only lives in part. He has a mind, but he is physically disabled. His days are filled with gloom and his nights with disquieting dreams. Under these conditions we do not know what storms rage and what passions and maddening impulses run riot in his brain. We do not know what frenzies sweep unbidden through the midnight solitudes of his soul.

We do not know the stealthy and insidious processes of thought which seek to overpower his will and take his reason captive. We do not know in what mysterious realm the clouds gather which at times dim and darken all the heavens of his brain. Our ignorance should make us sympathetic. Our weakness should make us merciful.

Whither are We Drifting? Our Government Needs a Thorough, Nonpolitical, Systematic House Cleaning. We, Democrats and Republicans, Must Require Every Government Official to be 100 Per Cent American, Standing Uncompromisingly for Law and Order, Equal Rights to All, Special Privileges to None, and Squarely 100 Per Cent for All American Ideals and Institutions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, July 28, 1919.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely thank my colleagues for this privilege, unanimously accorded me, to discuss in detail my position on and reasons for now opposing the pending Nolan-Kenyon United States Employment Service measure.

This legislation proposes to create a United States Employment Service as a permanent bureau of the Department of Labor, and for it to appropriate the sum of $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, in addition to appropriations now available, and $4,000,000 to be annually appropriated thereafter.

Because I have insisted upon the Department of Labor being run in the common interest of all the laborers of the United States alike, and not restricted to the selfish aims and interests of unions, a class with their families representing less than 10 per cent of the whole people; and because I have insisted on the present United States Employment Service giving an equal chance to every laborer in the land, and to cease wasting and misapplying the public money; and because I have insisted upon labor unions purging themselves of disregard of law and anarchy; and because I have called attention to the fact that the International Typographical Union requires its members to take before an officer qualified under the law to administer oaths, the following oath:

> That my fidelity to the union and my duty to the members thereof shall in no sense be interfered with by any allegiance that I may now or hereafter owe to any other organization, social, political, or religious, secret or otherwise.

Thus placing fidelity to their union and membership before God, country, and society, some editors of some newspapers have tried to make the people believe that I am against laborers and against labor unions. For weeks one editor, Don H. Biggers, of Eastland, Tex., who in all his life has never accomplished anything either for himself or any human being, has made an abortive effort to misrepresent, belittle, and bemean me, notwithstanding the fact that while Don H. Biggers, poor fellow, has been boozing his life away, for the past 25 years I have fought for all those things, many now about to be accomplished, to protect and make happy the homes and firesides of our land, and have devoted my life to the cause of promoting and developing the welfare of all wage earners, to improve their working conditions, and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment. I am a truer friend to labor than he is.

By the fight I have made against the present wasteful, improper United States Employment Service I have saved to the people since March 1 last the enormous sum of $11,233,808.10. Against the appropriation of $1,800,000 contained in the former sundry civil bill, which failed of passage, and the proposed appropriation of $10,033,808.10 defeated by reason of my fight against it, there has been given to this department in all only $600,000, making a clear saving of $11,233,808.10. Time and recent developments have amply justified my action. In addition to the above saving on appropriations, thousands of dollars of the unexpended money available has been saved through the reduction of unreasonable salaries.

I want again to call attention to the list of employees which Director Densmore had in his Washington office February 5, 1919, which he was forced to disclose and file during the hearings on the sundry civil bill, to wit:

Assistant director, Negro economics	1	1,740	1,740
Supervisor of Negro economics	2	1,740	3,480
Total	513	.....	861,214

You will note that, besides the director general drawing $6,000, he had 1 employee at $5,500, 2 at $5,000 each, 2 at $4,500 each, 1 at $4,380, 10 at $4,000 each, 1 at $3,650, 1 at $3,600, and 16 at $3,500 each, making 35 employees drawing from $3,500 to $6,000. You will also note that he had 24 employees drawing $3,000 each, 7 drawing $2,750 each, 28 drawing $2,500 each, 8 drawing $2,400 each, and 10 drawing $2,250 each. Director Densmore was made to admit in his testimony before the Appropriations Committee that should Congress give him the additional money he was asking he intended to raise his own salary to $7,500 and to substantially raise the salaries of several of his assistants. You will also remember that when he was called upon for a detailed statement of his disbursements during the last six months of last year the only statement he gave Congress was the following very indefinite one:

From July 1, 1918, to December 31, 1918, six months, said Employment Service paid out in—

Salaries	$1,967,962.81
Rent of offices	229,239.11
Per diem expenses	164,380.00
Travel expenses	74,803.19
Furniture, etc	361,495.21
Printing and stationery	172,862.47
Telephone	168,036.79
Miscellaneous	146,498.46

Because Stanley R. Lynn had testified that he thought quite a number of employees were getting salaries around $4,000 and that such sum was unreasonable and out of proportion to the value of services rendered, in an effort to break down his testimoney Director Densmore testified before the joint committee on June 27, 1919 (top of page 246), that there had never been more than six or seven persons employed at $4,000. He had forgotten that in his list of employees given the Appropriations Committee he listed 10 employees at $4,000 each and listed 17 employees drawing as much as $4,000 and over each and listed 35 employees drawing as much as $3,500 and over each. Was he trying to fool the Labor Committee?

In the list of employees you will also note that Director Densmore was paying a negro $4,380 a year as director of negro economics, another $1,740 as assistant director of negro economics, and two others $1,740 each as supervisors of negro economics.

I copy the following excerpts from the hearings:

Mr. BYRNES. Your director of negro economics is a negro?
Mr. DENSMORE. He is.
* * * * * * *
Mr. BYRNES. The director of economics and supervisor of economics; I do not see what functions they are exercising with regard to the employment of labor?
Mr. DENSMORE. Well, they do a very great deal; the director of negro economics arranges all the cooperation of the negro organizations in the field.
Mr. BYRNES. Have you had him for some length of time?
Mr. DENSMORE. Yes, sir; I don't know when he was appointed.
Mr. BYRNES. Was he there when you came there?
Mr. DENSMORE. He came in about a year ago.
Mr. BYRNES. Do you propose to continue in the service the director of negro economics as assistant supervisor?
Mr. DENSMORE. If the Secretary desires to.

Mr. Speaker, until a few weeks ago I was heartily in favor of a United States Employment Service properly officered, economically run and functioned in behalf of all laborers alike, but with facts obtained from investigations I have made, I am now in favor of abolishing the service altogether.

Of the 110,000,000 people in the United States, most of whom labor for their daily bread, there are only 3,000,000 members of labor unions. Therefore the Secretary of Labor and the Director General of Employment Service should be men who are not partial to labor unions or to any particular class, but should be sympathetic to and have deeply at heart the interests of all laborers alike.

It is a well known fact that union members denominate all unorganized laborers as "scabs" for whom they entertain the utmost contempt, and whose lives in many strikes they have unhesitatingly taken.

In his autobiography Secretary Wilson of the Department of Labor states that since November, 1873 he has been a member of the Mine Workers' Union, and has taken an active part in trade-union affairs ever since, and was International Secretary of the United Mine Workers of America from 1900 to 1908. In his address published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 24, 1919, page 1712, Secretary Wilson says:

I make no hesitancy in saying that I am a trade-unionist myself. I believe in trade unionism. * * * When the demand for shipworkers and shipbuilders came from Seattle our employees in the interior of the country said to those who were applicants for employment that "it is not advisable to go to Seattle unless you are either a union man or willing to join the union," and we are held up as a trade-union department because we made that statement. We continued to make it. We are making it now. We will continue to make it. * * * If there was an industrial dispute in existence we would not be the agency through which labor could be furnished to that industrial dispute.

On June 27, 1919, before the Joint Committee on Labor hearings, Director Densmore testified (pp. 233–234):

The CHAIRMAN. In that connection, are you a relative of the Secretary of Labor?
Mr. DENSMORE. I am not any relative of the Secretary of Labor as has been reported.
Senator KENYON. How do you think that story arose, Mr. Densmore? Did you live where he lived in Iowa?
Mr. DENSMORE. Well, Senator, Secretary Wilson, when I was about 5 years old, as you have asked the question—was blacklisted in Pennsylvania, and he could not get any kind of a job, not only in the city where he was, but in the coal mines or elsewhere, and he had to leave——
Senator KENYON. I did not ask you about that.
Mr. DENSMORE. But I want to tell the story. He came to Iowa and he came to my father. My father was the superintendent of the water supply system of the Illinois Central Railroad, from your city, Fort Dodge, Senator KENYON, to our city, Waterloo, Iowa, at that time, and he got Mr. Wilson a job as a fireman on the Illinois Central, and enabled him to support his family until things blew over in Pennsylvania, when he went back, and it is true that he did live at our house.
Senator KENYON. But he is no relation to you at all?
Mr. DENSMORE. No; he is no relation to me at all. Miss Densmore is a sister of mine.
Mr. HERSEY. What are her wages in the Employment Service?
Mr. DENSMORE. I think they are $2,500 a year.

What do you suppose that Director Densmore meant when he said that Secretary Wilson was "blacklisted in Pennsylvania, and he could not get any kind of a job, not only in the city where he was, but in the coal mines and elsewhere, and he had to leave"? Blacklisted for what? What had he done that prevented his getting work in Pennsylvania and caused him to go to Iowa? I mention the above, because it may throw some light on late actions of the Secretary of Labor.

Now, what is the history of this proposed Nolan-Kenyon bill? At a convention called by Secretary Wilson and held in Washington on April 23, 24, and 25, 1919, at which, among others, 24 State directors of the United States Employment Service attended, the convention was called to order by Mr. W. E. Hall, a millionaire manufacturer, who is one of the Assistant Directors General of the United States Employment Service, and a tentative draft of a bill was read. A committee of 14 was appointed to draft a satisfactory bill, and on Thursday afternoon, April 24, 1919, this committee submitted a bill, which was referred for final drafting to a subcommittee, with which Director Densmore, Assistant Smyth, and Assistant Director (and millionaire manufacturer) W. E. Hall were authorized to sit and act, which committee on April 25, 1919, submitted its draft of a bill, that was unanimously adopted. Now, a comparison of these various drafts of bills with the Nolan and Kenyon bills, similar almost in every detail, will very readily indicate the source of this proposed legislation.

I will state in the outset that through investigations made by me, besides ascertaining that hundreds of thousands of dollars had been wasted and misapplied by the Employment Service here in Washington, I incidentally learned that Government employees who were not members of unions were discriminated against, and in many instances forced to join unions in order to hold their positions; and, furthermore, that the Department of Labor was being used in the interests of radicals and even anarchists.

I took it for granted that my colleagues on the House Committee on Labor were not partisans of unions and would be just as anxious as I to ascertain union discrimination against nonunion employees, and that they would gladly assist me in bringing to light waste and misapplication of public funds by the Labor Department, as well as anarchistic tendencies existing therein. Notwithstanding that I was unusually busy with my general legislative duties, I appeared before the joint committee on June 24, 1919, and will repeat excerpts from what occurred:

Mr. THOMAS L. BLANTON (Member of House from Texas). I would like to ask the committee if they would not be willing to permit me to bring four or five witnesses before the committee to-morrow at some stated hour convenient to the committee, and if you would permit me to ask these witnesses less than half a dozen questions each. They are witnesses, some of them with whom I am not really personally acquainted, but I know that they have some facts that would be of very great interest to this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you not think that we could ask the questions, Mr. Blanton?

Mr. BLANTON. There are certain witnesses that I would like to bring here, to bring out some facts concerning the attitude of our Employment Service—is some places, at least—to give preference to union labor.

The CHAIRMAN. And could you do that in six questions?

Mr. BLANTON. I mean by that that I can bring out of each witness with six questions enough to allow you gentlemen to continue the interrogations yourselves. I do not know that you would be sufficiently familiar with what they know to ask them enough, so that they would state the facts. There are different ones from whom I would bring out the facts.

Mr. MACCRATE. Would it not be wise to submit to the chairman those questions that you would want to ask?

Mr. BLANTON. But there are certain questions which I would like to ask, and I would like to frame them myself.

Mr. MAHER. What objection have you to submitting the questions to the committee?

Mr. BLANTON. My only reason is the lack of time in which to prepare them. I am as busy as the other Members of Congress and the Senators on this committee. I have not the time to sit down and dictate everything that each witness knows.

Mr. CASEY. Where are those witnesses from, Mr. Blanton?

Mr. BLANTON. Some of them are employees of departments here in Washington.

Mr. CASEY. Well, where are the balance of them?

Mr. BLANTON. They are here in Washington at this time, and two of them have been waiting several days to be heard.

Mr. HERSEY. Will those witnesses say that the administration of the Federal Employment Bureau has not been efficient?

Mr. BLANTON. I expect to show that—I expect to show the committee this: That the present system is wrong——

Mr. HERSEY. The one in vogue during the war?

Mr. BLANTON. The one still in vogue. I expect to show the committee that out of five and a half million dollars that have been given to this Employment Service to expend that fully half of it has been wasted. Whether or not it has been misapplied, that is another matter. Let me state this to the committee: At Laredo, Tex., in my State, a little border town, our employment service employed four men, one at $140 per month, and on down, and three of them were Mexicans. The service there can easily be handled by one man.

At Brownwood and at various other towns, since the war, or since March, the city chambers of commerce have taken the matter up and have furnished the service, and not a dollar has been spent by this Government since March 4 in my district. Brownwood and Abilene, at those places, one man has been employed at $75 a month, and he has rendered as efficient services as were theretofore rendered by the corps of employees on the part of the Government. That illustrates one of the avenues of waste concerning which I expect to offer some evidence.

Senator KENYON. Do you expect to sustain the allegation that you made in your speech on June 17 in the House?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I will expect to sustain those allegations, and I might add this, gentlemen, that I hope this committee, while they are investigating the matter—there have been some very serious charges preferred against the system, and our Labor Department, with respect to the noted California case. I take it that in view of the fact that it affects very materially the Director General of the Employment Service that it will be investigated——

Mr. MAHER. You say a California case. What case do you mean?

Mr. BLANTON. The Mooney case in California. It has cast such an aspersion upon the Department of Labor at this time that I hope that the committee will go into it and find out whether there is any foundation for those charges.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. BLANTON, you have got a resolution through Congress asking that the finances of the Department of Labor be gone into and that the matter be investigated?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, sir; and I do not know why in the world that was not referred to this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. And you have another one to investigate the Employment Service, this very service——

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting). Yes; and I hope it will be investigated.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you are asking this committee to investigate the Mooney case?

Mr. BLANTON. No, no. Only the connection of Director Densmore and the Department of Labor with it.

The CHAIRMAN. You have said on no less than three different occasions that you are in favor of a Federal Employment Service.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, sir; I have, and no man in Congress is more in favor of a good Federal Employment Service than I am.

The CHAIRMAN. You have said that you will "go to the sky," and that you "know how to play the limit."

Mr. BLANTON. I have, and I do. I know how to play the limit. Not with any gentlemen here, but I have in my past life played it while at college.

The CHAIRMAN. We would be very glad to have you come and give your reasons why you favor the Federal Employment Service, but what we are to determine is the need in the United States, if there is one, of a Federal Employment Bureau, and that is the thing we are going to decide; but whether Mr. Mooney or Mr. Gompers or Mr. Wilson has acted with a little impropriety, and so on, do you think that a Government that needs an employment bureau should be denied that when you have the machinery started, and should that enter into this investigation?

Mr. BLANTON. My position is merely this: I take it that this particular committee, both of the Senate and of the House, is vitally concerned with a proper investigation of the Department of Labor and the proper functioning of that department. If there has been or if there is now improper functioning, then I take it that this joint committee is fully concerned with that question. Now, when a grand jury in California says that a certain man is a renowned anarchist, and when he has been tried and convicted, and when his conviction has been affirmed by the highest courts of the land, and when they say that they have demanded of the Department of Labor in Washington the presence of a certain gentleman from the Department of Labor, and the promise is made to the governor of that State that he would go out there, and that they spent 32 days waiting for this gentleman to come out before them, and that the Department of Labor would not let him come and give them the benefit of what he knew, and when the charge is made, when we right now are appropriating $1,400,000 for our Department of Justice to hunt out and punish anarchists, and when the charge is made seriously by prominent business men of this country that our Department of Labor is working hand in hand with the people who are trying to get the convicted anarchists out of the penitentiary, I take it that it is a question that involves particular functions of the Department of Labor with which this committee should be concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. There might be investigations in their department, but is there anything that touches upon the functioning of this particular bureau?

Mr. CASEY. Will you kindly state who you have reference to that the Department of Labor refused to send out there?

Mr. BLANTON. I have reference to Mr. John B. Densmore, the present Director General of the United States Employment Service.

Mr. CASEY. Do you make the statement on your responsibility that the Department of Labor did not allow Mr. Densmore to go out there?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I do not know whether you gentlemen went through it or not, but I put in the RECORD a report of the grand jury of the city and county of San Francisco, wherein they say that he was not sent out there, despite copies of telegrams from the governor of California requesting it, and from Secretary Wilson and from John B. Densmore, assuring them that Mr. John B. Densmore would appear there at a certain time.

Mr. CASEY. Was he at that time the head of the Bureau of Employment Service?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will read what I inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, you will see that they speak of him in that report as Mr. John B. Densmore, Director General of the United States Employment Service.

The CHAIRMAN. You spoke of having a report from the grand jury——

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting). This report is an authentic document. There is no question about that report. It is the report of the grand jury of the city and county of San Francisco.

Senator KENYON. What do they say about Mr. Densmore?

Mr. BLANTON. This report of the grand jury of the city and county of San Francisco says that he was sent out to California by Secretary Wilson to investigate this Mooney case; that he made certain charges against the district attorney who convicted Mooney; and that those charges, if true, would have warranted action on the part of the grand jury.

Senator KENYON. Action against the district attorney?

Mr. BLANTON. Action against the district attorney; and that the governor gave the case careful consideration; they examined witness after witness to determine whether or not that report was correct; and that they were convinced that the report made by Mr. Densmore is not correct, but is a false report.

Senator KENYON. The report to whom?

Mr. BLANTON. That he made to the Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, here. The position he took was that the Department of Labor was assuming the functions of the Department of Justice.

The CHAIRMAN. We are not trying the Department of Labor.

Mr. NOLAN. It is understood that any aspersions that have been made here, or any charges that have been made, or any criticisms that have been made, that the persons against whom they were made will have an equal chance to deny them.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, this is no star-chamber proceeding going on here.

Mr. CASEY. If we are going to permit Mr. BLANTON to interrogate witnesses here, are we also going to permit the men from the Department of Labor to interrogate witnesses here?

The CHAIRMAN. I have not put that question yet. Personally, he asked me yesterday in regard to the matter, and I said I did not think he would be permitted, because that would introduce a new element in the question of procedure.

Mr. NOLAN. I think that these men ought to have a chance to defend themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. They will certainly be welcome to come before the committee, anybody against whom charges have been made here, or anyone that has anything to say about this bureau, but I do not see why we should try the Secretary of Labor or the Labor Department, and I think we are going the limit when we are investigating those questions for which we were appointed to investigate.

Senator KENYON. Speaking as one who is friendly to this legislation, I feel, in the interests of the bill or any such legislation, that those charges ought to be cleaned up. I hear a great deal of talk on the floor, as no doubt you do, and there is a great deal of a disturbance being created by it.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, we have set aside Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. MACCRATE. Then we will have a fair opportunity to call the people in here who have been subjected to the criticism. These witnesses will make a statement in answer to interrogatories, and then we will have to submit their answers to the people who have been criticized.

Mr. HERSEY. I think that the committee ought to be able to control the questions. If there are any improper questions asked, we should not allow them to be put to the witnesses.

Mr. MAHER. The Department of Labor may have people here——

The CHAIRMAN. It is moved and seconded that Mr. BLANTON and his witnesses be heard to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

(The motion was put by the chairman and was carried by a unanimous vote.)

The CHAIRMAN. All right, Mr. BLANTON, we will hear from you to-morrow morning.

I have inserted the above to show my colleagues how very difficult it is even for a Member of Congress to get before the Committee on Labor any evidence tending to reflect upon the Department of Labor or any branch thereof, and the frame of mind some Members at least of the Committee on Labor were in at the time witnesses were to appear before them.

At great inconvenience and some expense incident to finding and getting notices to witnesses scattered over Washington, I had them at the hearing the next morning. To my great surprise Director Densmore, his assistant, W. E. Hall—the millionaire manufacturer—and a bunch of their department chiefs were present.

I called a Densmore employee and another witness out on a gallery to ascertain whether certain documents requested by me had been brought, when one whispered to me that there was a man named "O'Leary," doing secret-service work for Director Densmore, had followed us and with his back turned was eavesdropping us a few feet away. After properly disposing of this intruder, the witnesses I had present who were employees under Densmore, stated that it would be very embarrassing for them to give evidence against their director, who would undoubtedly discharge them and try to ruin them as they had seen him and his chiefs scowling at them in an effort to intimidate them, and asked me to excuse them. This I refused to do, because I felt that it was my duty to make their knowledge of certain facts public.

To show how little concerned some Members of our Committee on Labor are with the question of union discrimination against nonunion employees of our Government, I insert the following:

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 25, 1919.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as a preface to what I desire to offer, may I state to the gentlemen of the committee, that I have no personal feeling whatsoever against the Department of Labor or against the Director General of the Employment Service, Mr. J. B. Densmore. As a loyal Democrat of my country, loving my party, I would be hopeful that he might be in a position to show that no possible irregularities had existed in the department, but where evidence is brought to my attention showing irregularities, I take it that it is my duty to present it to my colleagues both in the House and the Senators on the other side of the Capitol.

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). Even if he is a Democrat?

Mr. BLANTON. Even if he is a Democrat, Mr. Chairman; yes. I am a Democrat, but I am an American citizen before I am a Democrat. It is that feeling that prompts me to bring this evidence in here to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. You, of course, have been a distinguished member of the bar for many years, and for eight years you were a presiding judge, and you will understand that we are running these hearings with as much dispatch as possible, but if we go into all these things the hearings are likely to be interminable, and therefore I will ask you to kindly keep yourself within bounds.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I shall certainly try to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. As I take it, the proper procedure would be for the committee to ask the questions and get the information that we would like, and then, afterwards, if all the information is not brought out, you may question the witness.

Mr. BLANTON. But, Mr. Chairman, there are certain witnesses that I have here—I have not brought many here, because I understand that the committee's time is limited, and for that matter, my time is also limited—but there are certain questions that I can ask and thereby save the committee's time, as I indicated to the committee yesterday, and in that manner we may get through in a few minutes, and then the committee may ask any questions it may wish.

The CHAIRMAN. I will say that it is very unusual to have the witnesses interrogated by counsel, and so distinguished a counsel, and I hardly know about the precedent in such cases, and I would like to have the committee consulted in that regard.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood yesterday that I would be permitted to ask a few questions of each of the witnesses. I understood that when I went to the trouble of getting the witnesses and bringing them here.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this young lady here does not even know what I want with her.

Senator KENYON. I think probably we can hold her within reasonable bounds.

Mr. BLANTON. I will hold her within reasonable bounds.

Senator KENYON. You do know what you want to ask her about, do you, Mr. Blanton?

The CHAIRMAN. You will please remember, Mr. BLANTON, that the question before us is the propriety of establishing a Federal employment bureau. You understand, Mr. BLANTON, that you have resolutions in the House to investigate the whole Government of the United States, one to investigate the Department of Labor, and one to investigate this employment service separately. What is the use of making this an investigation committee at this time?

Mr. BLANTON. As I see it, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there are just two questions before this committee, and the first of those questions is whether or not the Federal Employment Service has been properly functioning and has been properly spending the funds which we have given to them.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know that that question is very material to the matter before this committee. The purpose of this investigation, as I view it, is to establish whether or not we should establish a Federal employment bureau by law.

Mr. BLANTON. But, Mr. Chairman, if it were shown to this joint committee that our present service——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). That the working of the present service, you mean.

Mr. BLANTON. That the working of the present service has been wasting two-thirds of the money that we have given to it, under those circumstances, Mr. Chairman, would this committee vote for a bill to keep that present service on in existence, and allow it to go on wasting the money——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Permit me, Mr. BLANTON, to show you where I think you and I differ. The question that you state might be proper for us to put restrictions on it, but as to whether or not it would be proper to ascertain whether we should establish this employment bureau, then it is outside of that question, I think.

Mr. BLANTON. My idea has been all along, Mr. Chairman, that if they were improperly carrying on this service, or improperly using the appropriations that have been given to them, unless we know that we could not place the proper restrictions——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). That has already been passed upon. As I view it, the only relevancy that testimony of this sort could have would be as to what restrictions, as you call them, should be put into the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and then there is another point, and the point is this: I take it that this committee is interested in the proposition of whether it is absolutely necessary for any employee of this Government to be a member of an employees' union in order to hold a position here in Washington I presume that this committee is interested in that question.

I will call Miss Mary Cunningham.

STATEMENT OF MISS MARY CUNNINGHAM.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this is Miss Mary Cunningham, whose home is in Plainview, Tex. She is not even a resident of my district.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name, please?

Mr. BLANTON. Her name is Miss Mary Cunningham.

Senator KENYON. And what is her business?

Mr. BLANTON. She is employed at the present time in the new War Risk Insurance Bureau under Mr. Jones.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. BLANTON. Miss Cunningham, you are a niece of Judge J. F. Cunningham, who is a prominent lawyer, known all over Texas, are you not?

Miss CUNNINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. To save time I am going to ask a few leading questions. Miss Cunningham, you have taught school for a number of years in Texas before coming to Washington, have you not?

Miss CUNNINGHAM. Yes, sir; three years.

Mr. BLANTON. Prior to your coming to Washington were you a member of a union?

Miss CUNNINGHAM. No, indeed.

Mr. BLANTON. Since you have been at work here in Washington, have you joined a union?

Miss CUNNINGHAM. Over at the War Risk; yes.

Mr. BLANTON. State to the committee why did you join the union?

Mr. MACCRATE. Let me ask a question. Were you ever employed in the Bureau of Employment Service of the United States Government?

Miss CUNNINGHAM. I have never been in any bureau but the War Risk Bureau, and I was appointed to that.

Mr. MACCRATE. I do not see how it is at all relevant; I do not see the relevancy of testimony of an employee of any other department of the Government when we are inquiring into this branch of the service and this branch of the service only.

Mr. BLANTON. Let her answer. State to the committee how came you to join the union and what made you join.

Mr. MACCRATE. I object to that, Mr. Chairman, on these grounds: If we are going to take up personal reasons and other reasons why girls join different associations, we will never finish here in this world. They may bring in girls from any one of the other departments and take up the time of this committee——

Mr. BLANTON. That is the only question that I desire to ask this witness; and I will say this: That she was induced to join one of them upon representations that that was the only way by which she could hold her position.

The CHAIRMAN. But you would not charge Secretary of Labor Wilson and Mr. Densmore——

Mr. BLANTON (interposing). I want to show that that fact existed here in connection with some other matters which I desire to bring out and to charge Mr. Densmore with

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is not material.

Mr. BLANTON. I will connect it up directly with the Employment Service, and I will show that a person was discharged out of the Employment Service because she did not join a union.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, of course, there is a great variance of opinion about organized labor. Some gentlemen do not like it, and some do like it, and——

Mr. HERSEY (interrupting). And Mr. Mooney is not on trial here.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say that I like it, where it is properly functioned, but where it is not, it is absolutely wrong. I will try and connect this evidence up immediately with the Employment Service, but I will show that they not only discharged a woman over there because she was not a member of the union, but they followed up, followed that good woman up in various departments with the object of keeping her out of the Government employ. I will connect her testimony up with another——

Senator KENYON. You mean to say that this young lady had to join a union in order to hold a place in the War Risk Bureau?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and another has been discharged because she did not join a union, and has been discharged from another place since. She was first discharged from the Employment Service.

Mr. WATSON. Well, don't you think that that should be shown by the one who was discharged from the Employment Service? Did they get Miss Cunningham her job?

Mr. BLANTON. They did not. I believe that I can show that it has been found to be absolutely necessary to join a union, almost, to hold a position in the city of Washington to-day.

Mr. WATSON. Suppose that be true, in what way is that going to throw any light on the conduct of the United States Employment Service?

Mr. BLANTON. But if the United States Employment Service itself discharged employees, and not only discharged employees, but has followed her through to other departments, through their other employees, and prevented them from holding their jobs, it is not only important, but it is an outrage.

Mr. MACCRATE. Mr. Chairman, I press my objection.

Senator KENYON. I think Mr. BLANTON should produce the other witness and show it.

Mr. BLANTON. The committee would not like to hear her testimony? I will call the next witness.

STATEMENT OF MISS J. RAYNES LILESTONE.

Mr. BLANTON. Your home address is Indianapolis, Ind., is it not, Miss Lilestone?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. In order that this good woman's standing may be known to the committee I would like, with the permission of the committee, to place in the record a number of indorsements, one from Senator OVERMAN, who is chairman of the Committee on Rules of the United States Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. Until that is questioned, what is the use of putting a letter into the record. Nobody questions her at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do it for this reason: It has been brought to my attention——

The CHAIRMAN. She can tell who she is, and I do not think that anyone here will dispute her.

Mr. BLANTON. May I give my reasons? It has been brought to my attention that there has been an effort—that by reason of the fact that a certain auditor in the Shipping Board made a statement in the record a short time ago—there has been an effort to prove that the man is insane—and witnesses are in this room now to attack the credibility of the witnesses that are brought in here.

Mr. MACCRATE. Until the witness's credibility is attacked I believe that the committee will assume that she is honest.

Mr. BLANTON. But I can not come back and refute the testimony that they will bring out. I have but a short time to appear before this committee—only two hours this morning. I do not expect to come before the committee any more, as I am very, very busy, and I can not be here to hear their testimony and introduce testimony to refute it.

But you have lived in Richmond, Va., for a number of years, and you have lived in Indianapolis, Ind., for a number of years?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And you were employed by the Labor Department, Miss Lilestone?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. When?

Miss LILESTONE. I began my services during the month of September.

Mr. BLANTON. When?

Miss LILESTONE. September 12.

Mr. BLANTON. And after entering your employment state whether or not you were requested to join a union.

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And what answer did you make to them?

Miss LILESTONE. I told them that I did not think it was necessary for me to join a union. The question was asked if I was a member of organized labor, and I told them no.

Mr. CASEY. What is that?

Miss LILESTONE. I told them no, that I did not think it was necessary in order to keep my Government position.

Mr. BLANTON. And what other statement, if any, was made to you?

Miss LILESTONE. The statement was made that in order to have a safe position that I would be compelled to join the union.

Mr. BLANTON. It was in the Labor Department?

Miss LILESTONE. It was in the Labor Department; yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And you refused to join the union?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes.

Mr. NOLAN. Were you working for the Employment Service System of the branch of the Department of Labor?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. NOLAN. And who was your superior officer?

Miss LILESTONE. The superior was Roger Babson, but he was not there during the time that I was employed.

Mr. NOLAN. What branch of the service was it?

Miss LILESTONE. It was the educational. The Bureau of Education.

Mr. NOLAN. And is it connected with the United States Employment Service?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. How long did you work there after that?

Miss LILESTONE. I worked—not quite—I would say just about a month. I received my dismissal; the letter was dated on the 9th; and I received my dismissal; it was dated on the 9th, and I received it on the 11th.

Mr. BLANTON. Of what month?

Miss LILESTONE. October.

Mr. NOLAN. You were there just one month?

Miss LILESTONE. You have the letter there, Mr. BLANTON. I think that I gave it to you.

Mr. BLANTON. You have a document here from the Civil Service Commission in which it shows that you made a rating of 81?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HERSEY. Let us see the letter of dismissal. What does it state?

Mr. BLANTON. Here is your dismissal, signed by Mr. S. J. Gompers, chief clerk, and there is your dismissal [handing letters to Miss Lilestone].

Mr. HERSEY. This is dated the 16th.

Miss LILESTONE. I entered the service on the 12th.

Mr. BLANTON. Please read the dismissal.

Miss LILESTONE. "October 10, 1918. Miss J. Raynes Lilestone, by direction of the acting chief of the service, your services as clerk at $1,100 per annum in the industrial plants position have been discontinued, effective at the close of October 9, 1918. Robert C. Starr, chief clerk, Information and Education Service."

This gentleman, as I understand it, is a member of the union.

Mr. BLANTON. Did you go to see that gentleman after you received that letter?

Miss LILESTONE. I did; and he said that he had orders from the department head to dismiss me.

Mr. BLANTON. And then did you ask him the reason for your dismissal, Miss Lilestone?

Miss LILESTONE. I asked him the reason for my dismissal; and if you gentlemen will just let me explain—they never gave me a chance.

Senator KENYON. Do you mean that they never gave you a chance from the time that you went there?

Miss LILESTONE. They never gave me an opportunity. Of course, I knew I made good.

Senator KENYON. Then, what do you mean by saying that they never gave you a chance?

Miss LILESTONE. They never gave me any reasons why such a dismissal was sent; they never gave me a hearing or anything of that kind.

Mr. BLANTON. And right after that you were employed by the Commission on Training Camp Activities in the War Department?

Mr. CASEY. Wait one minute. Is it not a fact that the information and educational services is one of the emergency divisions set up in the Department of Labor during the war?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes; I think it is.

Senator KENYON. Were there any others discharged about the time you left?

Miss LILESTONE. Not that I know of. I knew very few people there.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is a certificate from the Commission on Training Camp Activities showing that you worked for them. Would the committee mind her reading that, showing that her services were satisfactory?

Senator KENYON. That was after that?

Mr. HERSEY. I would like to know how long after she was discharged that she went to work for some other branch of the service?

Miss LILESTONE. Just shortly after; in fact, the very following week. I saw that my means were very limited on account of the conditions existing here, and I made an application to the administration—the Railroad Administration—and I received a position, beginning at a salary of $1,500 per year; but on account of my physical condition, due to the experience that I had undergone—that is, the humiliation part of it—it was not the question of work but it was the humiliation part of it—I broke down and was taken ill, and I was compelled to go into the hospital. When I came out I made application to the War Camp Activities——

Mr. BLANTON. Let me read that.

"JANUARY 14, 1919.

"To whom it may concern:

"This is to certify that Miss J. Rayne Lilestone has worked in the accounting office of the Commission on Training Camp Activities from December 11 to January 11, 1919, upon a special piece of work which is now completed, and we are therefore giving Miss Lilestone a release. Her work for the Commission on Training Camp Activities has been very satisfactory. "CHESTER C. WATERS,

"Chief Accountant."

Now, Miss Lilestone, after that you had an appointment from the War Department, the Purchase, Storage and Traffic Division, General Staff, dated March 21, giving you employment at $1,100?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. When did you cease to be employed by the War Department? You were employed by the War Department up to when?

Miss LILESTONE. Up to the 23d.

Mr. BLANTON. The 23d of June?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And the 23d was the day before yesterday?

Miss LILESTONE. Day before yesterday; yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. That was Monday?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir. With the Purchase, Storage and Traffic Division.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, Miss Lilestone, I will ask you, while you were working for this War Department, if any person who purported to be interested in organized labor, and who had previously known you in the Labor Department when you worked there, had occasion to see you working in the War Department, and have a conversation with you, and if so, state who it was and when it occurred?

Miss LILESTONE. I was sitting at my desk, and I was approached by a lady whom I did not recognize immediately, and she says, "What are you doing here?" I said, "Why, I have a perfect right to be here. I am under civil service." She said, "Are you a member of the employees' league?" I said, "I am not." Then I said to her, "What is your name?" I though perhaps she was one of the members of the department there. She said, "I was with the Federal Employment Service" I did not remember her. I said, "I do not know your name." I said, "What is your name?" She said, "I can not tell you." Then she disappeared from the room. A gentleman in charge there——

Mr. BLANTON. Now, just a minute, in that connection; during that conversation did she give you any information of whether or not you would be permitted to remain in the War Department?

Miss LILESTONE. Well, she intimated, she——

Mr. MACCRATE. Not what she intimated; tell us what she said. What did she say?

Miss LILESTONE. Well, she said it would be safer to be a member of the employees' union, but I paid very little attention to it, because those things—I thought that the Government would take care of its employees without having to join an organization in this country.

Mr. MACCRATE. Just give us the conversation. State what this conversation was. Is that all of the conversation?

Mr. BLANTON. You are out of a position right now, are you?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And you are dependent on working for a living?

Miss LILESTONE. I am.

Mr. BLANTON. Did you ever see me in your life until a short time ago?

Miss LILESTON. I never knew you.

Mr. HERSEY. Was there any reason for your discharge from the last position? Have you that discharge?

Miss LILESTONE. You have my dismissal there, Mr. BLANTON?

Mr. BLANTON. May I say this to the committee: There may be not only an effort to attack the standing of the witnesses, but also an effort to attack me, and I want to say that I am amply able mentally, morally, and physically to maintain any position that I take in the House, before this committee, or anywhere else. I am amply able to do that, and I want the fellows who have been attacking this good woman to understand that I am going to protect the people who are brave enough——

Mr. MACCRATE. I trust that we will have——

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting). I do not like to have them send a special secret-service man out to stand under my nose.

The CHAIRMAN. You may put in your testimony.

Mr. MACCRATE. In that dismissal, did they give any reason for her dismissal?

Miss LILESTONE. They did not; and I demanded an explanation, and I wanted it in writing.

Senator KENYON. Miss Lilestone, at the time of this talk that you had with this lady in the Department of Labor, it occurred in the hall, you say?

Miss LILESTONE. Well, the rooms are just a large room. I do not know whether it is a hall.

Senator KENYON. Were you sitting down or standing up?

Miss LILESTONE. No; I was standing up.

Senator KENYON. Was the person a woman?

Miss LILESTONE. A woman.

Senator KENYON. What kind of a looking woman was she?

Miss LILESTONE. It seems to me that she was a blonde.

Senator KENYON. Was she the same woman that talked to you in the War Department?

Miss LILESTONE. No.

Senator KENYON. Did you ever see her afterwards?

Miss LILESTONE. I never did.

Senator KENYON. And in about a week after that you were discharged, you say?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Senator KENYON. Do you know of others in there who did not belong to unions?

Miss LILESTONE. No, sir.

Mr. HERSEY. Do you know whether the Employment Bureau had anything to do with your dismissal?

Miss LILESTONE. I do not; but from my standpoint it looked as though they did, as though they had agents all through the departments. It looked very plain to me, but I gave it very little thought.

Mr. MACCRATE. Now, this second lady that asked you about the United States employees' league, what was her description?

Miss LILESTONE. She was a blonde, but not the same one.

Mr. MACCRATE. And she came right in and walked right out again——

Miss LILESTONE (interrupting). Yes, sir.

Mr. MACCRATE. And just simply said to you that you had better join the union, and she left you right away?

Miss LILESTONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Would the committee hear Miss Cunningham now?

The CHAIRMAN. We will hear anyone.

Mr. NOLAN. Before the lady leaves the witness stand I think that the—she has intimated that she thought the United States Employment Service had agents around these departments. Now, Mr. Chairman, is it fair to permit questions affecting the service—if it is, I think it also fair to permit the service, or those representing the service, to defend themselves and cross-examine the witness.

Mr. BLANTON. I have no objection.

Mr. NOLAN. It is a matter for this committee to decide, and I ask that the other side be entitled to cross-examine the witness if they care to. Mr Densmore is here.

Mr. MACCRATE. I do not think that any cross-examination is necessary so far as this witness is concerned.

Mr. NOLAN. Well, one of her last statements was that the United States Employment Service had agents throughout the departments.

Mr. MACCRATE. But they can meet that statement when they go on the stand.

Mr. NOLAN. I ask that the representative of the Employment Service, if he so desires, be permitted to cross-examine this witness.

Miss LILESTONE. May I speak a word just a moment?

Mr. NOLAN. I am only suggesting that they be asked if they want to cross-examine the witness.

Mr. HERSEY. If we pursue that policy there will be no end to the hearing.

Miss LILESTONE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting). Unless they want it; that is all I want from you.

Miss LILESTONE. I want to take the time——

Mr. BLANTON. Just a moment.

Senator KENYON. If the witness wants to say something, she may do so.

Mr. BLANTON. I am through with her.

Miss LILESTONE. I was asked by Grace Porter Hopkins, who is superintendent of the Woman's Division of the Employment Bureau, and her story is a lengthy one, if you want to listen to it now. She asked me if I was a member of the Employees' League, and I told her no, and she said that "it would be safer for you to become a member of it."

(The following letter was thereafter ordered by the chairman to be incorporated in the record in full, as follows:)

JUNE 27.

Hon. J. M. C. SMITH,
Chairman of the Joint Committee on Labor,
Senate Room 201, Capitol, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In my testimony before the committee which is investigating the Employment Bureau of the Department of Labor, owing to the limited time allowed me, I was unable to state the following facts, which I would like to appear in the record:

Owing to physical breakdown, due to my experience in the Education Information Bureau of the Department of Labor, I transferred my $1,500 position to a man who was in need of employment. This, on the assurance of Mrs. Grace Porter Hopkins, Chief of the Employment Bureau, that she would secure me another position when my strength would permit me to resume work.

After explaining to her my extreme financial condition, I then asked Mrs. Hopkins if the Government made any provision for hospital treatment for its employees at reasonable rates. She answered in the affirmative, and sent me to Providence Hospital, saying that the Government would bear my expenses while there. My expenses authorized by Mrs. Hopkins were $35 per week. This hospital bill has not been paid by the Department of Labor.

Probably because I am not a member of the Employee's Union, the Employment Bureau has made no effort to secure me a position. I was not only advised by Mrs. Hopkins and Mrs. Neal, another chief of the same division, to leave Washington, but efforts were made by their clerks to get me out of the city.

Very truly, yours,

JULIA RAYNES LILESTONE,
826 Connecticut Avenue, Washington, D. C.

COMMITTEE ON LABOR UNINTERESTED.

Mr. Speaker, after the committee showed that it was absolutely uninterested in the testimony of Miss Cunningham, disclosing that she was forced to join a union in order to hold her Government position in Washington, and that about the only interest Mr. NOLAN and Mr. MACCRATE seemed to take in the fact that Miss Lilestone had been dismissed from the Department of Labor and hounded from department to department by purported representatives of the United States Employment Service, apparently because she would not join a union, was the assertion that the service would clear itself as soon as its representatives testified, I deemed it futile to go into the question further, and offered no other of the available witnesses on that point.

The above situation emphasizes the impropriety of placing on the Committee on Labor, which should deal impartially with the interests of the scores of millions of laborers, organized and unorganized alike, Congressmen representing strong partisan union districts, and who themselves are naturally strong partisans of union labor. It likewise emphasizes the impropriety of having a strong partisan of unions as our Secretary of Labor and as our director general of the United States Employment Service, when such unions embrace only 3,000,000 laborers of the numerous millions of unorganized laborers throughout our land.

Not a member of union labor is a producer of farm products. Every union member is a consumer of farm products; hence is constantly hammering down every product raised by farmers to the lowest minimum, so that he may buy as cheaply as possible. While through strikes unions have forced its members' wages up, until to-day the big shoe manufacturer, Henry Bacon, at Haverhill, Mass., is forced to pay to the man who cuts linings for shoes $120 per week of 44 hours and to his leather cutters from $70 to $80 per week of 44 hours, put in during Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of each week, with no work whatever done on Saturday and Sunday, as the cutters of shoe linings need all of the four Saturdays each month to spend the $480 they have taken in during the 20 workdays per month.

And, Mr. Speaker, our farmers throughout the United States are at last waking up, and realizing what is causing the high price of shoes, and what is causing the continual hammering down of the price of green hides and every product of the farm that goes into the make-up of shoes, clothing, and other necessities. We have virtually turned our Government over to Mr. Gompers and unions. I want every man in the United States to be able through honest, energetic, efficient work to make sufficient money to maintain with proper economy his family, to properly feed, clothe, and educate them, to acquire a comfortable home, and furnish it with conveniences, to be able to lay aside enough money to protect his family against ordinary misfortunes and old age, and, after doing a day's work of eight honest hours, to have the balance of his time to devote to his family. But this idea of one class, through strikes, disregard of law, and even through bloodshed, forcing all of the people to pay the highest amount of money for the smallest amount of work done is vicious in the extreme, and must not be tolerated.

The 240,000 Government employees drawing salaries of $2,500 and under each all now get an annual bonus of $240 extra. For instance, instead of getting $2,500, that class now gets $2,740. And when I proposed in my bill to pay a bonus of $100 to each soldier, sailor, and marine, so that he would not go home broke, Congress cut the amount to $60 before it would allow a service bonus.

On July 9, 1919, the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] called up his bill H. R. 5726 which proposed to pay to the thousands of negro porters, messengers, watchmen, janitors, and charwomen employed by the Government the enormous salary of $110 per month—counting bonus—for seven hours' work per day, six days a week, with a month's vacation each year on full pay, and the usual sick leave on full pay; because I called the attention of the House to the unreasonable, extravagant, inexcusable provisions of said bill, and tried to defeat it, I ruffled the feelings of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], chairman of the Committee on Labor, who, in trying to say something mean about me, could think of nothing worse than the following:

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, we have listened to some violent remarks by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who is probably a great reformer and economist in his way. A day or so ago an open letter came to our desk—I think to the desk of every Member of the House—and I want to read to the committee the great economies expressed by the gentleman in a bill which he introduced May 19, 1919, to pay to each Confederate soldier and to the widow of each Confederate soldier $1,000 and the further sum of $25 a month during their natural lives. It provides as follows:

Providing for the return to the South certain of the "cotton tax" collected from 1863 to 1868 by paying to each living Confederate soldier and each living widow of a Confederate soldier, as proper representatives of the South, the sum of $1,000 and a further sum of $25 per month during the remainder of their lives, and authorizing the appropriation of money therefor.

Now, was not he desperate? I am proud of the fact that by my said bill I am seeking to do justice to the deserving old Confederate soldier and his widow. But I am not proposing to pay them anything out of the people's money; I am merely proposing to pay them a mere pittance out of their own money—out of the $70,000,000 which half of the Supreme Court of the United States held was unlawfully and unjustly collected from the South as cotton tax by the Government, and which has been in the Treasury for over 50 years, with neither principal nor interest returned. I am also proud of the fact that, notwithstanding the fact that I am busy from 12 to 16 hours every day working for my constituents, I took the time to send to each Representative and Senator in Congress a personal communication urging the passage of said bill, for which measure I have worked faithfully ever since I came to Congress.

But, getting back to the negro janitor $110 per month bill: The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] offered an amendment to pay these employees only $1,080 per year, or $90 per month, and not allow them the $240 bonus extra, which amendment passed by a vote of 77 to 43, and further consideration of the bill was postponed until June 16. During these seven days interim the labor unions of Washington got busy to force Congress to restore this $240 bonus to the bill. Mr. Luther C. Steward, president of the employees' union, said it must be restored. By way of introduction, he is the same Luther C. Steward who draws $2,750 as president of this union, $3,500 as an employee of the United States Employment Service under Mr. Densmore, while his wife drew $1,100 in the Munitions Building; and during the last six months of last year he drew additional, as travel allowance, from the Employment Service the following: July, $134.45, on voucher No. 197; August, $127.25, on voucher No. 2450; September, $87.50, on voucher No. 6248; October, $113.25, on voucher No. 9656; November, $120.50, on voucher No. 14331; and December, 1918, $127.50, on voucher No. 18495.

Now, bear in mind that Mr. Luther C. Steward's official station was Washington, D. C., and, as stated by Auditor Burroughs, had no occasion to travel; yet, in addition to his salary of $3,500 drawn from the Government, he drew the above average travel allowance of $118.60 each month additional. Possibly the following newspaper item will give us some light on the matter:

[News item from Washington Times, June 28, 1919.]

UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES' HEAD RETURNS FROM MEETING.

Luther C. Steward, president of the National Federation of Federal Employees, returned to-day from New Orleans, where he attended the annual meeting and festival of Local No. 22 of the federation. Mr. Steward was the guest of honor at a banquet tendered him, and he was presented with a handsome gavel.

This traveling gentleman stayed at home long enough to have the Good amendment defeated and the $240 bonus restored, so that these thousands of negro porters, messengers, watchmen, janitors, and charwomen would get $1,320 per year. He sent a union delegation to Members of Congress in their offices to influence them to change their vote. He had the Washington Central Labor Union to send a personal letter to each Member of Congress embracing the following:

(Meets every Monday night at 1006 E Street NW.)

WASHINGTON CENTRAL LABOR UNION,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE, 606 FIFTH STREET NW.

Dear Sir: The Central Labor Union of Washington, at its meeting last night, instructed the secretary to convey to you its earnest request, as expressed in a resolution adopted by unanimous vote, that you use your influence to defeat Representative GOOD'S amendment to the Nolan minimum wage bill for Federal employees. This amendment, as you will recall, was adopted in Committee of the Whole on Wednesday last, and the Nolan bill itself will come before the House again on Calendar Wednesday of this week.

This amendment of Mr. GOOD'S will deprive more than 10,000 Government employees, receiving salaries from $880 to $1,080 per year, of a part of the $240 increase for the current year granted by Congress in the legislative appropriation act.

We ask your support for the Nolan bill as reported by the Committee on Labor, without the Good amendment.

Very truly, yours,

[SEAL.] N. A. JAMES, Secretary.

All of the Washington newspapers each day were filled with propaganda urging Congressmen to change their vote and restore the $240 bonus. And the union admonition, as usual, prevailed, as on July 16, 1919, by a record vote of 283 to 91, the $240 bonus was put back into the bill. Then, by resorting to parliamentary tactics, I prevented final passage of the bill until July 22, 1919. Hoping at least to defeat this $240 bonus, I put the following evidence before my colleagues:

"Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, should the Good amendment be defeated by action of the House, and undoubtedly it will be by a Republican majority, then under this bill every 18-year-old negro porter, every 18-year-old negro messenger, every 18-year-old negro watchman, every 18-year-old negro chargirl in the employ of this Government—and there are thousands of them—would receive a salary of $110 a month, and under existing laws they would each get a month's vacation each year on full pay.

"Mr. HERSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. BLANTON. No; I have only five minutes, and am sorry I can not yield to the distinguishd gentleman from Maine. Now, I want to show the Congress that such a proposal is ridiculous in the extreme and is out of all reason and out of all proportion to the salaries paid white men and women throughout our land by the private business enterprises of our Nation. I want to read you some excerpts from what people say in my district on that question:

"Mr. A. W. Sledge, editor of the Ledger, the daily newspaper of Ballinger, Tex., advises that there are assistant cashiers in the banks of Runnels County, Tex., who do not get over $100 per month; that the salaries of bookkeepers in said banks range from a minimum of $65 to a maximum of $100 per month; that the tellers in said banks receive $100 per month; that the clerks in said banks receive from $40 to $85 per month; that the janitors in said banks receive $30 per month; that said banks of Runnels County allow only 10 days' vacation on pay per year; that there are many women clerking in the stores in Runnels County, working nine hours per day, on salaries ranging from $40 to $65 per month; that the people at home are becoming aroused over the extravagant ideas of Congress in wasting the public money in granting salaries out of all reason and proportion to value of service rendered, and want it checked.

"Mr. Harry G. Hubert, editor of the Democrat-Voice, the leading newspaper published in Coleman County, Tex., advises me that there are bank cashiers in Coleman County, Tex., who do not get more than $100 per month; that there are some assistant cashiers in banks there who do not get more than $85 per month; that the bookkeepers in the banks of Coleman County get salaries ranging from $60 to $125 per month; that the janitors in said banks get salaries ranging from $35 to $60 per month; that the night watchmen in said banks get salaries ranging from $50 to $60 per month.

"Mr. W. H. Carpenter, editor of the Chief Exponent, the leading and oldest newspaper published in Commanche County, Tex., advises me that the bookkeepers in the banks of Comanche County, Tex., receive salaries ranging from $700 per year to $1,500; that many of said bookkeepers work for $700 per year, which is a little less than $60 per month, and that the people are against Congress fixing salaries out of all reason and proportion.

"The Daily Index Co., publishing the leading daily newspaper in Palo Pinto County, Tex., advises me that in Palo Pinto County, Tex., the average salary paid by the banks to bank clerks is $75 per month, and that the minimum salary paid to bookkeepers in said banks is $100 per month.

"This Congress is as wild as a March hare when the subject of Government salaries and rights of labor unions are under consideration.

"Have you ever seen a west Texas cowboy rope the forefeet of a running yearling? That is what is going to happen to some of us Congressmen unless we change about and quit throwing away the public money and thus placing additional burdens upon the already tax-burdened shoulders of the people.

"Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas that they ought to have a minimum-wage commission in his State.

"Mr. BLANTON. They ought to have a little more reason in this Congress.

"Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield. [Laughter and applause.] Gentlemen, I want to assert without fear of contradiction that there are three classes of Government employees who have not been heard by the Committee on Labor in the preparation of this bill. One is the fourth-class postmasters, another the third-class postmasters, and another the clerks who help do the work in those offices. They have not been heard either in person or by any organization representing them. Now, the gentleman from Indiana, who speaks about a fourth-class postmaster canceling only twenty 2-cent stamps a day, should listen to this from a fourth-class postmaster of the country:

"LUEDERS, TEX., July 7, 1919.

"Judge THOMAS L. BLANTON, M. C.,
"Washington, D. C.

"DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: I would like to have your judgment on a question. Do you think there is any likelihood of the postmasters of the fourth class getting any better pay? I know we get a little raise beginning the first of this month, but it does not amount to anything if you will take the time to figure it out. I can't stay at the price and live. My office is getting where I have to have help. I have to pay $50 per month for help, and I get what is left, which amounted to $39 for the last quarter.

"Mr. LAYTON. What is his business?

"Mr. BLANTON. He is a fourth-class postmaster——

"Mr. LAYTON. What else does he do?

"Mr. BLANTON. Let me finish his letter, and you will see.

"Can you blame me for quitting? If I did not make a little on the outside—

"[Laughter.]

"I would starve to death. I have no one to take care of or I would done been dead as heck. My rural carrier gets $1,548 a year and works three and a half hours a day. I get about $800 a year, pay $600 of it for help, work from 5.30 a. m. to 7 p. m. Now, Judge, I am not blowing off—

"[Laughter.]

"you know I am not that kind of a man, but telling you the straight truth, and you know if my word is worth anything or not.

"Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain your friend,

"DAVID J. OLINGER, P. M.

"The above is a fair sample of the letters I am daily receiving from fourth-class postmasters, many of whom have lately given up their positions in disgust, and in instances it has been impossible, as at Norton, Tex., to find anyone to take the office.

"As I said the other day, I want the country to know that this minimum-wage bill, which sought to give $110 per month—counting bonus—to negro porters, janitors, messengers, watchmen, and charwomen, 18 years of age and up, and which absolutely refuses to do justice to third and fourth class postmasters and postal clerks was fathered and brought into this House by a Republican [Mr. NOLAN], was reported out by a Republican committee, and is being handled and so passed on the floor of this House by a Republican majority. I want these postmasters and postal clerks to know that the Republicans of this House are Job's comforters to them, and have fought against and voted down every provision and amendment seeking to do them justice. The old excuse of letting the matter be cared for by the Post Office Committee is threadbare and ridiculous and will not be longer swallowed by these deserving Government employees.

"I am intimately acquainted with Mr. Olinger and have known him for over 20 years. He is a capable, highly deserving man, works in his post office from early morning till late at night, in Lueders, a thriving railroad town in Jones County, on the edge of the great oil-producing section of the world-renowned Ranger oil field; yet after deducting the $50 per month he is required to pay his clerk, he receives only $200 a year, just a little over $16 per month. And while refusing to grant him any relief, this Republican House is going to pay $110 per month to negro janitors and chargirls 18 years old, and at the same time let them enjoy each year one month's vacation on full pay and 30 days additional on doctor's certificate on full pay. You are going to hear from the people.

"Now, I want to read you one from a third-class postmaster.

"Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

"Mr. BLANTON. No; I am very sorry I can not, my time is so limited.

"This letter is dated Albany, Tex., June 24, 1919, and is addressed to the First Assistant Postmaster General, and says:

"This office is swamped with work owing to oil developments in this territory. We are unable to work from 15 to 25 sacks of 'Albany distributing' mail, which arrives about 6.45 a. m., until after departure of star routes, which delays this mail 24 hours. The service at Breckenridge has collapsed to such an extent that business firms at that place have parcel post and C. O. D. mail come to this office and send here 27 miles for it. I delivered recently for one firm in Breckenridge C. O. D. packages to the amount of $1,225.24 in one day. I can not work mail for all of Throckmorton County, handle parcel post for Stephens County, and be central accounting office for Shackelford County, and give the patrons of this office service with only $41 per month clerk hire. The receipts of this office so far this quarter amount to $2,036.41. Sales of stamped paper, $1,923.91; box rents, $112.50; total receipts for this quarter last year, $1,331.30. * * * Why are not the patrons of this office entitled to service as well as the patrons of first and second class offices?

"Let me read you another excerpt.

"Mr. SNYDER. Is that from a fourth-class postmaster?

"Mr. BLANTON. From a third-class postmaster. He says:

"Why the rural carrier and his substitute are paid $1,665 per annum for four hours' work, six days a week, serving 84 boxes, while this office is allowed only $492 per annum clerk hire to serve 3,000 patrons of this office, separate mail for 7,000 in Throckmorton County, and be central accounting office for Shackelford County. Why a clerk in this office has to work 13 hours a day, 6 days a week, and 8 hours on Sunday for $41 per month, while in Abilene they get $125 per month for 8 hours per day and 50 cents per hour for overtime.

"Now, gentlemen, this is the situation: This highly intelligent, educated, capable, diligent, overworked postmaster, Mr. Frank K. Sterrett, does not make $110 per month, and never gets a vacation. Here we are asking the clerks in the rural offices—clerks, if you please, who have no other business, who do not get anything else on the outside—to work for $41 per month; white men and white women, if you please; and yet you Republicans with your Republican majority are going to give negro janitors and negro charwomen, 18 years of age, $110 per month, with a whole month vacation each year on full pay. The people of this country are going to call you to account, and you will be absolutely unable to justify yourselves.

"The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

"Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

"The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none."

Mr. Speaker, I made every effort possible to get the same consideration shown third and fourth class postmasters and ill-paid postal employees that was being shown negro porters and janitors, but the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] defeated me at every turn.

And, before final passage, on July 22, 1919, I made a motion to recommit this bill, and have this $240 bonus taken from it, and I was the only Member who voted to thus eliminate the bonus, and the bill was passed carrying the bonus. When I am right, I am not ashamed to vote alone. It is an awfully easy matter to drift with the tide, but it takes courage and effort to swim against the current. There is no influence in this Nation to-day more powerful than that exerted by unions. There are more than 100,000 negroes in Washington, and unions had to take care of them. And in the Washington Post, July 23, 1919, Mr. Luther C. Steward, president of Federation, mentioned the thousands of janitors and charwomen in the Federal buildings that would be benefited, and highly commended Mr. NOLAN and his Republican Party for passing the measure.

Under this bill thousands of negro porters, messengers, watchmen, janitors and charwomen will get $1,320 per year for seven hours' work per day, six days per week, with one month vacation each year on full pay, with an additional 30 days' sick leave on doctor's certificate each year on full pay, with half-holiday every Saturday during the summer months, all legal holidays, all special occasions in Washington, working in comfortable buildings, steam heated in winter, with ice water and electric fans in summer, having access to all the numerous pleasure parks and buildings of public interest, while on the other hand there are thousands of bank bookkeepers, postmasters, and even assistant cashiers holding responsible financial positions who get less. And the now overburdened taxpayers are paying the bill. Why do not the people let Congress hear from them? Will the people never wake up? When they do, I am going to have some company in voting on such measures.

Washington is the mecca of wastefulness, extravagance, and money spenders. Sometime ago I had three young ladies in my office doing extra work. One asked Miss Penny Martin, of McCauley, Tex., what she paid for her coat. She replied that she got it at a bargain, as Garfinkle asked $125 for it, but that she got it for only $105. It did not take long for Miss Martin to get into the Washington swing of extravagance. Up to this date my wife has never paid more than $50 for a coat, and she has managed to get along. No wonder the Washington newspapers dig me for fighting extravagance, when by the numerous page advertisements they carry in each edition they are becoming millionaires. And to encourage extravagance and thriftlessness labor unions are now arranging to force the passage of a bill to retire all Government employees after reaching a certain age on pensions as high as $720 per year.

Let us now return to the hearings before the Joint Committee on Labor. Following are excerpts from Mr. Le Prohon's testimony:

STATEMENT OF MR. E. P. LE PROHON.

Mr. BLANTON. This is the second time that I have ever seen you, isn't it, Mr. Le Prohon?

Mr. LE PROHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And the other was when I requested you to come here to testify?

Mr. LE PROHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Give the committee your business and what connection you have had with any Employment Service.

Mr. LE PROHON. For the last six years I have been in charge of employment work for a corporation.

Mr. BLANTON. What corporation?

Mr. LE PROHON. I am just coming to that. In 1913, until 1918, for the Phoenix Construction Co., during which period I handled all the employment for that company.

Mr. BLANTON. In their employment have you ever worked for——

Mr. LE PROHON. And shipped men—pardon me—through three States, Idaho, Utah, and Colorado.

Mr. BLANTON. And in their service, have you worked for——

Mr. LE PROHON (interrupting). And along about March, 1918, I was brought East by the Atlantic Loading Co. to take charge of the employment of the Atlantic Loading Co. plant at ——, N. J.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Le Prohon, during the life of what is known as the United States Employment Service, what restrictions were placed upon your private agencies by this Government agency, with regard to your business of continuing to get employment for the people that you represented?

Mr. LE PROHON. Well, it was about the middle of July. I was in charge of the office——

The CHAIRMAN. What year?

Mr. LE PROHON. 1918. A man by the name of Mr. Spitz, Joseph Spitz, I believe, was State director of the Federal Employment Service for the State of New Jersey, with offices at Newark, and he came into my office and left me a copy of a bulletin called the Employment Service News, or something—I am not familiar with the name of it—and he stated after August 1 that the Federal Employment Service expected to take over the control of all unskilled labor, and that I could not advertise in the papers for unskilled labor, could not give the rates to be paid, could not give the location where the position was, or could not open an office in any city out of my district unless I had a representative in the Federal Employment Service; further, I should not ship men out of my district from any other State, or from any other district—in the beginning it was divided into districts, and a little later they had it on the principle of State lines, so that I was located between Atlantic City and Philadelphia, and between me and Atlantic City, or between our plant, there was a loading plant of the Bethlehem Loading Co., at Mays Landing, at New Jersey, and that was about 10 or 12 miles closer to Atlantic City than we were. It was on the electric line as well as the steam line. The commutation service was much cheaper between Atlantic City and Mays Landing than it was between Atlantic City and our plant. He said that I could not go out of my district to get men. If they would come to the State, I could hire them. Well, we were a Government plant, erecting a shell-loading plant. We were not doing anything else, and we were being paid on the cost-plus basis.

Mr. BLANTON. Did this loading company pay to the Federal director $750 for paying transportation charges on men?

Mr. LE PROHON. We advanced the Federal Employment Service in Philadelphia $750 to pay the transportation for any steam fitters which they might secure in their bureau and ship down to us, they to take receipts and furnish us with the same.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, Mr. Le Prohon, in that connection, would you charge that $750 to your cost-plus basis, against the Government, and collect it from the Government?

Mr. LE PROHON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, did they ever furnish you those receipts for this $750?

Mr. LE PROHON. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And did you ever demand it of them?

Mr. LE PROHON. Mr. Whitcomb wrote two letters, and the general auditor wrote, too, and finally the Federal Employment Service closed down, and I went up with a receipt stating underneath it, to be signed before a notary, that the above expense account was true and just, and I had Mr. Whitcomb sign it—sign five copies—and I took those to Mr. Stokes and brought them down to the Government and turned it in, and the Atlantic Loading Co. was reimbursed.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, when they could not furnish you with a receipt, did you not require them to pay back to the company between $350 and $400?

Mr. LE PROHON. About $350 to $400—approximately one-half.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Le Prohon, did you obey the order of the Federal director with regard to not getting men, or was there any arrangement entered into between you and the Federal director whereby you could get men and give the credit for getting those men to the Employment Service; and if so, state what it was?

Mr. LE PROHON. Of course, the plant was shut down. They do not build loading plants near a city, for the reason that if it blows up it would move the city over 10 or 12 miles. The Employment Service told me that I would have to depend upon our local population. Well, our local population there was mosquitoes. There was no local population. Hamilton was the nearest town, and it was a town of 4,000. Mays Landing was between our plant and Atlantic City, and consequently they got all of the men in Atlantic City, which was the nearest place, and it was the nearest place that I could go to get men under the Federal employment director's ruling.

Mr. BLANTON. Whether or not they required you to give them the benefit or the credit for getting the labor, or whether you gave them the benefit of getting the labor or the credit for it——

Mr. LE PROHON (interrupting). I was shut out from Atlantic City and Philadelphia. Philadelphia was in the so-called metropolitan district, or the northern district—but, anyhow, I was out of the district. I could not go into Camden for men, for they were operating on State lines, but I was allowed to place a man with the Employment Service in Camden, which I did. I had, prior to this Employment Service coming up, an office in Philadelphia, which was run on a wage basis; we paid the man in charge there, who hired the men in the office and charged no fee, and we furnished transportation for the men and we deducted the net amount from the earnings of the men after they went to work, and I had been getting splendid results—was getting about 150 men a day.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I am in a hurry——

Mr. LE PROHON. Let me make an explanation. The employment question is a big thing. Every man who is hired is an individual proposition, and you do not hire a thousand men the same as you buy material. It is an individual proposition, and the human characteristic is there, and for that reason, to explain that—if you want to know the reason why—we were getting around 150 men a day out of Philadelphia from our own office. The Employment Service stepped in and said, "No; it can not be done. Stop it." Where was I to get my men? At my gates? Nobody could live there. Consequently I went up and talked the matter over with the Camden man, Mr. Monroe, that has charge of the Federal employment in Camden.

At that time or a little later he said that he would see what could be done, so through some maneuvering he made arrangements with our Philadelphia office, that our Philadelphia office should remain open, and that we should hire men in the city of Philadelphia and ship them down from Philadelphia, and as you all know the transportation facilities, you go from Philadelphia to Camden across the ferry and take the train, so that you are actually shipping the men out of Camden. We were not allowed to take men out of Philadelphia, and we moved the office by the consent of Mr. Monroe, and we turned in a report, giving the name, number, and occupation of every man that we got from Philadelphia. That report was sent in to Mr. Monroe on their card. We were furnished with a supply of Federal Employment Service cards, and we made them out and we sent them in as though the men were hired in Philadelphia, and the only difference was that they put them back——

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting). Was there any other way by which you could or your company could employ labor except by giving the Employment Service the credit for the employing of that labor?

Mr. LE PROHON. No; no way of getting them out of the city. I explained, or rather complained, that the employment service was not giving me service, and that came back to me, and they turned around and they wrote me that the Camden office showed that it had been producing sixteen or seventeen hundred men.

Mr. BANTON. But those had been gotten by your own man——

Mr. LE PROHON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you in favor of the establishment in the Labor Department of the United States of a United States Federal employment bureau as a proposition which would meet your indorsement?

Mr. LE PROHON. Well, if there is civil service and good, competent men to examine the men, I am, but when it is a political proposition, as it is now, why, if I was director general, I could elect a President of the United States in two years.

Senator KENYON. Why do you say that it is political now?

The CHAIRMAN. And what are they, Democrats or Republicans?

Mr. LE PROHON. Well, New Jersey is a Republican State.

Senator KENYON. Why do you say that it is political now?

Mr. LE PROHON. As I stated before, I was dependent upon the Atlantic City office, and there was a fellow there by the name of Henderson, and he sends me down there deadwood—that is an employment term—and he sent me down for an executive position, for instance, a man 70 or 80 years old, who had been in the sheriff's office, and he sent him down there, Mr. Henderson did, with the statement that this man is a personal friend of Mr. Henderson——

Senator KENYON. Who is Mr. Henderson?

Mr. LE PROHON He had a Federal employment—he was at that time a Federal employment man at Atlantic City.

Senator KENYON. Was he a politician?

Mr. LE PROHON. I don't know.

Senator KENYON. How is that politics?

Mr. LE PROHON. Well if you send me down a man who is not capable to be placed in an executive position, and you try to use your influence to have the man placed, wouldn't that be politics?

Senator KENYON. Was he a politician?

Mr. LE PROHON. I don't know.

Senator KENYON. But a minister might send you down some one with a letter and state the same thing. I am honest in trying to find out on what you base your statement that it is a political organization now.

Mr. LE PROHON. Well, that happens, say, ten or twelve times, as this did, and have the letter say always that the bearer is a personal friend of the employment man, if he has a man there—why, he is supposed to be helping people out, and why should he go out of his way to send a man down and state that he is a personal friend, and in some instances will appreciate anything that I can do for him.

Mr. MACCRATE. He was the employment man there——

Mr. LE PROHON. Yes; under the employment service.

Mr. MACCRATE. And of course if you received a letter like that from a man like that, you might want——

Mr. LE PROHON (interrupting). Well, you had to be kind of delicate about it.

Mr. NOLAN. How many men did Mr. Henderson furnish you?

Mr. LE PROHON. Well, maybe as high as 50.

Mr. NOLAN. All told?

Mr. LE PROHON. Yes.

Mr. NOLAN. And you don't know his politics?

Mr. LE PROHON. No, sir.

Mr. NOLAN. And he never asked you to do any political work for him, did he?

Mr. LE PROHON. No; I should say not.

Mr. NOLAN. Did he ask you to do any politics?

Mr. LE PROHON. No, indeed.

Mr. BLANTON. What per cent of the men that the employment service, or the United States Employment Service, irrespective of any efforts made by your man, that they might send you themselves, what percentage would you designate as deadwood?

Mr. LE PROHON. Let me see; let me understand you. I did not quite catch the question.

Mr. BLANTON. You said they sent you, besides the hundreds that you procured yourself, and that Mr. Henderson sent you about 50 men.

Mr. LE PROHON. Understand me, that is merely an estimate.

Mr. BLANTON. And what percentage of the 50 was deadwood?

Mr. LE PROHON. Well, it may have been as many as 15—as many as 12, I should say.

Mr. BLANTON. Twelve of them were deadwood, do you say, they are what would be termed "deadwood"?

Mr. LE PROHON. I did not say that 12 of them would be deadwood, but when a man comes in for an executive position, and he wants special consideration, that was the item that I protested against.

Mr. NOLAN. What was the period of time that it took you to take these 1,500 men out of Philadelphia?

Mr. LE PROHON. We sent 1,500 men a month out of Philadelphia.

Mr. NOLAN. Fifteen hundred men a month out of Philadelphia?

Mr. LE PROHON. Yes.

Mr. NOLAN. And those 1,500 men that you gave credit to the employment service, what period of time was that?

Mr. LE PROHON. I do not recall. We sent 1,500 men a month and I hollered on general principles, and they got back at me; they said that they had sent me 1,500 men and I couldn't figure it out at first and then I caught on.

Mr. NOLAN. And how many men were employed in your plant?

Mr. LE PROHON. From 4,000 to 9,000.

Mr. NOLAN. And you had a labor turnover of 1,500 a month?

Mr. LE PROHON. Oh, yes; 4,000 a month.

Mr. NOLAN. Four thousand a month?

Mr. LE PROHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. NOLAN. And where did you get those men outside of the 1,500 men that you got out of your office?

Mr. LE PROHON. Well, we got it out of New York.

Mr. NOLAN. Through what kind of service?

Mr. LE PROHON. Well, I will tell you, prior to this time that I learned of the employment service going to take over the control of the unskilled men, I sent West for an employment man. He was a No. 1 man, and I took him up with the intention of putting him on in New York, and putting him in our office. We had no fee, and we furnished the transportation, and deducted that transportation if a man did not stay with us for two weeks—one week if he was a laborer and two weeks if he was a mechanic. I went to Mr. Barnes, who was the State director of labor in New York, with Mr. Turner, who was my representative, and I introduced myself and requested permission to open an office and to advertise, and I was told that I could not have permission; that I could not put a man in the Federal Employment Service; and that I could not ship men out of New York. Well, here I was; I had brought this man 3,500 miles, and I had him on my hands and we were getting short of men. So I went down and placed Mr. Turner in charge of the transportation with a fee-charging agency, and the company agreed to pay the fee so that the men would have no charges.

The CHAIRMAN. This was a cost-plus plan that you were working on?

Mr. LE PROHON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And that would show the necessity of an employment bureau if it were properly conducted?

Mr. LE PROHON. No; it is a question of whether it would or not.

Mr. BLANTON. You did handle your business on a free basis until other agencies——

Mr. LE PROHON (interrupting). Yes; we handled our business in that way, and we made the proposal since we could not take men out of there—I do not believe that the Federal Employment Service found us shipping the men out, and they did not for about six weeks, and we shipped hundreds of men out in that six weeks.

The CHAIRMAN. And your earnings were more; the more men you had the more your earnings were?

Mr. LE PROHON. And the way that I done that was to put this man in a fee-charging agency—the Atlas Employment Agency, I think it was—and we paid the fee, and they had in the foreign newspapers—they advertised in the foreign newspapers—the employment service had instructed the other newspapers not to accept any advertising in which the rate or the location of the work was given. In other words, we were tied away from communication with the men that we wanted, unless you would apply to the Federal Employment Service, and when you went over there the priority was in effect. We would go over there and ask for the men, and instead of the service sending them to you they were sending them to Nitrate at that time. The next day we would go there and they would be sending them to the Bethlehem Loading Co., but by advertising in the foreign-language newspapers, no one seemed to think of that, and we got the men that we wanted in that way.

Senator KENYON. The chairman asked you a question a while ago, and in reply you said that if you were placed at the head of the Federal Employment Bureau you could elect the next President of the United States.

Mr. LE PROHON. I think so. That is my opinion. I do not say that I can do it.

Senator KENYON. Tell us, if you will, just how you would use this bureau if you wanted to elect a President of the United States.

Mr. LE PROHON. Well, I would see the chairman of the executive committee of whatever party I was trying to elect and find out who was the steering committee of each State, and I would put a good strong man in there, and I would take the Nolan bill, which you have with the joker in it that the Government will donate an equal amount that the State does, if the State is run in accordance with the principles set down by the Federal Employment Service; in other words, if the State does not agree with the Federal Employment Service, then the Federal Employment Service does not help the State; then I would shut out every other firm from it and make everybody act through me, and I would instruct men that we would want to favor such and such people, and would give them precedence. In other words, if the party's leaders would send me any notes that this was a good man I would get him a job, and if the fellow told me that he was not he could not get any. The employment services could give the velvet jobs in the employment offices to the velvet men: in other words, you could have a job running a gasoline pump. That is a position in nine cases out of ten where you must watch the pump run, and the hardest thing to do is to keep awake. That would be a splendid place for a politician.

The CHAIRMAN. Do all politicians have to have gas jobs?

Mr. LE PROHON. Oh, there are lots of soft ones.

Senator KENYON. Well, you are a very bright man.

Mr. LE PROHON. No; I am not. I have been fooled so many times that I have got all over that. I would let it be known that you had to be all right in order to get a cushy job, a velvet job. If I let that be known, how long do you think—another thing, suppose a man had to bring a letter of recommendation from the district boss or the ward boss in which he lived to get any kind of a good position. Would not that sway all the votes in the city? How long would it take that news to go throughout the city?

Senator KENYON. You mean through the ward leaders?

Mr. LE PROHON. Yes, sir. I mean through the ward leaders—the corner-saloon man is a good representative—and they would give them consideration.

Senator KENYON. Your idea is that it can be made a political instrument——

Mr. LE PROHON. Yes, sir; it affects everyone that works. Ninety per cent of the people are working people; they are working for some one else. If you have got the political power in control of that, why, you can have each city under the control of it.

Senator KENYON. Of course, it all depends on the honesty and patriotism of the men operating the offices.

Mr. LE PROHON. Put it under civil service. It says that they shall be appointed by the director general.

Mr. NOLAN. Have you read the bill?

Mr. LE PROHON. Yes; I read that.

Mr. NOLAN. Will you find out where it says that the State directors are to be appointed by the director general?

Mr. LE PROHON. Sure [examining the bill].

Mr. NOLAN. Let's see if you can find out where the director general will appoint the State directors.

Mr. LE PROHON (examining the bill):

"That out of the appropriations made under this act the Secretary of Labor is authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, to rent buildings in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, to purchase supplies, materials, equipment, office fixtures, and apparatus, and to incur such travel and other expenses as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act."

Mr. NOLAN. Who appoints the State directors in control?

Mr. LE PROHON. I suppose the Federal Employment Service.

Mr. NOLAN. You have not read the bill very carefully, then.

Mr. LE PROHON (examining the bill). It says that there shall also be appointed such other assistants and employees in the District of Columbia and elsewhere as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of the act.

Mr. NOLAN. Well, get down to where there is politics. There are no politics in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MACCRATE. "Elsewhere"—the District of Columbia and "elsewhere."

Mr. GOULD. Don't you think that it will be necessary for the Employment Service to have high-priced men in the National Government to compete with men say like yourself.

Mr. LE PROHON. I do not know. I am not a high-priced man. I do not know as I am any good. I have been at it six years, and I have not learned the rudiments of it. It is true that I know enough to tell whether a plasterer is a plasterer and whether he has callouses on his hands, and whether a machinist is a machinist or a painter is a painter, and I can ask carpenters and bricklayers questions that anyone who is not familiar with the trade could not answer. I have studied that and made an examination——

Senator KENYON. Are you interested at all in any private agencies?

Mr. LE PROHON. No.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HALL. At the time that you complained that the Government took charge of the recruiting of labor, you were notified by an official bulletin of the United States Employment Service, were you not?

Mr. LE PROHON. Well, Mr. Spitz came down there, and I believe he showed me one of his bulletins. Then I wrote a letter and asked him how to obtain one, and by writing to the employment man at Camden I obtained it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the trouble that we experience by letting people from the outside to come in and take the examination of witnesses away from the committee, and the fact is that it depreciates the hearing.

Mr. HALL. I agree with you.

The CHAIRMAN. We ought to confine it to questions by the committee and conducted in an orderly way, conduct it in that way. If we let everybody around here ask questions, we will be here forever.

Mr. HALL. I only want to ask three questions. Mr. BLANTON has asked a good many questions, and I would like to ask three questions.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask who the gentleman is?

Mr. HALL. I am acting assistant director general.

Bear in mind that this Mr. Hall, who "butted in" to the examination, is the millionaire manufacturer whom Director Densmore saw fit to make his assistant and place on the Government pay roll at a big salary, and was one of the bunch Densmore had there intimidating witnesses.

Mr. CASEY. May I ask why the gentleman does not care to identify the department he is with?

Mr. LE PROHON. For the reason that I have given.

Mr. BLANTON. I think that the committee can protect you in keeping your job.

Mr. CASEY. What is you home address?

Mr. LE PROHON. Salt Lake City.

Mr. BLANTON. You are in the Government service, are you not?

Mr. LE PROHON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If he has any objection to telling what department he is with, he need not do it. We will leave that to the witness.

Mr. HALL. I have no purpose of knowing where he is employed.

Mr. NOLAN. I think that we ought to be fair and allow Mr. Hall to ask the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you want to do it?

Mr. NOLAN. I think that we should.

Mr. HALL. Do you know that Col. Louis P. Bryant was appointed by Gov. Edge, a Republican, and had been appointed as commissioner of labor, and then was appointed Federal director and that he has always had charge of that question for seven years in New Jersey of employment matters?

Mr. LE PROHON. No; I have never seen Mr. Bryant.

Mr. BLANTON. Are there other agencies in the same situation that your agency has been throughout the East that you know of?

Mr. LE PROHON. I know of others, but they expect—I presume that they have some reason for not wanting that gone into.

Now, the committee was already familiar with the following statement made by Charles H. Burroughs, now an honored auditor in the United States Shipping Board:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 9, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
United States Representative, City.

DEAR SIR: Answering, as requested, in detail your specific inquiries, will state:

My name is Charles H. Burroughs; live at 221 B Street NE.; am now one of the auditors in the United States Shipping Board, employed in room 1046, Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.

First, I would like to state that in answering your inquiries I am not volunteering information; that I am dependent upon my position for a livelihood, and hope that you will not cause me to lose my position with the Government.

You are correct in stating that formerly I was Chief of Transportation and Revolving Fund Section of the United States Employment Service. I voluntarily left such position.

Relative to your inquiry concerning record of travel vouchers of Special Representative Luther C. Steward for the months of July, August, September, October, November, and December, 1918, wherein Mr. Steward claimed and there was allowed to him for travel expense: For July, $134.45; for August, $127.25; for September, $87.50; for October, $113.25; for November, $120.50; and for December, 1918, $127.50, per vouchers numbered, respectively, 197, 2450, 6248, 9656, 14331, and 18495. I am familiar with such departmental matters. Numerous parties connected with the service were furnished with transportation books containing printed requests and stubs in same, and such parties would present such requests, filled out by them, to the railroads and get transportation, and their books, with the stubs, were supposed to be returned to the department. The claim of Mr. Steward was in addition to such transportation furnished by the railroads. Thousands of dollars were absolutely wasted in this way. I doubt whether one-third of these books were ever returned and filed with the department. It can not be shown that it was necessary for Mr. Steward to make these trips. He was receiving in the neighborhood of $3,500 or more from the Government and at the same time drew about $2,750 from the Employees' Union, and for a time, at least, his wife worked in the Munition Building at about $1,100. If this service is properly audited, it will be found that thousands of vouchers were issued in irregular and unnecessary transportation, and it will also be found that there were numerous details made from stations merely to enable parties to draw their $4 per diem in addition to their salaries and travel transportation. It was wholly unnecessary for Mr. Hibbard and Mr. Harry H. Stone to take that expensive trip to France. Mr. Harry S. Parks took many unnecessary trips at great expense. Relative to the transportation voucher and three Pullman tickets issued to Miss Jeannette Densmore, sister of the director general, from New York to Atlantic City on July 4, 1918, and the return by Miss Densmore from Atlantic City to New York on July 7, 1918, will state that is only one of hundreds of such trips such agents took on the expense of the Government. In my opinion, the business management of the whole department was rotten. Answering your inquiry, will state that, in my judgment, had Congress allowed the proposed $10,000,000 appropriation requested in February that at least two-thirds of same would have been wasted. It would be a waste of public money for Congress to allow this United States Employment Service any more appropriations until the whole service has been properly audited and investigated and reorganized on proper business lines. It has been continually stated that much has been done and is being done for the returning soldier. Reports of this work are padded and is mostly propaganda, as I do not believe that returning soldiers have received any benefit from the great bulk of the enormous expenditures wasted by this service. I was absolutely disgusted with the system and practice.

Answering your inquiry, I believe that you can depend upon Mr. J. Stuart Braud, of 1477 Newton Street NW., and Mr. J. E. Leemon, now employed by the Federal income tax, to tell what they know about this service.

If the department is properly investigated, Congress will be astounded at the revelation awaiting accounting.

Very sincerely, yours,

CHARLES H. BURROUGHS.

P. S.—If you can get him to do so, Mr. Lynn could give you some very valuable information.

STATEMENT OF MR. STANLEY R. LYNN.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Lynn, what position do you hold here in Washington?

Mr. LYNN. I am working in the transportation section.

Mr. BLANTON. Of what service?

Mr. LYNN. Employment Service. I used to be in the correspondence section, assistant chief and acting.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. John B. Densmore is your employer, is he not, the director general?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Yesterday I sent you this notice:

Mr. STANLEY R. LYNN,
United States Employment Service, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The joint sessions of the Senate and House Committees on Labor have authorized me to present before such session to-morrow at 10 o'clock a. m., in room 201, Senate Office Building, certain evidence.

I respectfully request that you kindly appear there at that time, as I desire to interrogate you concerning certain business of your department. Kindly bring with you the following documents:

1. The record of travel for Luther S. Steward for months of July, August, September, October, November, and December, 1918.

2. Request for transportation No. L517736 by Jeanette V. Densmore, July 4, 1918, from New York to Atlantic City, N. J., and the three Pullman coupons attached thereto, numbered, respectively, as follows:

Office Form 2357, No. 5071,
Office No. 2357, Form 2, 5072, and
Office No. 2357, Form 2, 5073, all of same being from New York to Atlantic City, issued July 4, 1918.

3. Request for transportation No. L517727 signed by Jeannette V. Densmore, July 7, 1918, from Atlantic City, N. J., to New York, and the Pullman coupon from Atlantic City, N. J., to New York, July 7, 1918.

4. Voucher No. 30682, travel expense Miss Jeanette V. Densmore for $747.33, trip begun about September 3, 1918. I might add that I have personally inspected the above, and they should be easily found in your department.

I will also ask you to be prepared to tell what you know concerning about $300 collected by Mr. Harry Parks, Personnel Section, official station, Washington, for trips he took away.

Also please investigate voucher No. 20479 for $13.75 to Lillian Haberkost, Akron, Ohio, December 12, 1918, and voucher No. 27137 for $12.70 to Lillian Haberkost, Akron, Ohio, March 6, 1919.

Do you know anything about a conversation occurring between Mr. Mason and Mr. Smythe, when by way of an excuse Smythe told Mason he could go to Cleveland to inspect furniture?

Kindly investigate voucher for $15.10 giving reason of S. Tyson Kinsell to go to his home in Philadelphia.

Hoping that you will kindly reply with the foregoing requests, I am,

Very truly, yours,

THOMAS L. BLANTON, Congressman.

Mr. BLANTON. First, as to the traveling record of Mr. Luther C. Steward for the months of July, August, September, October, November, and December, 1918.

Mr. MACCRATE. Was not that the first question if you received this communication?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir

Mr. BLANTON. Did you comply with the request that I made?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Have you the travel cards of Luther C. Steward?

Mr. MACCRATE I think that we are going beyond anything that this committee will have to consider. I do not think that we should go into that.

The CHAIRMAN. I have been contending for that right along.

Mr. MACCRATE. Mr. Chairman, here are people accused of improper use of money inside of an organization. This has nothing to do with the organization itself The machine may be all right, but the mechanic using it may be all wrong; and if we are going to take evidence in detail here as to how money was spent in going to Philadelphia and all that sort of thing, I do not think that we will ever finish.

Mr. BLANTON May I call the attention of the committee to the fact that on yesterday in the House of Representatives Mr. John B. Densmore, Federal director for the United States Employment Service, caused to be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement by himself, where he denies flatly that Miss Jeanette V. Densmore got three Pullman transportations at New York on July 4 to Atlantic City, and when I can show the number of those three Pullman transportation coupons, so that they can be identified by the railroad company, by a question asked this witness only a few days ago, that they were attached to the statement of a traveling voucher signed by Miss Densmore, and that they were inspected by me and this witness, does it not bear upon this inquiry where the record of a department is put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at no later date than yesterday, and where those three coupons have been taken out of that department within the last few days, and they were attached to the traveling statement and can not be found at this time, do you mean to say that this committee is not interested in that testimony?

The CHAIRMAN. You have a resolution looking toward an investigation of that very question.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about whether or not we ought to pass this bill now.

Mr. HERSEY. What jurisdiction has the committee of this?

The CHAIRMAN. I do not see any.

Mr. BLANTON. I think that it is very pertinent, because under this bill the Employment Service will stay in existence.

The CHAIRMAN. Maybe we will put such restrictions on it——

Mr. BLANTON. But there are no such restrictions in the bill now.

The CHAIRMAN. But the committee has not reported out the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. That is my purpose right now, to get this committee to put in the proper restrictions. Otherwise I have wasted my time——

The CHAIRMAN. What is the wish of the committee?

Mr. MACCRATE. I move you, Mr. Chairman, that the testimony be not allowed at this time, because it does not seem to be worth our while to go into the matter of payments for clerks, and so on. The question before us is whether we ought to have a bureau——

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting). And I want to call attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that my testimony has disappeared, some of it, from this department, and I have had this witness bring before us record testimony showing the sum of $742.48 collected by this Miss Jeanette Densmore on one travel voucher. As I stated, three of these Pullman vouchers have disappeared. How are we to know that the balance of this testimony will not disappear in the future? I ask the committee, in order to establish a permanent record, and they are important records, to make a permanent record at this time. This young man has to take these figures back and file them in this department. This committee has no right to keep them here, and the very minute they are taken back to those files we have lost jurisdiction over them. They can be destroyed and wiped out.

Mr. MACCRATE. I would suggest that if this testimony is taken it will, of course, necessitate the calling in of the clerk and all of the people who bought the Pullman tickets, and we will never finish. If we open that up here, then it will be only fair to them to say to them, "Come in here and tell what you know about this affair."

The CHAIRMAN. I think that you are absolutely right, but I will leave it to the committee.

Mr. CASEY. Has this committee got jurisdiction over matters of this kind? Have we not committees of the House and of the Senate that look after the expenditures of this department—committees on expenditures?

The CHAIRMAN. So far as I am concerned, I would say that we ought not to go into this collateral matter. What do you think, Senator Kenyon?

Senator KENYON. We have a committee in the Senate to investigate these expenditures, as well as in the House. If these charges are true, I think that some of those committees ought to get busy. As for myself, I do not want to see anything covered up; but, Mr. Congressman, we are concerned here with a bill for a specific purpose——

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting). Give me that voucher of Miss Densmore, that she turned in; not the $700 one, but the little one from New York to Atlantic City. I will state this to the committee, that just a short time ago I inspected the three Pullman vouchers that were pinned on here [indicating], and you can see the pin-point holes right here in the documents now.

Senator KENYON. Do you claim that she should not have had this——

Mr. BLANTON. I do; and Mr. Densmore denies that——

Senator KENYON. Then it is a question of misappropriation of funds——

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting). It is a question of whether or not this department is in the hands of proper people.

Senator KENYON. But you can answer that on the floor of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I intend to answer it on the floor of the House, but I thought that this committee might want to ask about it. This witness comes here as an involuntary witness. I am pulling out of him some evidence that I want to get. He is a witness from the enemy's camp. I brought him here. He may not know that he did not have to come, but if he had not come a subpœna would have been sent after him, but he obeyed the letter.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if that other evidence has disappeared, I believe there is a chance of this disappearing also.

Mr. MACCRATE. Why bother with the three Pullman tickets, which cost about 80 cents apiece: Do you think that a committee, holding hearings the purpose of which is to consider a bill establishing a new department or bureau, should go into that and call 20 or 30 other witnesses——

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting). But if the director general will misrepresent a fact about one thing, even about one penny, it means just as much to me as if it were $5,000,000. Mind you, I do not say that he has——

The CHAIRMAN. Would it be satisfactory to you to have those records brought by Mr. Lynn read into this record?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is a whole lot that I expect to show by this witness. I believe I can show by this witness that employee after employee has been detailed from their homes here and there in order that they might draw the $4 per diem extra to their already big salaries. I believe that I can show that $1,200 employees have been raised to $3,000, $4,000, and $5,000——

The CHAIRMAN. Your statement is very interesting, and it is possible that we may come to a place where it may be required.

Mr. MAHER. Do you think that we should not have a Labor Department?

Mr. BLANTON. I have been convinced, from what I have been told by these witnesses, that the whole Labor Department ought to be cleaned out from the top down.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose you defer that.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not know whether they will ever let him come back or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if you want us to, we will help you out on that point. The joint committee would like to have an executive session.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask that you have copies made of all that testimony brought by Mr. Lynn?

The CHAIRMAN. Is that a department document?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. They are all department documents.

Senator KENYON. I move that the joint committee now have an executive session.

And thus the hearings adjourned, although I had present, besides Mr. Lynn, Auditor Burroughs, J. S. Brand, Patrick L. Collins, and others who had advised me of vital evidence against the Densmore service. During said hearings Director Densmore sat immediately behind the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN], who could not have better protected Densmore if he had been his attorney. The following are copies I had made of the three Pullman coupons that were attached to transportation request No. L51736, signed by Jeanette Densmore, each stamped on back July 4, 1918, at New York:

Fortunately, I had had these copies made before the originals disappeared from the files in Densmore's office; otherwise, we would never have seen them again. Late that afternoon, while busy in the House, I was advised that the joint committee had decided to hear my witnesses, as Director Densmore seemed to be perfectly willing to go into the matter, and by going to some expense and several hours' trouble that night I succeeded in notifying the witnesses to appear again the next morning. I mention these details merely to show how difficult it is for a Congressman to get some evidence before the Committee on Labor. To my surprise I learned from Mr. Lynn that the demeanor of Densmore and his chiefs toward him for having appeared against them was so scowlingly threatening that he had stayed at home, afraid of physical violence.

THURSDAY, JUNE 26, 1919.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, SENATE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR, AND HOUSE COMMITTEE ON LABOR,
Washington, D. C.

The Committee on Education and Labor of the United States Senate and the Committee on Labor of the House of Representatives met pursuant to adjournment at 10 o'clock a. m., in room 201, Senate Office Building, Hon. J. M. C. SMITH presiding.

Present: Senators KENYON and JONES; Representatives SMITH (chairman), CASEY, HERSEY, WATSON, NOLAN, GOULD, MACCRATE, and ZIHLMAN.

Also present: Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON, Member of the House of Representatives from Texas; Stanley R. Lynn, employed in the transportation section of the United States Employment Service; Patrick L. Collins, employed with Federal Board of Vocational Education; J. S. Brand, formerly employed with the United States Employment Service; C. A. Burroughs, auditor for the Shipping Board.

To have been complete, the above caption should have mentioned also that Director Densmore and his corps of chiefs and bulldozers were also present, including the assistant, millionaire manufacturer, Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. Mr. BLANTON, I believe that you had a witness on the stand yesterday?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

STATEMENT OF STANLEY R. LYNN—RESUMED.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have here a little documentary evidence that I would like to put in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I will now offer here a letter that I have received from Austin, Tex., dated June 7, 1919, and which reads:

"Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON——"

The CHAIRMAN. Before you read that into the record tell us what you want to show by it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am reading this, inasmuch as this concerns the restrictions that I am going to request the committee to put on this Nolan-Kenyon bill. I want to show that there should be some restrictions placed in the bill limiting the propaganda that is sent out at the expense of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Why don't you have it printed? Why waste the time to read it?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I would like to show by this——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). State what those exhibits are and then put them in.

Mr. BLANTON. This is a letter that I received from the editor of the Austin American, which says:

"Rather odd situation when a department of the United States Government would use its official press-agent matter to discredit a Congressman, as per attached letters received by the Austin American."

The two documents that he incloses are specially prepared editorials over the signature of Mr. H. W. Lewis, Federal director of the United States Employment Service of the Department of Labor, at San Antonio, Tex., and they are released for the Texas morning papers for Saturday, June 7, and for Monday, June 9, 1919.

Mr. CASEY. You have already put that in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on the floor of the House, have you not?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, I have; but I want this to go in the record here.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a letter from whom?

Mr. BLANTON. The letter is signed by the editor of the Austin American.

Mr. HERSEY. And you say that the editorials are prepared for that paper and are written by Mr. H. W. Lewis, Federal director for the State of Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. And I wish the editorial attached to the letter of the editor of the Austin American to go into the record at this point.

I have also a letter—just a three-line letter—from Mr. Sledge, who is the editor of one of the papers down there:

"NOTE.—I get an armful of this 'dope' in every mail. Presume that some of the high-salaried clerks in the Department of Labor are kept on the job sending it out. It is a waste.

"SLEDGE."

Then there is a four-page, typewritten, specially prepared editorial sent out by Mr. H. W. Lewis, Federal director of the United States Employment Service, at San Antonio, Tex., for release for the Texas morning papers on June 5.

Mr. HERSEY. What is the editorial about?

Mr. BLANTON. To try to show that the United States Employment Service is one of the most vital interest to the United States Government, and to induce the people to believe that if it were hampered with or restricted in any way in the world the whole Government would stop functioning.

That is the propaganda sent broadcast through the United States.

Mr. HERSEY. Just speaking all of themselves?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. You understand that they are put into the newspapers without Mr. Lewis's name to it.

Then, here is a two-column article published as of June 21, 1919, in the Comanche Enterprise, copied from the Waco News.

Mr. CASEY. Does this misrepresent your attitude in any way?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly it does. I am not against union labor. I am not against the Employment Service; but I am against graft from a nickel to a billion dollars; I am against that. I am not fighting the Employment Service itself. I am merely fighting the anarchy and disregard of law that pervades labor unions.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Lynn, your name was put in the record yesterday, was it not?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And you have worked for the Labor Department how long?

Mr. LYNN. Nine years.

Mr. BLANTON. Are you still employed by any branch of the Department of Labor; and if so, what branch?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir; I am employed by the Employment Service of the Department of Labor.

Mr. BLANTON. And how long have you been with the Employment Service of the Department of Labor?

Mr. LYNN. I have been with them since its organization.

Mr. BLANTON. What branch of the service have you been in charge of?

Mr. LYNN. I was in charge of the correspondence section. I was called in one day by Mr. Luther C. Steward, who is one of the worst scamps that ever——

Mr. BLANTON. Now, just wait a minute, and answer the questions that I ask you. I want to save the time of the committee here, and I want to ask you questions and have you answer them. You were requested by me to bring certain documents, were you not? I requested you in a letter to bring certain documents?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Did you bring those documents, Mr. Lynn?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir; I have them here.

Mr. BLANTON. This is a voucher showing a claim of $747.33, made by Jeanette V. Densmore, for reimbursement of that amount which she claims she expended in travel, and so on, and I want to get that into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be allowed to be put into the record.

The following excerpts from this travel voucher will give an idea of same without copying in full:

Mr. BLANTON. Attached to above voucher was statement by auditor showing that $4.85 had been deducted from her account of $747.33 covering tips Miss Densmore paid in South Carolina, Mississippi, Arkansas, Tennessee, and Georgia, where tips are prohibited by law, and check issued to her for $742.48, despite the fact that she failed to show receipt for the $5 for auto stage from Missoula to Polson, Mont., as required by law.

It might be interesting to note that Polson, Mont., is the old home of Miss Densmore, where the Densmores formerly lived; also that in addition to her big salary she drew a per diem of $4 per day in lieu of subsistence, and that where she issued transportation requests upon certain railroads for transportation they collected same from the Government, most of the foregoing items being merely incidental expenses of the trip, as Pullman fares, taxicabs, tips to porters, and so forth.

Mr. CASEY. I would like to ask the witness a few questions now. Are these documents you have brought here official documents?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CASEY. Official documents of the Department of Labor?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CASEY. And by whose authority did you take them out?

Mr. LYNN. I took them out by letter of authority.

Mr. CASEY. A letter of authority from whom?

Mr. LYNN. From Mr. BLANTON.

Mr. CASEY. And is that the only authority you had to take official documents from the files of the Department of Labor?

Mr. LYNN. Yes; but I considered that sufficient.

Mr. BLANTON. Have you that letter that I wrote to you?

Mr. LYNN. Yes; I have it here.

Mr. BLANTON. And you acted on that letter?

Mr. LYNN. Yes; I acted on that letter.

Mr. BLANTON. And did you deem that that letter authorized you to bring those documents here?

Mr. LYNN. I did.

Mr. BLANTON. On this claim for $747.33 there was allowed $742.48, there being deductions for overpayments.

Senator KENYON. What was that for?

Mr. BLANTON. For travel for Miss Jeanette V. Densmore.

Senator KENYON. For Miss Jeanette V. Densmore? Who is Miss Jeanette V. Densmore?

Mr. BLANTON. She is a sister of the director general, I am informed. They deducted some overcharges of tips.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know that? You have been informed it was?

Mr. LYNN. I have heard that.

Mr. BLANTON. That is, was the home of the Densmores?

Mr. LYNN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And that is $5 for an automobile that she used from Missoula to Polson? Now, you were requested to bring request for transportation No. L-517736. Did you bring that?

Mr. LYNN. I have.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, Mr. Lynn, do you remember the time that I called your attention to the fact that I would like to have you make copies of these numbers of these Pullman tickets pinned to this business?

Mr. LYNN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, look at those numbers; are they the numbers of the Pullman tickets that were attached to that?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. State whether or not there were three such Pullman tickets?

Mr. LYNN. I had them going through my hands. I remember them going through my hands.

Mr. BLANTON. Up to what time—about what time did you know that they were in the office attached to this transportation, about how long ago?

Mr. LYNN. Two and a half weeks ago—somewhere around there.

Senator KENYON. What do you claim about the Pullman tickets, Mr. BLANTON?

Mr. BLANTON. In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Mr. Densmore has told us—in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD he placed a statement in it that his sister on July 4 got this transportation, and it is in the RECORD, from New York to Atlantic City, on July 4, and he admits that two people did go with her from New York to Atlantic City on that trip, but he claims that they paid for their Pullman tickets out of their pockets, and she paid hers, and they were not charged to the Government. That was put in the RECORD on Tuesday, the 24th.

The CHAIRMAN. What page is that of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. BLANTON. That is on page—this is from Mr. Densmore himself—it is on page 1799 of Tuesday's RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Tuesday, June what?

Mr. BLANTON. Tuesday, June 24 1919, page 1799. Mr. Densmore makes this statement himself. He says:

"The records of this office show that Miss Densmore left New York City on July 4, 1918, at 3.30 p. m., and arrived at Atlantic City at 6.30 p. m., of that date; that she remained in Atlantic City for two days, July 5 and 6, and left there on July 7 at 9.15 a. m. for New York City, arriving at the latter place at 12.15 p. m. The record further discloses that in proceeding from New York to Atlantic City Miss Densmore used Government transportation, request No. L-517736, the amount of which was $1.25, and that in returning she used Government transportation, request L-51737, the amount of which was likewise $1.25, these items representing single fares between the points indicated. She paid cash fare for a seat in a Pullman car, amounting to 98 cents each way. The total charge against the Government for the entire trip was $13.46. Two girls did accompany Miss Densmore from New York to Atlantic City, but they did not travel on Government transportation, nor did they present any claims to the Government for reimbursement of traveling expenses."

Now, Mr. Lynn, when I requested you the other day to bring this transportation voucher, together with those three Pullman tickets that were pinned to it, what did you find?

Mr. LYNN. I found them just as they are, without any coupons on them.

Mr. BLANTON. Let us see that; do you see where the tickets were pinned to it?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. The pin pricks are still in it where the tickets had been attached?

Mr. LYNN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know what became of them?

Mr. LYNN. I was advised on good authority that they were around there looking for this transportation request.

Mr. CASEY. You say you were advised by good authority. What do you mean by good authority?

Mr. LYNN. By the authority of the persons in the office there.

Mr. CASEY. Who were they?

Mr. LYNN. Mr. Page, of the transportation section.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you say that Mr. Page was good authority?

Mr. LYNN. I presumed he was.

Senator KENYON. Does that transportation cover these two ladies who accompanied her?

Mr. BLANTON. I will say to the Senator that I personally saw these three Pullman stubs, and saw these numbers, and had these numbers copied. They were attached to this particular transportation with a pin.

Senator KENYON. That is the Pullman tickets or receipts covering all three of them.

Mr. BLANTON. There were three different ones. And I will say to the committee that railroad transportation covered all three by reason of the amount of $13.46 that was collected from the Government. Taking Miss Desmore's own statement, the face to Atlantic City from New York was $1.25; she paid 98 cents for three Pullman tickets; three tickets from New York to Atlantic City is $3.75, and three Pullman tickets from New York to Atlantic City, at 98 cents, is $2.94. Now, there was only one Pullman ticket and one transportation back from Atlantic City, and one ticket to New York is $1.25, and one Pullman is 98 cents, a total of $8.92, and she collected $13.46, and left her $4.56 over and above the railroad and Pullman tickets, because she collected $13.46.

Senator KENYON. Was this an official trip of some kind?

Mr. BLANTON. He puts in the record a statement from Lewis T. Bryant, Trenton, N. J., addressed to Mrs. Margaretta Neale, United States Employment Service, Washington, D. C., and says:

"I wish to advise you that I recall having had a conference with Miss Densmore regarding cooperative service for hotel help between New York and Atlantic City soon after the Atlantic City office was opened. The office opened about the 15th of June, 1918, and was in operation during the 3d, 4th, and 5th of July. It was open during practically all of the 4th of July on account of work which had to be performed."

Now, I will say, acting on that, I sent this telegram at 8 o'clock yesterday morning to Mr. Bryant:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., June 25, 1919.

"Hon. LEWIS T. BRYANT,
"Federal Director of Employment, Trenton, N. J.

"I have given some investigation of your statement of June 17, addressed to Mrs. Margaretta Neale, at employment bureau here. By your statement do you mean that you had a conference at Atlantic City on July 4 last with Miss Jeanette Densmore? Did you have a conference with Miss Densmore at Atlantic City on either the 4th, 5th, 6th, or 7th days of July, 1918? If so, kindly advise on which date, exactly where such conference occurred, its duration, and names of persons present. Did the conference you mentioned to Mrs. Neale occur at Trenton, and on what date? Wire answer immediately, as I am to-day conducting investiagtion before joint House and Senate committees."

And up to this good hour I have never received any reply from Mr. Bryant.

Senator KENYON. He may be out of town.

Mr. BLANTON. He may be out of town; I don't know; I simply state that I have never received any reply to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the original telegram that you sent? Was that signed?

Mr. BLANTON. It is not signed in here, but I did sign it. This is a copy of the original.

The CHAIRMAN. And was that sent officially to him?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I sent it officially because I was conducting an official investigation. Now, gentlemen, I signed it "THOMAS L. BLANTON, Congressman," and I showed in the telegram itself that I was conducting an investigation before the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives, and I thought it would call for an answer from an official of this Government.

And up to this date, July 26, 1919, Director Bryant has never answered my telegram.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there must be some limit to this thing; I mean that we might as well have an understanding right here as at any time. Is Representative BLANTON going to be allowed to go ahead with all this matter and go into the Mooney case? I object to it.

Mr. BLANTON. That is as far as I desire to go.

Mr. NOLAN. We have the witnesses before us. Well, let us proceed with the examination of the witness before us.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Lynn—Miss Jeanette B. Densmore's voucher—what did you do with that; the little one?

Mr. LYNN. It is right there.

Mr. BLANTON. You were requested by me to bring here a request for transportation No. L517737, and requested to bring attached thereto a Pullman coupon issued at Atlantic City, N. J., July 7, 1918, from Atlantic City to New York, that is No. 2304, Form 43, No. 6206.

Mr. LYNN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Why did you not bring the Pullman coupons as you were requested?

Mr. LYNN. Do you mean the tickets?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; the Pullman.

Mr. LYNN. It was not attached.

Mr. BLANTON. But up to how long ago was it attached?

Mr. LYNN. About the same time as the others.

Mr. BLANTON. And you saw them all?

Mr. LYNN. The three tickets.

Mr. BLANTON. And there was one on this, back from Atlantic City to New York?

Mr. LYNN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know what became of that Pullman coupon, that check?

Mr. LYNN. It must have been taken with the rest of them.

Mr. BLANTON. It was not there yesterday morning when you looked for it?

Mr. LYNN. No.

Mr. BLANTON. And you could not find it in the files at all?

Mr. LYNN. No; I could not.

The CHAIRMAN. You will have those in the record?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I have those in the record.

Mr. NOLAN. They are here by no authority of the department.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to ask the committee to hold the documents as part of the record of this case. This committee has the authority to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. We are going to publish the hearings for the benefit of the Members of Congress, and it would be very useful to have them printed in the record.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and then returned to the department.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to put them in the record, and this committee has authority to hold them until they are printed.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Lynn, you were asked to bring traveling vouchers—will you let me have the letter I sent you? You were asked to bring and to look up and be prepared to tell what you know concerning voucher for $300 collected by Mr. Harry Parks, personnel section, official station, Washington, for trips he took away.

Mr. LYNN. He was in the personnel section, Mr. Harry Parks, in the personnel section, and he took trips aggregating around $300.

Mr. BLANTON. And where was his official station?

Mr. LYNN. It was given as Washington.

Senator KENYON. Who was it that did that?

Mr. LYNN. Mr. Harry S. Parks.

Senator KENYON. Who is he?

Mr. LYNN. I do not know He was down here in service not long ago. I did not think that it was necessary for him, not being officially stationed down there, to take trips. I think they could be covered in other ways, especially when they are short of money—could be covered by correspondence or by the agent in the field.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Densmore in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD stated that the department had spent $4.000 in sending three men to France?

Mr. LYNN. I do not know anything about that at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Did you investigate voucher 20479 for $13.75 to Lillian Haberkost, collected by her, to Akron, Ohio, December 17, 1918?

Mr. LYNN. I did.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know whether Akron, Ohio, is Miss Haberkost's home?

Mr. LYNN. It is.

Mr. BLANTON. It is her home?

Mr. LYNN. Yes. She went home near Christmas time, about December 12, and there was a report around there that she went on a vacation.

Mr. BLANTON. Who collected this $13.75?

Mr. LYNN. On the voucher it says this: "In the interest of the Employment Service," and that will cover an awful lot of ground. She had been in the Employment Service about two months.

Mr. BLANTON. On this $742 voucher of Miss Densmore, is any letter of authority attached to that voucher?

Mr. LYNN. No; there is not. No mention on it about official business.

Mr. BLANTON. No mention on it about official business and no letter of authority?

Mr. LYNN. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, did you investigate voucher No. 27137 to Lillian Haberkost of March 6, for $13.75, when she went to her home at Akron?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir; where she went to her home in Akron.

Mr. BLANTON. And she did collect those sums on those vouchers?

Mr. LYNN. Yes; and $4 per diem.

Mr. BLANTON. But that is not shown in the voucher?

Mr. LYNN. And the same with Harry Parks; he got $4 per diem.

Mr. BLANTON. And what salary did Mr. Parks get when he quit the service?

Mr. LYNN. The last information that I received about it was $3,000 or $3,500; it was in between there.

Mr. BLANTON. In that connection, since Congress adjourned on March 4 and refused the appropriation of $10,000,000 requested by the department—since March 4—have any increases been granted down there?

Mr. LYNN. I should say there have.

Mr. BLANTON. Was Mr. Graham—do you know him?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And was his salary increased?

Mr. LYNN. I heard that it was increased a thousand dollars.

Mr. MACCRATE. You never have any animus against anybody down there, have you, Mr. Lynn?

Mr. LYNN. No; and I am not opposed to the idea of an Employment Service; but I am opposed to the way this has been run.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you in favor of a free Federal Employment Service?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir; that is, if it is run right.

The CHAIRMAN. But you have fixed ideas as to how to run the thing, and it is not run according to them?

Mr. LYNN. No.

Mr. MACCRATE. And was all this after the appropriation had been reduced by the last Congress?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And how many, about—do you know about Mr. Mason's salary being raised from $3,000 to $3,500?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir; I heard that.

Senator KENYON. Who is he?

Mr. LYNN. The director of control at present.

Mr. BLANTON. Did you look up a voucher for $15.10 given to Mr. S. Tyson Kinsell?

Mr. LYNN. I did. I had to stay there for four or five days and show him how to do the work.

Mr. BLANTON. Did he know anything about the work?

Mr. LYNN. No; he did not.

Mr. BLANTON. And you had to show him?

Mr. LYNN. Yes; I had to show him.

Mr. BLANTON. Was Philadelphia his home?

Mr. LYNN. Philadelphia was his home.

Senator KENYON. Who was he?

Mr. LYNN. He was put in charge of correspondence. He is a labor man. He is traveling around for the Metropolitan Employees' Union with Luther C. Steward—the most unreliable people I have ever met in my life.

Senator KENYON. Was Luther C. Steward a union man?

Mr. LYNN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How about Mr. Graham?

Mr. LYNN. I think he is too.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know whether or not he has been employed by the union before he went into this work?

Mr. LYNN. I think he was in it.

Mr. MACCRATE. And do you think that you are better qualified than the men who are getting $3,500 or $3,000?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir; I have been in employment work, and I was there through the heavy war work, and they put them in there after the armistice was declared.

Mr. MACCRATE. You knew nothing about the work when you went in there?

Mr. LYNN. I came there from the Immigration Service.

Mr. BLANTON. And do you know of Miss Boyd's salary being raised since March 4?

Mr. LYNN. I do.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose a man was a strong labor-union man; would he have any trouble in getting work there?

Mr. LYNN. They seem to get the work all right.

Mr. BLANTON. So that you distinguish a labor-union man from a politician?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir.

Senator KENYON. How many salaries were paid—how many $4,000 salaries were paid?

Mr. LYNN. Well, I could not tell you; I would have to take and get the book.

Senator KENYON. Can't you give us any idea of how many?

Mr. LYNN. Oh, quite a number.

Sentaor KENYON. Do you think that there were 50 or 100, or about how many?

Mr. LYNN. Well, I could not just say how many, but somewhere between 30 and 50.

Mr. NOLAN. Without any notification to your chief?

Mr. LYNN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I had asked you numerous questions on various occasions?

Mr. LYNN. Yes.

Mr. MACCRATE. You gave him the information?

Mr. LYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MACCRATE. And the information contained in that letter that you received yesterday morning, was that ever talked over with you and Mr. Blanton?

Mr. LYNN. We had——

Mr. MACCRATE. Did you talk over with Mr. BLANTON the specific items of that letter that he wrote to you?

Mr. LYNN. Well, I said that I saw this thing go through my hands, that is all.

Mr. NOLAN. I sugest that the representatives of the Department of Labor, in view of this testimony, be permitted to cross-examine the witness, if they so desire.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me that the orderly way would be for them to hand in any questions that they might wsh to ask.

Mr. NOLAN. Well, if it is fair to Mr. BLANTON to permit him to question this witness, then it is no more than fair that the representatives of the Department of Labor have an opportunity to cross-examine him.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that the better way would be for them to put on evidence to contradict him, if they can do so.

Mr. NOLAN. I suggest that we leave that to their judgment.

Mr. BLANTON. My position is merely the same as every other member of this committee, a Member of Congress trying to get at fact. Now, this is the last time that I am going to be able to come before the committee——

Mr. NOLAN. But I am asking that they be allowed to cross-examine him at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. Unless I can interrogate the witnesses I have here today, it will be my last opportunity to bring out this testimony. Could you not give the department a chance to interrogate these witnesses at some other time?

The CHAIRMAN. My idea in the first place was not to permit you to examine the witnesses. I am opposed to this procedure. But if the committee wants these outsiders to come in and conduct the examination, why I will not object to it personally.

STATEMENT OF MR. C. A. BURROUGHS, AUDITOR FOR SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. BLANTON. What position with this Government do you now hold, Mr. Burroughs?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Auditor for the Shipping Board.

Mr. BLANTON. Did you ever have a position in the Employment Service?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Did you retire voluntarily or by request from that department?

Mr. BURROUGHS. I resigned.

Mr. BLANTON. Did anyone suggest that you should resign?

Mr. BURROUGHS. No, sir; I was asked to remain.

Mr. BLANTON. Have you got your letter of resignation?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HERSEY. When did you resign?

Mr. BLANTON. He has a copy of his letter of resignation. Give me a copy of it—of your letter of resignation.

Mr. HERSEY. Give me the date.

Mr. BLANTON. May 5, 1919. [Reading:] "Mr. J. B. Densmore, Director General United States Employment Service, Washington, D. C. Dear Sir"——

The CHAIRMAN. Is not that in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but I would like to get it in here.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not see why you should duplicate it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Burroughs, Mr. Densmore put into the RECORD yesterday—the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—the statement that you were a disgruntled employee and that you were furnishing me with evidence. Have you ever furnished me with any facts except when I asked you questions concerning that department and interrogated you? Did you furnish any others?

Mr. BURROUGHS. I will say that I never saw a Congressman, a Representative of Congress of either House, to give any information voluntarily.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know how I obtained my information concerning that department?

Mr. BURROUGHS. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Burroughs, in a statement in answer to questions that I propounded, I made a number of questions, and I propounded them to you, and you stated to me that you thought or considered this whole service as rotten.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I certainly did, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Is that true, or not?

Mr. BURROUGHS. It could easily be determined to be on investigation.

Mr. BLANTON. In your position, in charge of the transportation, did this $742 voucher of Miss Jeanette V. Densmore come before you, or was it submitted to you for your approval?

Mr. BURROUGHS. It should come to me to check the personal—for approval of the transportation——

Mr. BLANTON. Was that ever submitted to you first before it was paid?

Mr. BURROUGHS. No, sir; it was not, or it would have borne my initials.

Mr. BLANTON. These transportation books were required to be placed back into the department?

Mr. BURROUGHS. The procedure——

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting). They had to be placed back there?

Mr. BURROUGHS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And how many of them have been filed:

Mr. BURROUGHS. There are a great many of them, but no record has been kept of them. They are disposed of.

Mr. BLANTON. If a careful investigation had been made of the millions of dollars that have been spent by the department, in your judgment, how much would be shown to have been wasted and misapplied, from the investigation that you have made?

Mr. MACCRATE. Oh, that question I will object to, of course. You have a resolution asking for the data from this department?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and I would go into these details for the purpose of getting the data. It will be a disgrace if it is not.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us go on with the Employment Service end of it and ascertain whether an Employment Service is necessary.

Mr. BLANTON. But this man is a careful auditor. He is familiar with the duties, and he knows what happened. He is an expert——

Senator KENYON. He says that the whole thing is rotten. I would like to know the facts on which he bases the opinion.

Mr. BLANTON. That is along the lines testified to by the gentleman who was on the stand yesterday.

Senator KENYON. I would like to get the facts on which he bases his opinion that the whole thing is rotten.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Here is a sample. There is a man by the name of Hibbard who went into the service, and on his own statement he was earning $1,500 before he entered the service, about last April.

Mr. BLANTON. April of this year:

Mr. BURROUGHS. April of last year. His chief duty was to see that everybody was supplied with a desk, that needed a desk, or other office furniture, or to watch the boy getting out the stereotyped letters, the stenographic letters, in the stenographic bureau. I feel safe in saying that he should not be drawing considerably over $3,000. He is one of the men that went to France.

Senator KENYON. Was he a prominent politician, or anything like that?

Mr. BURROUGHS. No; not that I know anything about.

Mr. MACCRATE. What is he getting in France?

Mr. BURROUGHS. I could not say what he is getting in France. I heard that he was getting $4,500.

Had there been time for examination, Mr. Speaker, I could have shown numerous cases of absolute waste, extravagance, and misapplication of public funds by Mr. Burroughs, who remains willing at this time to appear before any committee of Congress and tell what he knows about the rottenness of this department.

After asking Mr. Collins and Mr. Brand a few questions, I found that both had been intimidated, and it was very apparent that if they gave testimony they would likely lose their positions, which neither could afford to do, as each was married and had a family.

To show the kind of punishment Director Densmore inflicts upon an employee who testifies before a congressional committee, note the following:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 7, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: As a result of my testifying before the Joint Labor Committee of the House and Senate relative to the inefficiency and irregularities in the United States Employment Service I have been deprived of my position. On Saturday, July 5, 1919, Mr. Mason, Director of Control Division, called me before him and told me that my pay would stop on Sunday, July 6, 1919.

On July 3, 1919, Director General John B. Densmore called me before him and concerning my having given testimony against him called me a "damned skunk," and otherwise insulted me.

I am a civil-service employee, and have devoted the past nine years of my life in the Department of Labor, quite a while before Mr. Densmore was ever connected with said department.

I did not appear before said committee voluntarily, and did not bring evidence before it voluntarily. But when as a Member of Congress you requested me to appear before the committee and requested me to bring certain evidence I felt that it was my duty to do so. I told only the facts. I have been insulted and callead a liar and thief because I brought requested documents before the committee and told what I knew. I have recommendations from leading citizens of the country attesting to my good character and standing. I still have confidence in the justice of the United States Government. I hope Congress will have it applied in my case.

I desire to ask that the Secretary of Labor be requested to place me back at my former position in the Bureau of Immigration, Department of Labor, from which branch I was transferred to the United States Employment Service without prejudice.

Very truly, yours, STANLEY R. LYNN.

Mr. Speaker, the above dismissal disgraces the Department of Labor. Because he gave evidence against Director Densmore the gentleman from California has called him a liar on the floor of the House. Stanley R. Lynn is a Royal Arch Mason in good standing, and the public will judge between him and Densmore. He established beyond doubt that Director Densmore had abstracted from the files of his office the three Pullman coupons that were attached to transportation request No. L51736, issued by his sister, and if I had not had copies made of them, by which the Pullman Co. could identify them, he would never have produced them.

In subsequent hearings, at which I could not attend, while Densmore was on the stand he was asked:

Senator KENYON. Mr. BLANTON stated here that the order for transportation, he exhibited here, and it had a clear indication of something having been removed from it. He exhibited here what he said were pinmarks. On the floor of the House yesterday he stated that he had substantiated his charge that something had been removed. There were pinholes in that transportation request.

Mr. DENSMORE. That is quite true. There were some pinholes in the transportation request, and that transportation request was removed by one of our clerks without any authority from the office, and that transportation request was pinned to this expense account.

Senator KENYON. He said in his speech yesterday:

"If they did pay their Pullman fares, it leaves Mr. Densmore in a worse position than before. Sir, like Banquo's ghost, these three Pullman coupons, issued July 4, 1918, office No. 2357, Form 2, and numbered 5071, 5072, and 5073, will not down, because two and one-half weeks ago they were attached to the transportation request, No. L-51736, made out by Miss Jeanette Densmore herself, in her own handwriting, and signed by her."

He had that transportation request before us.

Mr. DENSMORE. He had that transportation request.

Senator KENYON. You have not had it this morning?

Mr. DENSMORE. No; I presume that the stenographer has it.

And, later, Director Densmore, realizing that he was trapped, produced the Pullman coupons attached to another copy of transportation, and claimed that Mr. Lynn got hold of the wrong copy. It so happened that at the time I had copies made of these Pullman coupons I placed two identification marks on the transportation request to which they were attached, and the one Stanley R. Lynn produced before the committee with the pinholes in it still had my two identification marks on it, showing clearly that it was the one to which said Pullman coupons had been formerly attached.

When asked to explain why Miss Densmore turned in the three Pullman coupons from New York to Atlantic City July 4 with her expense account if they were paid for, all Densmore could say was the following:

These two young girls were seated with Miss Densmore in the car. The tickets were handed, all together, to the Pullman conductor, and when they were handed back by him, I presume that Miss Densmore took all three of them from the conductor, and not knowing what to do with them turned them all in.

Mr. GOULD. Why should the three Pullman seat tickets be attached to the expense account?

Mr. DENSMORE. They should not be.

Mr. GOULD. The expense account calls for one person and one trip, and I do not know why they call for three.

Mr. DENSMORE. The other two did not belong there at all. She got them back from the conductor, as I have explained, and she put them all in simply because she had them.

Such tommyrot. "The conductor handed Miss Densmore the three Pullman coupons, two belonging to other passengers, and not knowing what to do with them she just handed them in with her expense account." She seemed to know how to take a trip across the four corners of the United States shortly after that, a trip the like of which few people have ever taken, especially on Government expense.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR ASSISTING MOONEY.

Mr. Speaker, on June 21, 1919, I stated that it was a strange situation when we were appropriating $1,400,000 additional to apprehend anarchists, at the same time Secretary Wilson was reported to have spoken at Atlantic City from the same platform with Mrs. Rene Mooney, wife of the convicted anarchist, intimating that he was still trying to get Mooney a new trial, and I cited excerpts from the following papers:

[Daily Oregonian, Portland, Oreg., June 13, 1919.]

Secretary of Labor Wilson, speaking before the convention of the American Federation of Labor to-day, urged organized labor to refuse to support the nation-wide strike which has been proposed as a protest against the conviction of Thomas J. Mooney. Mr. Wilson told the delegates that the Government was investigating the claim that new evidence justified a new trial, and that he was devoting much time to the case

The Secretary declared that so far the Government's inquiry had shown that the judge and jury before whom Mooney was tried had conducted themselves properly and that on the evidence the jury had to convict.

Note the statement that "he—Secretary Wilson—was devoting much time to the case."

[Detroit Free Press, Detroit, Mich., June 13, 1919.]

WILSON HINTS AT A NEW TRIAL IN MOONEY CASE—CABINET MAN TELLS LABOR CONVENTION EVIDENCE IS BEING INVESTIGATED.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 13.

Secretary of Labor Wilson, speaking before the convention of the American Federation of Labor to-day, urged organized labor to refuse to support the nation-wide strike which has been proposed as a protest against the conviction of Thomas J. Mooney. Mr. Wilson told the delegates the Government was investigating the claim that new evidence justified a new trial and that he himself was devoting much time to the case.

[Chronicle, San Francisco, Calif., June 13, 1919.]

UNITED STATES SIFTING EVIDENCE IN STEP TO SECURE NEW TRIAL, SAYS SECRETARY OF LABOR.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 13.

Secretary of Labor Wilson, addressing the convention of the American Federation of Labor to-day, * * *. He said the Government was investigating the evidence in the case in connection with the movement for a new trial for Mooney.

And at the same time I charged that Director Densmore had spent some time in California installing a dictograph in the district attorney's office in an effort to assist Mooney.

On July 1, 1919, my colleague from Texas, Mr. HARDY, spoke in defense of Secretary of Labor Wilson, stating that the above newspaper reports were very unjust and unfounded, and he printed in the RECORD (pp. 2247–2250) what he said was the manuscript copy of the address of Hon. William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, before the American Federation of Labor Convention, Atlantic City, N. J., June 13, 1919, delivered to him by Secretary Wilson. I raised no objection. I am glad he printed it, for it clearly shows that every word in said newspaper articles is true, and that Secretary Wilson deserved even graver criticism. You will note that he began his address by the salutation "fellow trade-unionists." Note also (p. 2249) that in advising the convention not to call a nation-wide strike to force Mooney's freedom, and concerning such advice, he said:

You may accept it or leave it, as your own judgment tells you is best.

He, a Cabinet officer of the United States, head of the Department of Labor, and high up in power and authority in the American Federation of Labor, leaving the question thus open by telling them:

You strike or not strike, as your own judgment tells you is best.

Why should he leave the question open, when he admitted that Mooney had had a fair trial? For he said (p. 2249):

We looked into the Mooney case, and in doing so we came to this conclusion: That so far as the jury was concerned that passed upon the evidence presented to it, it could have come to no other conclusion under its sworn duty than to convict Mooney; that so far as the judge was concerned that tried the case, he tried it with absolute fairness.

Why did not this Cabinet officer of a Republic that stands for law and order then tell his audience, in which there were at least some anarchists, that the State of California had lawfully tried, convicted, and was punishing a red-handed, cold-blooded, murderous anarchist, who had deliberately caused the death of numerous innocent men, women, and children, and the serious injury of scores of law-abiding people, by throwing a bomb into a preparedness parade, and that neither the people nor the Government had any right to go behind the verdict of a California jury and the judgments of the California trial and appellate courts, nor to interfere with justice, law, and order in the State of California by letting unions, ignorant of the evidence, attempt to free a criminal through strikes simply because he was a union man?

But instead of closing the matter with advice of unmistakable directness, Secretary Wilson left it open to be further fanned by the flames of passion and prejudice by stating:

Every effort that the national administration was able to put forth was put forth for the purpose of trying to secure that new trial, and we are not through with it yet. We are still working on it. [Applause, long and continued.]

Note that Secretary Wilson said: "We are still working on it," and "We are not through with it yet," in regard to getting a new trial for an anarchist now serving his just punishment in a California penitentiary. By what authority of law is Secretary Wilson messing in this California case. Who authorized him to work on it or to interfere? Congress has never authorized any investigation. Congress has never authorized the expenditure of one single dollar on the Mooney case. Secretary Wilson has no connection with the Department of Justice. Simply because Mooney was a unionite does not give the Department of Labor any more jurisdiction than the United States Health Department would have where the murderer happened to be a doctor. And it is a very significant fact that all of the Washington papers heralded the news only the other day that Mrs. Rene Mooney, wife of the convicted anarchist, having failed to get an audience with the President, went immediately to the Department of Labor to see Secretary Wilson, intimating that she was always sure of an audience there.

On June 24, 1919, in defense of Director Densmore, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] printed in the RECORD a statement from Densmore wherein, on page 1799, RECORD, he stated that he became Director General of the United States Employment Service in January, 1918, which duties took all of his time, and it was October, 1918, before he found time to go to San Francisco, going there on other business and not on the Mooney case, that the Mooney investigation was practically finished when he arrived in San Francisco, "and that no person connected with the United States Employment Service had anything to do with it." He admits, however, the following:

The report of the investigators was transmitted by me to the Secretary of Labor. Unfortunately some of this report fell into the hands of the publisher of a local paper, who published it without any authority whatever.

Note that Densmore asserts that his report "fell into the hands" of a publisher in San Francisco, "who published it without any authority whatever." Now, the only paper that ever published said report is the San Francisco Call, and its publisher is Fremont Older, a quasi anarchist. Now, note what Fremont Older says editorially in his Call July 8, 1919, concerning the Densmore statement which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] placed in the RECORD:

"J. B. Densmore, Director General of the United States Employment Service, has not repudiated the dictagraph investigation of the Mooney case. A hurried and careless reading of Densmore's letter to Congressman BANKHEAD might lead to such an assumption because of the defensive and somewhat apologetic tone of the letter. But there is no word in the letter to justify the conclusion that Densmore did not authorize the investigation. On the contrary, he did authorize it, and forwarded the report to Secretary of Labor Wilson, signed by himself, and accompanied by his own letter of transmission.

"What Densmore does say is that he authorized the investigation of the district attorney's conduct of the Mooney case in his capacity as solicitor of the Department of Justice for the Department of Labor, and not as director of the Employment Service. Certain powers in Congress are attempting to abolish the Employment Service to dislodge Densmore as director. * * * Densmore's letter is nothing more or less than an effort to clear the Employment Service of any technical connection with the activities of himself and his two Government operatives in the Mooney case. Of course, it is lamentable that Densmore should appear to be apologetic. * * * The complete dictagraph report was brought to the office of the Call, and handed to the editor of this newspaper several days before it was published. Densmore himself called on the editor of the Call on two occasions, and at that time was well aware, etc. The fact that he is now put in a position of apparent trimming shows the enormous pressure, etc."

From an authentic transcript of the testimony given by said Fremont Older before the grand jury in San Francisco on December 30, 1918, I copy the following excerpts:

Freemont Older called as a witness:

Questioned by prosecuting attorney, Mr. Power.

Q. You are the editor of the Call?—A. Yes.

Q. I state to you, Mr. Older, that you are subpœnaed here to-night at the request of the grand jury, to answer questions relative to the Densmore report. Were you editor of the Call at the time the report of J. B. Densmore to the Secretary of Labor was published?—A. I was.

Q. How did the report come into your possesion, Mr. Older?—A. The report that was published in the Call was a copy of the report that J. B. Densmore signed and sent to Washington to W. B. Wilson, and was filed in Washington.

Q. How did that report come into your possession?—A. I will have to decline to answer.

Q. Who delivered that report to you?—A. I decline to answer.

Q. When was the copy of that report delivered to you?—A. I decline to answer.

Q. On what ground?—A. It is bearing on confidential relationship.

Q. Do you know Mr. Densmore?—A. I do.

Q. Do you know Mr. Parsons?—A. I know George Parsons.

Q. Did you know Ignatius McCarty?—A. I have met him.

Q. Did you submit any portion of that report?—A. Let's see (pausing). I submitted the portion of W. J. Dingee's confession. That was in my possession. I did not submit it; I was asked by Mr. Densmore about the Dingee confession, and I gave him portions of it.

Q. You had seen the report?—A. Yes. I also furnished the photographs of the ledger and the affidavit of Loesch.

Q. Can you give us the names of witnesses who can testify to the conversations?—A. George Parsons and Ignatius McCarty.

Q. Did you see any portion of this report as it was being gotten together from time to time before it was submitted?—A. I saw portion of it before it was finished; yes.

Q. Who submitted that to you?—A. I decline to answer.

Q. You accepted it as a report of the official Government?—A. I took it as an official document.

Q. Why don't you help us?—A. I can't help you to bring them here if they won't come. That is entirely in the hands of Secretary Wilson. All I have wanted was a new trial for Mooney. I sent word to Mr. Fickert, while publishing the Densmore report, that I did not want to muckrake San Francisco, but thought that it might lessen hatred toward Mooney and bring about a new trial.

Q. What was the purpose of printing it four consecutive days?—A. It was interesting. I was trying to influence public opinion. I have no feeling against Fickert.

Q. Have you ever helped Mooney in any way?—A. Yes.

Q. In what way?—A. I interceded for bail for him when he was in jail at Martinez.

Q. How long ago was that, Mr. Older?—A. That is, oh, several years ago.

Q. How did you come to?—A. The labor council asked me to see if I could not raise the bail money for him, and I got Pete McDonough to advance the money to bail him out when I was at Martinez. A committee waited on me from the labor council.

Q. A committee waited on you?—A. Yes; asking me if I would raise $4,000.

Q. Why would they go to you? The Labor Party was pretty strong in San Francisco.—A. The labor council did not want to be personally known in the matter; they were willing to guarantee the money but not openly.

Q. Were the labor council using you?—A. I did not feel that they were using me. They claimed him as one of their own, and wanted him bailed out, and so I sent for Tom Finn and went to McDonough and bailed him out.

Q. Who was the committee?—A. I can not remember.

Q. Were you invited to listen to the dictograph?—A. I was shown the plant.

Q. Where was it?—A. The Foxcroft Building, on Post Street.

Q. When did you see Densmore last?—A. I should say the 1st of November.

Q. How did you come to see him then?—A. He called on me.

Q. With the view of submitting this report?—A. He discussed the report with me. He knew that I knew Secretary Wilson very well and was very much interested in the Mooney case, and some people in Washington sent him to me.

Question by one of the GRAND JURORS. What is there in that Densmore report that shows that Mooney did not get a fair trial?

Answer by Mr. OLDER. Nothing.

Q. Did you receive this report from anyone now in San Francisco?—A. No.

Now, Mr. Speaker, can any one escape the conclusion that Fremont Older got that report direct from John B. Densmore? On June 20, 1919, I introduced resolution No. 128, to require Secretary Wilson to furnish Congress with said Densmore report and a statement of all activities by the Labor Department in behalf of Mooney, and expense thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Labor. Under the House rules I would have been privileged to call it up on June 28. But the Committee on Labor reported it June 27 with amendments that would have left the matter to the discretion of Secretary Wilson. I opposed all such amendments, asserting that Secretary Wilson would never produce this report until he was forced to do so, as he had refused to give copies to several Congressmen who asked for it. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], the chairman of the Labor Committee, showed that before reporting the resolution he had had Secretary Wilson before him, who showed a willingness to comply without direction, but I succeeded in defeating all such amendments, and the resolution was passed June 27. Days and weeks passed, without Secretary Wilson indicating any intention to comply with the direction of Congress. Following precedents, on June 20, 1919, I introduced a second resolution, No. 185, as follows:

[H. Res. 185. 66th Cong., 1st sess. In the House of Representatives, July 19, 1919. Mr. BLANTON submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Labor and ordered to be printed.]

Resolution.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to report forthwith to the House of Representatives of the United States of America the following facts:

(1) What fact or facts, if any there are, have caused him to fail to comply with the request of the House of Representatives made upon him by H. Res. 128 passed by the House of Representatives on June 27, 1919, of the following tenor:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, requested to promptly report to the House of Representatives at the earliest date practicable the following facts:

"(1) What connection in behalf of the Department of Labor, if any, has John B. Densmore, now Director of the United States Employment Service, had with the case of Thomas J. Mooney, convicted in California of crime, stating in detail the activities of said Densmore concerning said case, and the expenses of same itemized that were paid by the Government, and upon what authority of law, attaching copies of all reports concerning same made to the Department of Labor by said John B. Densmore.

"(2) What connection in behalf of the Department of Labor, if any, since the punishment of said Thomas J. Mooney was commuted to life imprisonment, has any employee of said Department of Labor had with the said case of Thomas J. Mooney, stating such activities in detail, the purposes thereof, the expense itemized in connection therewith that has been paid or is to be paid by the Government, and upon what authority of law, attaching copies of all reports made to the Department of Labor concerning said case.

"(3) What requests on the Department of Labor, if any, have been made by a grand jury or a court in California for said John B. Densmore to appear in California to give evidence, and what action concerning same was taken by the Department of Labor."

(2) Resolved further, That said Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish forthwith to the House of Representatives the facts called for in the said H. Res. 128, set forth above, as passed June 27, 1919.

The newspapers immediately reported that under my privilege I would call this resolution up for action as soon as the six days expired, and intimated that the House might hold Secretary Wilson in contempt. This got immediate action, for on July 23, 1919, the Speaker of the House of Representatives received from Secretary W. B. Wilson, of the Department of Labor, a communication dated July 22, 1919, accompanying the Densmore report on the Mooney case. Note the following excerpts from Secretary Wilson's letter:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
Washington, July 22, 1919.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of attested copy of House resolution 128, dated June 27, 1919, calling upon the Secretary of Labor for information relative to the connection of certain of the department's employees with the case of Thomas J. Mooney, now serving a life sentence for participation in the Preparedness Day bomb explosion of July 22, 1916, at San Francisco, Calif.

In September, 1917, the case of Thomas J. Mooney had become not only a criminal case, but an international and a labor case. As long as it remained purely a criminal case it was not a matter with which the Federal Government had any right to interfere. Diplomatic correspondence indicated that the Mooney case was being used in foreign countries, particularly in Russia, as a means of destroying the friendly relations existing between this people and the people of Russia, and was affecting the conduct of the war. Labor strikes were taking place or were threatened as a means of influencing the judicial and executive authorities, thereby disturbing the industrial situation throughout the United States.

In January, 1918, Mr. Densmore was appointed Director General of the newly created Employment Service, but as he was more familiar with the immigration cases than anyone else he was directed to proceed to San Francisco when those cases came up for trial in November, 1918. At that time the immigration inspectors referred to placed in his hands a report which he transmitted to me. A copy of the report is herewith attached.

On November 25, 1918, I received a telegram from William H. McCarthy, foreman of the grand jury of the city and county of San Francisco, asking me to instruct Mr. J. B. Densmore to return to San Francisco for the purpose of assisting the grand jury in the investigation of certain charges of corruption contained in his report. On November 30, 1918, I received a telegram from Edmund P. Mogan, presiding judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, asking me to direct Mr. Densmore to go to San Francisco immediately and report to Foreman William H. McCarthy of the grand jury and become a witness before that body. I declined to direct Mr. Densmore to return to San Francisco for that purpose, first, because the grand jury had been in continuous session for about six months, with District Attorney Fickert as its legal adviser during that time. Fickert was reflected upon by the Densmore report.

And concerning the activities of himself and employees of the Labor Department in behalf of Mooney since his death penalty was commuted to life imprisonment, Secretary Wilson said:

It is not deemed compatible with the public interest to disclose at this time its activities.

In other words he followed the example of Fremont Older before the grand jury, and declined to answer.

And concerning the demand of Congress for an itemized statement of the amount of money spent by the Department of Labor in behalf of Mooney, Secretary Wilson again said:

It is not deemed compatible with the public interest to itemize this statement at this time.

Again, like Fremont Older, he declined to answer, or in other words he told Congress "to go to the devil," as it had nothing to do with the spending of public money in behalf of anarchists.

Now, let us see whether Secretary Wilson and John B. Densmore have been frank with us, in asserting that Densmore went to California on immigration matters and had nothing to do with making this report, other than sending it for inspectors. Note the following excerpts:

THE MOONEY CASE.

A REPORT ADDRESSED TO THE SECRETARY OF LABOR BY J. B. DENSMORE, DIRECTOR GENERAL OF EMPLOYMENT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., November 1, 1918.

Hon. W. B. WILSON,
Secretary of Labor, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Pursuant to instructions received from time to time during the past six months, I have the honor to report that I have conducted a secret and altogether informal inquiry into the Mooney case, and beg leave to submit herewith the results of my investigation. Before entering into a recital of the various steps pursued in carrying out the operation, it might be well to call attention to a number of peculiar features which have characterized this case from the beginning, in order that there may be no misconception, either as to the issues involved or as to the necessity which arose for the employment on the part of the investigators, of somewhat unusual methods of obtaining information.

On the surface and in its narrowest aspect the Mooney case may be defined as the case of the people of the State of California against Thomas J. Mooney and certain other defendants, four in number, charged with perpetrating a bomb outrage in the city of San Francisco during the Preparedness Day parade, on July 22, 1916, thereby causing the deaths of 9 or 10 persons and the injury of numerous others. Of the five defendants, four have been tried. Two of these, Mooney and Warren K. Billings, were found guilty, Mooney now being under sentence of death and Billings serving a life term in the penitentiary; the other two, Mrs. Thomas J. Mooney and Israel Weinberg, were acquitted. The case against the fifth defendant, Edward D. Nolan, has virtually been dropped for lack of evidence. All five of these persons have been more or less prominently identified with the union-labor movement in San Francisco.

It was charged by the prosecution that these five defendants were animated by anarchistic motives and that the bomb explosion which they were alleged to have planned and consummated was the climax of a carefully laid plot to strike a blow at existing social and political institutions and intimidate all those who were in any way concerned with placing the country in a state of military preparedness.

In my investigation of the Mooney case I have kept these facts well in mind and proceeded on the theory that an unwarranted attack upon labor leaders, with a premeditated and deliberate intention to injure and discredit union labor generally * * *.

The alternative plan was to proceed secretly, with but two or three men, and make no move that would attract attention. * * *

It was therefore decided to work secretly.

I had at this time two trusted assistants in San Francisco, and to these I confided my plan of operations, leaving, however, the execution of the details very largely to their own judgment. * * * It was absolutely necessary to the success of the operation to install a dictaphone in the office of the district attorney, Mr. Charles M. Fickert. This task was a seemingly impossible one, owing to the fact that Fickert keeps himself barricaded behind double-locked doors on the fourth floor of the Hall of Justice, in a private office to which only one other man has the keys.

The full details as to how this dictaphone was finally installed will probably never be divulged, as no good purpose could be served by a recital of the facts, interesting as they are. Some idea of the difficulties involved will be gained when it is stated that more than two months of careful and clever work were required before the installation was complete and the machine in actual operation.

Fickert's office in the Hall of Justice is a very large room in the southwest corner of the building, on the topmost floor. (See diagram, Exhibit A.) It is lighted by two arched windows, one overlooking Portsmouth Square to the west, the other fronting Merchant Street on the south. The district attorney's desk is in the extreme southwest corner of the room, between the two windows. Besides the desk, the room contains a large oblong table; otherwise there is little furniture. On floor and table, in picturesque disarray, are countless exhibits alleged to relate to the activities of the I. W. W.'s, the Mooney defendants, and other reputed agitators and dynamiters.

For dictaphone purposes the location was by no means an ideal one. Rumbling teams and street cars, tooting automobiles, the shouts of Chinese children playing around the Robert Louis Stevenson fountain in the park opposite—these and other sounds from Kearney Street ascended and mingled with the voices of those conversing within the room. The room itself was about 25 by 30 feet, and when conversations were held in a low voice at some distance from the transmitter the results attained were not always satisfactory.

Considerable experiment was thus required to adjust the delicate microphone to the peculiar and somewhat baffling conditions. After trying out various combinations of batteries, resistance coils, amplifying valves, and receivers, and making several novel improvements never before attempted in similar lines of work, a final satisfactory adjustment was at last achieved.

I know of no better way to present the mass of valuable information secured through the use of this machine than to incorporate the full transcript in the body of this report. It is lengthy, but at the same time it is illuminating; and any digest, paraphrase, or abridgment would perhaps fail to convey either the true atmosphere of the district attorney's office or the full significance of the record itself. In view of the importance of the case it is not believed that further apologies are necessary for this introduction of what in other circumstances might justly be considered an unconscionably long and detailed account of miscellaneous and not always interesting conversations.

In order to complete these prefatory remarks, it might be well to add that the conversations in the following transcript were all overheard by two or more persons, usually by three, though sometimes by more than three. For the sake of clearness it has been thought best to insert brief notes of explanation wherever necessary; these are invariably given in brackets. Wherever the conversation was obscure or inaudible, the fact is noted. In the telephone conversations, both voices could usually be heard. Sometimes, however, the microphone failed to transmit the voice at the far end of the line.

And, Mr. Speaker, as stated by Fremont Older, in reply to the grand juror's question, there is absolutely nothing in any of these dictograph conversations, nor in Densmore's report, that shows that Mooney did not get a fair trial, and there is nothing therein warranting a new trial. Secretary Wilson admitted this in his speech at Atlantic City, when he said:

We looked into the Mooney case, and in doing so we came to this conclusion: That so far as the jury was concerned that passed upon the evidence presented to it, it could have come to no other conclusion under its sworn duty than to convict Mooney; that so far as the judge was concerned that tried the case, he tried it with absolute fairness.

And Mr. Speaker, as may be reasonably deducted from Fremont Older's testimony before the grand jury and the other facts, this whole Densmore dictograph installation and report was a frame-up pure and simple, between Densmore, Fremont Older, and other anarchist sympathizers to create public sympathy in favor of Mooney. Fremont Older says he is an old friend of Secretary Wilson. He says that parties in Washington sent Densmore to him. Who connected with Densmore in Washington besides Secretary Wilson knew Fremont Older and knew that he would be a Mooney helper? Why the necessity of such secrecy in investigating, as Densmore says was imperative, when on the very day, November 1, 1918, when Densmore signed and dated said report, he called on Fremont Older, a newspaper man, and discussed the report fully with him? Other than from Densmore himself from whom could Fremont Older have gotten an authentic, facsimile copy of this very important secret report? For, Mr. Speaker, this report published by Fremont Older is an exact copy, word for word, of this official report Secretary Wilson sends Congress. Why did Densmore handle it that way? Why did this Government official, the Director General of the United States Employment Service, drawing $6,000 and travel expenses besides $4 per diem in lieu of subsistence, and who intended to raise his own salary to $7,500 had I not killed his $10,000,000 appropriation, ruthlessly and deliberately violate the felony laws of California, by tapping wires and then compounding crime by violating another felony law in burglarizing the district attorney's office and other offices in the California department of justice, not to assist in catching anarchists, but purposely to assist in turning loose a convicted anarchist guilty of heinous, cold-blooded murder of innocent men and women? This is the indictment John B. Densmore must answer. And why has Secretary Wilson condoned these crimes by refusing to return Densmore to California law? Is Secretary Wilson in favor of law and law enforcement? Why does he think an exception should be made for the Anarchist Mooney simply because Mooney is a member of a labor union? Suppose when a doctor commits crime all doctors would demand his release or they would strike. Suppose when a lawyer commits crime all lawyers would demand his release or they would strike.

Suppose when a farmer commits crime all farmers would say, "Turn him loose or we will strike and quit raising food to feed the Nation." Such tommyrot! Simply because Lenin and Trotski, anarchizing Russia, demand of this country the release of Mooney, must Secretary Wilson accede by asserting that the anarchistic bomb murder ceases to be a criminal case and becomes an international labor case affecting Russia, and without any authority of law or authorization from Congress he must spend the money of the people breaking felony laws to free this anarchist? That is the indictment Secretary Wilson must answer to the people. The most reprehensible act of all was the statement Director Densmore gave to the press on July 23, 1919, simultaneously with the sending of his report by Secretary Wilson to Congress, which heralded broadcast throughout the United States the assertion by him that his report showed that Mooney had not been given a fair trial, when he knew full well that such assertion was false and that his report did not contain a single fact proving unfairness in the Mooney trial. Being thoroughly familiar with every word of said report, Fremont Older, in his testimony before the grand jury, and Secretary Wilson, in his address to the American Federation of Labor at Atlantic City, both admitted that no other verdict and judgment could have been rendered. But Director Densmore is a past grand master in disseminating false propaganda.

LETTER AND STATEMENT FROM JUDGE C. M. FICKERT, DISTRICT ATTORNEY FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO,
July 8, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have been especially energetic in obtaining facts and information which directly bear upon the Mooney case. This course of inquiry has led me, among other places, into the Department of Labor.

I first found that those who were high up here in working with and defending the extreme radicals, including Mooney and others, had some mysterious influence in Washington. I traced it generally into the Department of Labor. Thereupon I diligently sought out as best I could facts which have convinced me of the large significance of the sympathy manifested in that department for those who were actively engaged in the cause of extreme redicalism.

From your splendid expressions, which have been brought to my attention, I feel confident that the inclosed information will be interesting and helpful to you.

It has been my earnest purpose to state only such facts as can be fully substantiated by reliable and competent evidence. This is true, because my own associates and investigators have obtained the information and substantiated it.

I place this information in your hands without reservation and to make such use of it as will best subserve the general public good.

With assurances of my highest regard, I am,

Yours, truly,

C. M. FICKERT,
District Attorney.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY C. M. FICKERT'S STATEMENT OF FACTS SUBSTANTIATED BY COMPETENT AND RELIABLE EVIDENCE.

In order to get the dictaphone into Mr. Fickert's private office, Ignatius McCarty, operator under J. B. Densmore, approaches W. H. Rush, an employee of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company, which is under Federal control, and had this man (who felt that he was doing an official act, as McCarty showed him his authority as a representative of the Department of Labor) kill Mr. Fickert's private phone, and when complaint was made that the phone was out of order W. H. Rush came to the office, and by changing the phone to another circuit had a direct wire out of Mr. Fickert's office.

McCarty then burglarized Mr. Fickert's office in order to install his microphone.

We have been reliably informed that Leona Dunbar Esmond, who claims to be the common-law wife of Fred Esmond, since convicted in Sacramento United States District Court for violating the espionage act with 45 other I. W. W. and sentenced to Leavenworth for 10 years, and who was also working on the Mooney defense, was one of the parties listening in and taking notes and reporting for J. B. Densmore. She is also a personal friend of Theodora Pollok, the Lady McBeth of the Sacramento cases, also convicted with Esmond. Miss Pollok is a personal friend of William Kent, ex-Congressman. Selig Schulberg, a Russian anarchist and close associate of Emma Goldman, Alexander Berkman, Thomas J. Mooney, who was very active against preparedness and on the Mooney defense committee with Robert Minor (who is now under arrest in France), was also listening in.

The report discloses many confidential conversations between Mr. Fickert and Commander Van Antwerp, who was head of the Navy Intelligence Department; Capt. Watkins and Lieut. Holm, of the Army Intelligence Department, and Deputy United States Marshal Thomas Mulhall, who gathered the evidence and secured the confessions that since convicted 46 I. W. W. in Sacramento, who were the cause of destroying millions of dollars' worth of property by sabotage.

Besides the conversations reported, further data was spoken of over the telephone that was of most importance, and from the developments it is almost certain that this data was used to try and keep the different departments from the detection of criminals.

The report quotes some conversations in regard to one Ytturiago; and by reading the affidavits from Mr. Word and Mr. Nixon you can see how the report interfered with Mr. Fickert getting more data on the Mooney case.

The report was also used to try and have some effect on the Sacramento I. W. W. cases that were about to be tried.

After the Densmore report was published the following officials requested that J. B. Densmore be ordered to return to San Francisco and substantiate his charges: Hon. William D. Stephens, governor of the State of California; Hon. U. S. Webb, attorney general of the State of California; Hon. James Rolph, jr., mayor of San Francisco; Hon. E. P. Mogan, presiding judge of San Francisco; William H. McCarthy, foreman of the grand jury of San Francisco.

On the other hand, we find that the International Workers' Defense League, who have represented and secured funds for Ford & Suhr, I. W. W. who killed the district attorney and sheriff of Yuba County, also for the McNamaras, and now for Thomas J. Mooney, and who had on their pay roll Leona Dunbar Esmond and Selig Schulberg, sent a letter to W. B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, protesting against the investigation by the grand jury.

Secretary Wilson then appoints William Denman, the law partner of G. Stanleigh Arnold, to act as a representative for the Department of Labor.

Mr. Denman declined this appointment; and Secretary Wilson then appointed G. Stanleigh Arnold, the son-in-law of William Kent (who is a personal friend of Theodora Pollok, the convicted I. W. W.) to represent him at the grand-jury investigation. Mr. Arnold's decision is best expressed in his letter to Gov. Stephens.

The cause of Mr. Arnold's decision may be deducted from his close connection with William Kent and his friendship for Theodora Pollok, as expressed in his letter to Henry Twombly under date of February 16, 1918.

The grand jury decided to continue the investigation, and had a subpœna served on William J. Armstrong, a second-class yeoman of the United States Navy, who was especially assigned to the Department of Labor. On being called before the grand jury said Armstrong refused to testify, on the ground that he had to get instructions from his superior officer and later on the ground that he may incriminate himself.

The grand jury investigation extended from November 25, 1918, to January 6, 1919, and the following witnesses appeared:

William J. Armstrong, November 25, 1918; William M. Turner, November 25, 1918; Attorney General U. S. Webb, December 4, 1918; Assistant Attorney General E. B. Power, December 4, 1918; William J. Armstrong, December 9, 1918; Mrs. Virginia Judd, December 9, 1918; Duncan Matheson, captain of detectives, December 12, 1918; Chas. Goff, lieutenant of police; A. L. O'Grady, assistant district attorney; William R. Proll, detective, December 12, 1918; William J. Otts, December 12, 1918; Geo. R. Richards, detective, December 12, 1918; Gus Hartman, December 16, 1918; Peter P. McDonough, December 18, 1918; Ben Selig, December 18, 1918; Edward F. Bryant, tax collector, December 19, 1918; Benj. F. Phillips, December 19, 1918; James M. Hanley, attorney-at-law, December 19, 1918; William T. Boyce, December 23, 1918; Jas. J. Groom, clerk superior court, December 23, 1918; Frank R. Butler, clerk superior court, December 23, 1918; William J. Armstrong, December 23, 1918; Daniel E. Anglum, December 30, 1918; Fremont Older, editor San Francisco Call, December 30, 1918; Dr. Wm. S. Card, December 30, 1918; Howard Vernon, grand jury stenographer, January 6, 1919; Fred L. Berry, assistant district attorney, January 6, 1919; Jas. F. Brennan, January 6, 1919; Edward A. Cunha, assistant district attorney, January 6, 1919.

The examination of the above witnesses was conducted by Assistant Attorney General E. B. Power, who was appointed by Attorney General U. S. Webb at the request of Gov. Stephens, Presiding Superior Judge E. P. Morgan and William H. McCarthy, foreman of the grand jury.

The decision of the grand jury is inclosed herewith:

The Department of Labor has in its employ one Anton Johannsen who holds a title of inspector of munition plants.

Johannsen was indicted in Los Angeles for the dynamiting conspiracy. He was very active in the defense of the McNamaras; also Kaplan and Schmidt, all of whom were convicted in Los Angeles for dynamiting. He was also active in the Ford and Suhr I. W. W. cases and in 1914 when Mooney was tried for having high explosives he was very active in Mooney's defense.

Before the preparedness parade Alexander Berkman, Mooney, Johannsen, and other radicals issued a weekly paper known as The Blast. After the preparedness parade bomb outrages, Johannsen was most active in securing funds for Mooney's defense. He was later put on the pay roll of the International Workers' Defense League as a field representative and has always, even while receiving pay from the Government, advocated a nation-wide strike for Mooney.

Another representative of the Department of Labor—Paul F. Brissenden, formerly a professor at the University of California. Paul F. Brissenden contributed an article to T. J. Mooney's paper, The Revolt, in December, 1911, which advocates direct action and sabotage. A copy of the article is inclosed.

He was also advertised to address the Industrial Socialist League which was organized by T. J. Mooney.

In 1916, Paul F. Brissenden wrote a letter to the New Republic criticizing an editorial and praising the I. W. W. and declaring the I. W. W. a very live organization.

In 1918 Brissenden wrote a book on the I. W. W., which praises their work.

In 1919 Paul F. Brissenden appeared as a witness for the defendant in the People v. Bruce, et al., charged with criminal anarchy at Seattle, and from the newspaper reports his testimony as a representative of the Department of Labor in regard to the I. W. W. was the basic argument of the defendant's attorneys for a verdict of not guilty.

In the police courts of San Francisco we have had several defendants arrested under the criminal syndicalist law and in each case John G. Lawlor, one of T. J. Mooney's attorneys, appeared for the defendants and requested the judge to read Paul F. Brissenden's book on the I. W. W. The most noteworthy of these cases are Emanuel Levin, secretary of the People's Institute, now held for trial to the superior court, and James P. Malley, secretary of San Francisco Local I. W. W., who was before Judge Brady and released on $250 cash bail, and who since has been indicted by the grand judy. He took flight and is now a fugitive from justice. Paul F. Brissenden formerly lived in Berkeley, Calif., with his mother, brother, and sister.

Richard B Brissenden, his brother, was a subscriber to Mooney's Revolt in 1911.

When James P. Malley, the Secretary of the I. W. W., was arrested we secured the books of the local members and R. B. Brissenden's same appears on the roll; also E. Brissenden name is on the roll, and his sister's name is Elizabeth Brissenden.

OPINION OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL CASPAR ORNBAUM.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, from a letter written by Assistant Attorney General Caspar Ornbaum to Hon. Jackson H. Ralston, Evans Building, Washington, D. C., on April 11, 1919, I quote the following excerpts concerning Director Densmore:

Concerning some of the facts, which I am familiar with, covering the operations of Mr. Densmore, * * * I soon reached a position where I placed no credence in the work of Mr. Densmore, and his chief operative, Ignatius McCarty. My attention has been called to reports, which they wrote concerning me, which are malicious lies and Mr. Densmore knows himself that I can prove in a most conclusive manner that he did lie concerning me and he did it for some ulterior motive. * * * These statements were willful and malicious lies. * * * He lied to me on so many other occasions * * * and was unable to produce evidence when he was called upon to produce it that I lost faith in him and came to the conclusion that he had a motive for the attitude he was taking, and I still believe that. * * * The people of the Pacific coast look upon him as a renegade, and a person who has done more toward discrediting the administration than all of the other things that have occurred since our beloved President has taken the chair. * * * My experiences with Mr. Densmore and his chief operative, Ignatius McCarty, has been that they work under cover, and do their dirty work at one's back, have absolutely no respect for the truth, and after they have made their reports are not men enough to back them up. This was well illustrated when Mr. Densmore came to San Francisco only recently and in an effort to free Mooney, who no doubt is one of the most notorious criminals in the United States or elsewhere, for the sole and only purpose of gratifying the vicious state of mind of one Fremont Older, went back into history a period of 20 years or more and tried to ring in, in a parenthetical way, matters concerning our former supreme court justice, Mr. Henshaw. The Henshaw matter had absolutely no bearing upon the Mooney case, and it is well known to all of us who are familiar with events in San Francisco that Fremont Older claims that he has possessed this evidence for years, and has long looked for a pretense to disclose it to the public, and we find Mr. Densmore, presumably a confidential agent of the Government, coming to the coast and lending himself in a most disreputable and conspicuous manner as a tool to this Fremont Older. * * * I have been very closely in touch with the operations of Mr. Densmore on this coast, and they have not only disgusted me but have disgusted the whole thinking people on the Pacific coast, and he is not man enough to come to California and face a lot of the dirty insinuations and other apparently disreputable matters that he has made public. * * * You may rest assured that my views are supported by the business men of the city of San Francisco.

CASPAR A. ORNBAUM.

STATEMENT FROM HON. WILLIAM H. METSON.

Note the following excerpts from letter:

SAN FRANCISCO, July 8, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We do know that in October of 1918 a room was rented in the Balboa Building and three listening-in telephones were secured from the Pacific Telegraph & Telephone Co. and installed by their man Howells. Thereafter the superintendent of the building went into this office and there saw three men in that office. The name of the man who rented the room was Lewis.

We do know that the three trunk lines of our office were tapped from that room. We do know that the district attorney's office was also tapped (by a man named Ignatius McCarty) and that it was tapped at the same time that these three men were in the Balboa Building and from a different place. Therefore there must have been more than two men operating, as stated by Densmore, although he had to hold to that, because he limits this matter to employment with the United States Employment Service.

We do know that the wires of the Assistant United States Attorney General, Caspar Ornbaum, were tapped.

We are also advised that Densmore had another wire-tapping office in the Foxcroft Building. We also know that Densmore's name was called in the United States district court as a Government witness, without response, and that both the court and the United States attorney criticized his failure to appear and testify. He did not dare to come before the court to testify.

The telephone company's bill for installing telephones was about $100 in the Balboa Building, with similar bills for the other buildings.

Concerning Densmore's claim that his report fell into the hands of a publisher and was published without authority, we are reliably informed that this report was written up in the office of Fremont Older, of the Call, probably by a man named Gleeson, and that Fremont Older discussed the matter with Secretary Wilson before he published the Densmore report.

When Densmore tries to minimize the expense in his report to Congress he is simply camouflaging. It may not have all come out of one particular branch of the Labor Department. It was, however, illegitimately spent.

The money was public money, and our district attorney here told me that he thought $15,000 to $20,000 was expended in these wire-tapping operations. I gladly assist you to expose this cowardly, sneaking crookedness on the part of public officials.

The district attorney stated that the result of his investigations on this wire-tapping matter was that there were about 2,000 miles of telephone wire tapped in San Francisco by these sneaks, who had to commit felony under the laws of California.

Yours, very respectfully,

WILLIAM H. METSON.

Mr. BLANTON. And, Mr. Speaker, from the testimony of the witnesses, M. G. Word and Frank Nixon, to which District Attorney Fickert referred as having been discovered since the trial of Mooney, and the discovery of other similar testimony to use in convicting other dynamiters, the action and report of Densmore interfered with and hindered by putting such criminals on their guard, I copy the following excerpts:

FROM TESTIMONY OF M. G. WORD.

M. G. Word, being first duly sworn, says: "I am 30 years old, married, reside at Martinez, Calif.; that from information from my nephew, Clarence Frick, I was led to believe that Remedio Yturriago, who married Frick's aunt, had important knowledge concerning the preparedness day bomb-explosion atrocity July 22, 1916. With Frank Nixon we called on Yturriago. He said that he was one of Tom Mooney's closest friends, and exhibited to us photographs of Tom Mooney and Mrs. Mooney, who frequently took dinner at his home, he said. On the following evening we took Yturriago riding in Nixon's automobile. Yturriago talked of the labor movement, and said he was an I. W. W., and had been since 1912. He said the bomb was intended for higher-up officials in the parade. The following evening I took Yturriago for an automobile ride, and he talked of Mooney's shrewdness and of his friendship and approval of Mooney. On October 12, 1918, Nixon and I visited Yturriago, who told of blowing up the Pacific Gas & Electric Co.'s transmission tower on June 10, 1916, and said if he told what he knew about it he could get $5,000 from the gas company. About October 15, 1918, Nixon and I met Yturriago at his home, planning to take an auto trip to the Kern County oil fields.

"At this visit Yturriago stated that the bomb for the preparedness-day explosion was very well prepared.

"He also stated that Tom Mooney was the best dynamiter on the coast and an expert in the use of time-clock devices for setting off bombs.

"He also stated that Mooney could trust only about 16 men of all the men he had organized at Yturriago's house, numbering altogether about 300 men.

LET MOONEY OUT BACK WAY.

"He stated that Mooney was a frequent visitor at his house, and that many times upon these visits he (Yturriago) had let Mooney out the back way to escape detectives who had followed Mooney to Yturriago's house.

"Yturriago also pretended to a great skill and understanding of the construction of bombs, whether for the destruction of property or the killing of people.

"He stated that in constructing a bomb to kill people you should take a pipe so long [indicating about 14 or 18 inches] and from 2 to 4 inches in diameter, with 70-pound caps and dynamite sticks tightly packed with clay, and surround the same with boiler cuttings, slugs, and cuttings of iron, packed tightly in a container; thus the slugs, cuttings, etc., would be scattered in all directions.

MOONEY AND TROTSKI.

"At this time Yturriago also stated that Mooney had met Trotski while Mooney was carrying on I. W. W. propaganda in Europe during his visit there, and that they were quite intimate friends, and that Trotski had visited Mooney in Mooney's cell at the county jail in San Francisco before Trotski left for Europe.

"Yturriago was very radical in all of his talk, and expressed great confidence that Mooney was so clever that he could always find an out.

AT YTURRIAGO'S HOUSE.

"Yturriago stated at this time also that a few days before the preparedness day explosion, Mooney and a few unmentioned friends of Mooney's held a secret meeting at Yturriago's home.

"On this trip Yturriago discussed Mooney's general activities as a radical, the efforts he had made in behalf of the McNamaras, and in behalf of "Blackie" Ford and Suhr.

"He at this time also stated that Ed Trainor was one of Mooney's closest and most active associates, and that Trainor went to Mare Island to 'do some work for the I. W. W. cause.'

"While Trainor was at Mare Island a powder magazine there was blown up.

"I asked Yturriago, what if Mooney confessed his participation in the preparedness day bomb explosion? Yturriago said: 'I would hang, too.'

"Yturriago told me that he, Billings, and Mooney dynamited the Pacific Gas & Electric Co.'s transmission power on the night of June 10, 1916.

"I asked him if Weinberg drove them that night and he said no; that they hired a six-cylinder, high-powered car, and that Billings drove the machine; that they stopped the automobile about three-quarters of a mile from the tower, and that they walked to the tower to be dynamited.

"Yturriago and Mooney stood guard about 100 yards away, and Billings climbed up into the tower to place the explosive.

"He stated that Mooney had made this bomb and fixed the time clock attachment to explode it at 2 a. m., and that it exploded about that time, but did not do the damage they expected, for which they blamed Billings.

"We then got talking about the preparedness day parade, and I asked him whether he thought Mooney would hang.

"He said, 'I guess it's all off with Tom.'

"I asked him if he thought Mooney would confess, and he said 'No.'

"Yturriago then stated that Mooney was most disappointed when the McNamaras confessed. I asked him if there was not a great number of people involved in the preparedness day explosion.

"He said no, that Mooney let only a few people work on each job.

"He also stated that Fitzgerald, Berkman, Ed Nolan, and Schulberg had knowledge of what was going to happen in connection with the preparedness day explosion. He said that on the day of the explosion Mooney rode in Weinberg's car.

"His object in doing this was to locate the United Railroads division, as that was the particular division they wanted to get.

"He further stated that Mooney picked up Billings and took Billings to the scene of the explosion, and that Billings actually placed the suitcase which contained the bomb which exploded.

"Continuing, Yturriago said: 'I got the pipe for Mooney that the bomb was made of,' referring to the bomb exploded during the preparedness day parade at Steuart and Market Streets.

"Yturriago stated also on this occasion that Mooney operated what he called his own system; that when he wanted any particular work done on any particular zone he would call upon certain men in that zone to do it; and if he was afraid any member would squeal he would have a man come from another zone and kill him.

"Yturriago said further that he was always afraid of Weinberg, but that Mooney had great confidence in him, and that when it appeared in the papers that Weinberg was about to confess, 'it scared hell out of me.'

"Yturriago further stated that a little while before the preparedness day parade, Billings was working at the Cadillac garage.

"Yturriago asked Mooney why Billings was working there in a 'scab joint,' and that Mooney said Billings was there for a purpose, and that the 'whole damned joint would go up some night.'

Mr. BLANTON. And by sworn testimony Frank Nixon corroborated the above statements made by M. G. Word.

Mr. Speaker, I have before me certified copies of the court papers in the case of John A. Roberts, plaintiff (assignee of John E. Gardner), versus John B. Densmore and his brother G. A. Densmore, defendants; cause No. 95030, in the superior court of San Francisco, Calif., showing that upon default judgment for a debt of $440 was rendered, the said petition therein alleging:

That on or about the 1st day of July, 1917, the above-named defendants and each of them, jointly and severally, by false and fraudulent representations secured from said John E. Gardner, at that time an inspector and chief interpreter of the Chinese language at the Angel Island immigrant station, this port, the sum of $440, which they promised to return upon demand.

II.

That on or about the 1st day of July, 1917, by false and fraudulent representations, and by trick and device, the defendants, and each of them, jointly and severally, by false pretenses secured from the said John Endicott Gardner the sum of $440, which they then and there converted to their own use.

That since the said 1st day of July, 1917, the said John E. Gardner has many times demanded of the said defendants and each of them that they repay the said sum of $440 to him, but they have refused so to do; that no part of said sum has been paid, and the same is now due and owing; that the said John B. Densmore is the director of employment under his uncle, W. B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, at a salary of $6,000 per year, and G. A. Densmore, his brother, represents the said Wilson at San Francisco, at a salary of $5,000 per year.

Mr. BLANTON. And, Mr. Speaker, this is the director general John B. Densmore we have permitted to spend millions of dollars of the people's money, and who, by the provisions of the Nolan-Kenyon bill, would be permitted to spend $4,000,000 more annually. The first thing that ought to be done is to disconnect him from the public pay roll.

STATEMENT FROM JUDGE O. P. STIDGER.

[Stidger & Stidger, attorneys at law, 628 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Calif. James A. Stidger, O. P. Stidger, John P. Irish, Julius Whiting, jr., Catlin & Catlin, Penfield & Penfield, of counsel, Henry C. Kennah.]

Representative BLANTON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This communication relates to John B. Densmore, who styles himself "Director General of Employment for the United States." Densmore is "wanted" in San Francisco, and has been warned that if he steps foot in California he will be arrested on a felony charge and held for trial—with an absolute certainty of conviction. Two of Densmore's "operatives" have confessed to District Attorney Frickert involving Densmore. Densmore is clearly guilty of suborning perjury.

Densmore boasted that his investigation of the so-called "Angel Island graft cases" cost the Government over $50,000, with no result, except to prove him a scoundrel, liar, and suborner of perjury.

Respectfully, yours,

O. P. STIDGER.

THREE STILL IN THE EMPLOY OF THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 22, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Your letter of July 14, 1919, concerning Messrs. Ignatius McCarty, William J. Armstrong, Anton Johannsen, and Paul F. Brissenden has been received.

In reply to your queries you are advised that the files of this department show:

(1) That Mr. William J. Armstrong was appointed in the Immigration Service as underclerk (S. & T.) at $1,020 per annum, San Francisco, Calif., January 19, 1916; promoted to $1,200 December 16, 1917; promoted to $1,320 on May 1, 1918; resigned at the close of August 19, 1918; and was reinstated as junior clerk at $1,320 on January 20, 1919, Seattle, Wash., which position he still occupies.

(2) That Mr. Anton Johannsen was appointed an examiner in the National War Labor Board, at a salary of $13 per day, on September 12, 1918. He continued in that service until December 15, 1918, on which date his services were discontinued.

(3) That Mr. Paul F. Brissenden was appointed in the Bureau of Labor Statistics as special agent, at $1,200 per annum, July 17, 1915, payable from "Salaries, Bureau of Labor Statistics." Was temporarily promoted July 5, 1916, to $1,400 for three months. On August 1, appointed expert outside the District of Columbia, at $1,400. On July 16, 1917, promoted to $1,600; August 1, 1918, promoted to $1,800; April 16, 1919, promoted to $2,000 per annum, which position Mr. Brissenden now holds.

(4) That Mr. Ignatius McCarty was appointed special agent in the Bureau of Immigration, at $4 per day, on June 2, 1917; that he was made immigrant inspector, at $6 per day, on January 1, 1918; that he was made a special agent in the employment service, at $3,500 per annum, on January 31, 1919; that on May 1, 1919, he was reappointed as special agent in the employment service, at $2,500 per annum, and is still employed in that position.

Respectfully, yours,

W. B. WILSON,
Secretary of Labor.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], take me to task and attempt to defend Secretary Wilson when I make just criticism of him.

At the same convention which Secretary Wilson addressed at Atlantic City, the delegates to which he saluted as "fellow trade-unionists," at the instance of negro unions a resolution was passed condemning the mobbing of negroes in the South when they assault white women, and the American Federation of Labor sent a copy of these resolutions to each Senator and Congressman in Washington. The newspapers favorably commented upon it, and within a few days thereafter the assaults here in Washington by negroes upon white women began, and you have hardly been able to pick up a paper since then without reading an account of such an assault. And the Nation's Capital since then has been a seething riot, with numerous deaths and injuries resulting. The reason there are so few assaults by negroes upon white women in the South is the knowledge, sure, definite, and certain, that there is but one result—speedy punishment to the offender, and the good negroes in the South lead in the apprehension and punishment.

And it was this same convention, addressed by Secretary Wilson, which sent a "brewers" delegation to Washington to march on the Capitol in protest of the Constitution and prohibition.

The following authentic statement has been sent me by one of the leading citizens of San Francisco familiar with the facts:

SAN FRANCISCO, June 23, 1919.

Hon. T. L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I read with great interest your remarks printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 14, 1919.

I want to compliment you on what you said and for your having the courage to say it.

In 1916 San Francisco people concluded to have a preparedness parade along the lines of one that had been held in New York City.

Committees were appointed and the parade arranged for.

Immediately the subject was broached tremendous propaganda, headed by one Fremont Older, then editorial manager, was launched in opposition.

The parade was set down for 1.30 o'clock on Saturday, the 22d day of July, 1916.

On the Thursday before an antipreparedness parade meeting was held at a public hall here, and the crowd was addressed by many radicals along the lines opposing our country preparing for war and critical of our Government.

The Mooney crowd were there in full strength. One of the speakers was a man named McDevitt.

McDevitt, among other things, said that anyone who marched in that parade should be shot in the back; that there should be but one flag in this country, and that the red flag of blood.

What further was said I do not suppose will be interesting to you, but on that very day the paper edited by Fremont Older, published in large type a warning to those who were in favor of labor not to march in that parade nor to be on the streets on that day, as there was going to be trouble. Postal cards were sent to many not to take part in the parade.

The procession started promptly at 1.30 o'clock. After the head of the column had proceeded five or six blocks beyond the starting point on Stewart Street, which was near the starting point, this bomb was exploded on the sidewalk, against the wall of a house. It had been placed in a dress-suit case on the sidewalk. It killed 9 or 10 people and wounded 50 more, some of them permanently. For instance, one young girl had her foot torn off at the ankle. The mother of two other little girls died within an hour or two. Many women and children were among the killed and injured.

Within a very short time the culprits were caught, and they proved to be Mooney and Billings.

Upon Mooney's person when arrested was an I. W. W. card and a membership card in a German society.

Mooney had been editing a radical paper called the Blast. This organ was circulated among the anarchistic element, and the articles were traitorous and vile.

Mooney had been a dynamiter. He went to Europe in 1912, and was in Germany and Russia as a delegate and associated with the radical Socialists and, we are assured, with anarchists.

In about 1912 Billings, who was convicted of this same bomb outrage, was caught traveling on a passenger train from here to Sacramento carrying a dress-suit case in which was dynamite and which also contained the clockwork and the fuses for making dynamite bombs.

Billings was very cautious with this dress-suit case in getting on the train and while on it, so much so that suspicion was excited, and the railroad people put a shadow on him and traced him directly to a saloon, where he met Mooney.

At this stage Billings was arrested, as was Mooney. The dress-suit case was taken and used as evidence. Billings was convicted and sent to the penitentiary.

Mooney escaped, because the only evidence was the meeting between them.

Later there was an electrical strike and a great many towers carrying high-voltage wires were dynamited and blown up. Suspicion was attached to Mooney and he was followed, and near Martinez one night he was captured in a skiff. In this skiff was found all the paraphernalia for making bombs and everything except the dynamite or explosive. He had in the boat at that time a blackjack, to carry which is a felony. He had a rifle with a Maxim silencer and a shotgun that had been washed with aluminum so that it could be used in the dark.

He was going to a rendezvous which, when searched, was found to contain large quantities of explosives, but he escaped because the law covered the explosive element and not the other paraphernalia. After a couple of trials in Contra Costa County the prosecution ceased its efforts to convict him.

With best wishes and hoping that you will get out this way some time, I remain,

Very respectfully, yours,

The following are authentic portions of the report of the grand jury that investigated Densmore's report:

REPORT OF THE GRAND JURY OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO IN THE INVESTIGATION OF THE REPORT OF J. B. DENSMORE.

Hon. GEORGE E. CROTHERS,
Presiding Judge Superior Court, San Francisco, Calif.

SIR: Since November 22, 1918, the date of its publication in the San Francisco Call, the grand jury of the city and county of San Francisco has had under investigation the charges of municipal corruption contained in the report of John B. Densmore, Director General United States Employment Service, to the Secretary of Labor, Hon. William B Wilson.

These charges primarily concerned the office of the district attorney of the city and county of San Francisco, Mr. Charles M. Fickert, and the attorney general of the State of California was requested by the then presiding judge of the superior court, Hon. Edmund P. Mogan; by the governor of the State of California, Hon. W. D. Stephens; and by the grand jury of the city and county of San Francisco to assist in the investigation.

The attorney general, Hon. U. S. Webb, appeared in person before the grand jury and named Mr. E. B. Power, assistant attorney general, to conduct the investigation. At the outset Mr. Webb and Mr. Power informed the grand jury that the investigation would, both by law and of necessity, be confined to the determination of the alleged misconduct and alleged malfeasance in the office of Mr. Fickert. Through the many weeks of our work, therefore, the sole question before the grand jury has been the determination of the truth or falsity of these charges in so far as they concern the district attorney and the conduct of his office.

It was to be expected that as these charges had been made in a published report by an official of the United States Government, that the grand jury would be assisted in its investigation by such official and by those of his subordinates who might have been employed in procuring the evidence upon which the report was based. The contrary proved the case.

Mr. Densmore departed and refused to answer either the subpœna of the grand jury or the request of the foreman that he return to San Francisco for the purpose of assisting in the investigation. Appeals to the Secretary of Labor that he instruct Mr. Densmore to return to San Francisco, by the Hon. W. D. Stephens, governor of the State of California; Hon. Jas. Rolph, jr., mayor of San Francisco; Hon. Edmund P. Morgan, the then presiding judge of the superior court; and the foreman of the grand jury, William H. McCarthy, proved equally unavailing, despite the assurance given by the Secretary of Labor in a wire to the governor of the State, under date of November 17, 1918—"I am instructing Mr. Densmore to put into your hands a complete copy of his report to me, and I am also instructing him to place himself entirely at your disposal." To this the governor replied, in part, under date of December 2, 1918, "Therefore, the proffered presence here of Densmore is necessary, and I request that you direct him to report forthwith to the attorney general of this State, who will guide the matter in all its further legal developments."

Mr. Wilson, however, did appoint Mr. William Denman to represent him. For what purpose we are unable to state, but Mr. Denman promptly declined the appointment. Subsequently, and for the same indefinite purpose, Mr. Wilson appointed Mr. G. S. Arnold, and after several more days waiting, Mr. Arnold, in a communication dated December 23, 1918, addressed to the Hon. W. D. Stephens, stated that he was directed by the Secretary of Labor "to state that he will not at this time direct either Mr Densmore or his assistants, Messrs. McCarthy and Parsons, to return to San Francisco." Three reasons were given for this refusal, upon which it is unnecessary to comment here.

For 32 days, therefore, the grand jury had been led to believe that the author of the charges and his assistants would appear. In the meantime every other available agency of investigation was employed. At the request of the grand jury, two members of the police department, Officers Malberg and Kelly, under Lieut. Fred A. Lemmon, were detailed to assist by Chief of Police D. A. White. Every witness who could shed light or information on the charges was called and testified. The exception was one of Mr. Densmore's assistants, Mr. William Armstrong, who, when subpœnaed before the grand jury, declined to testify on the ground that he might incriminate himself.

The Densmore report remains an unconfirmed and unsubstantiated document. There is no evidence to show by whom or when or how the information was secured. The reason of Mr. Densmore's visit to San Francisco, as well as its object, has not been disclosed. Just what his instructions may have been, who authorized the investigation, and who approved the expense incident thereto are equally in doubt. The only apparent facts are that with or without the knowledge of his superiors the report filled with uncorroborated and unproven charges, embodying entirely irrelevant matters, quoting and exhibiting the salacious details of one of the so-called Baker Street cases, was given publicity. That the author immediately fled and failed, not alone to respond to the service of the State courts, but to service of the United States courts as well, and since the publication of the report has been protected in his position and encouraged in his silence by the head of the Department of Labor.

It is to be regretted that any official of the United States Government would be permitted to come to San Francisco or any other city and give publicity to a report reflecting not alone on its officials but upon the morality and integrity of the community and then deliberately fail to assist in substantiating the charges and refuse to support them. It is even more regrettable that the same official, without reprimand or censure, could be permitted to evade the service of subpœna, and when outside of the jurisdiction of the courts of California could give expression to the statement made by John B. Densmore in the Oregon Journal of November 25, 1918, reflecting on the good name of San Francisco and of the State of California.

It is most regrettable that the Secretary of Labor would lend himself to such a proceeding and not alone repudiate his promise made to Gov. William D. Stephens to place Densmore and his assistants at his disposal in the investigation, but through the Department of Justice assist in deliberately blocking it. Through his efforts the United States district attorney was directed by the Attorney General of the United States to appear in court and offer in defense of her client the plea that Mr. Densmore's operator, William Armstrong, an employee of the Department of Labor and Justice, could not answer any questions pertaining to the Densmore report on the ground that he might incriminate himself. Most investigating bodies are assisted in their deliberations by the Government. This grand jury has found itself in the peculiar position of being opposed and hampered and blocked in its efforts by officials of the Government and more particularly by the very officials who made and gave publicity to the charges.

The grand jury wishes to express its appreciation of the services rendered by Assistant Attorney General E. B. Power and of his careful, impartial, and conscientious assistance. The grand jury is also indebted to the governor of the State, Hon. W. D. Stephens; the attorney general of the State, Hon. U. S. Webb; the mayor of San Francisco, Hon. James Rolph, jr.; the presiding judge of the superior court, Hon. Edmund P. Morgan; and Chief of Police D. A. White for their aid and help..

Respectfully submitted.

GRAND JURY CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.
WILLIAM H. MCCARTY, Foreman.

Dated January 13, 1919.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the issue of the Revolt for December 23, 1911, which was an anarchistic paper then published by Thomas J. Mooney, advertising the speaking of Paul F. Brissenden on Sunday night, January 7, 1912, at the Germania Hall on "Direct action and direct organization," and wherein Mooney then called the said speaker "Comrade Brissenden"; and that Secretary Wilson certifies that this Paul F. Brissenden is still working for the Department of Labor, now getting $2,000; having had five promotions, first, $1,200, then $1,400, then $1,600, and on August 1, 1918, to $1,800, and on April 16, 1919, to $2,000. Is it not about time to clean house? We can not expect a Government free from anarchy when it is tolerated and rewarded by Cabinet officers. President Wilson was imposed upon when organized labor insisted that W. B. Wilson be made Secretary of Labor, and the error should be remedied as soon as possible.

I have on my desk the July, 1919, issue of Freedom, a journal of constructive anarchism, published at New Brunswick, N. J., rural free delivery No. 1, box 130, by Harry Kelly, editor; Leonard D. Abbott, associate editor; and J. Isaacson, business manager, in which there is an advertisement for subscriptions to Bread and Freedom, a Russian weekly devoted to anarchism.

How much longer are we to keep on drifting? The Nolan-Kenyon bill should die a natural death until we clean up our Department of Labor from top to bottom.

To show that the farmers of the South do not want this bill passed, I close by inserting the following statement from their Representatives here:

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
615 Woodward Building, July 12, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON.

DEAR SIR: We desire to call your attention to a bill now pending before a Joint Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States, relating to the continuation of the United States Employment Service Bureau, and making an appropriation of more than $4,000,000 for this purpose.

During the war the people of the United States were willing to sanction anything that might be of service in winning the war, and because of this willingness on the part of the people to try anything and everything, a great many institutions, boards, committees, and the like sprung up and became a great burden on the people, but now that the war is over the people of this country desire to discontinue all of these expensive war-time institutions.

Thousands of telegrams have been sent out from Washington to boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and like organizations throughout the country, urging support for the continuation of the Employment Service Bureau, and every effort possible has been put forth to create a sentiment in favor of it.

The farmers of the country do not want this organization continued, and expect Congress to abolish it. The operation of this bureau has not proven satisfactory in the farming districts, and in many cases its operation has been a decided detriment to the cultivation and harvesting of crops. The class of men sent out by this bureau are usually agitators, preaching eight-hour days, which every farmer knows is not practicable and which has a tendency to dissatisfy, disorganize, and demoralize home labor. Farmers have to work when they can and can not observe regular hours like other occupations. The Labor Employment Bureau sends them out and the Department of Justice is compelled to send its agents along to keep them from spreading I. W. W. propaganda, thus keeping two Federal departments busy.

In less than one year from the date of the establishment of the United States Employment Bureau Service there were over 500 employees in the department in Washington and nearly 4,000 field representatives on the pay roll of the Government. If this thing is continued it is safe to say that within 10 years or less there will be at least 10,000 employees on the pay roll and the appropriations will be several times the amount asked for at this time.

True Americanism stands for the unity of the family and for home ownership. This department breaks up the home and discourages home ownership and increases the transient and itinerant class. In fact, if it should operate any length of time, there is no doubt but that there would be thousands of people in the United States who would become Federal Employment Service tramps, depending entirely upon the Government to tell them when and where to go.

They contemplate the creation of a junior department, the purpose of which will be for Government experts to take hold of our boys and girls at a tender age and examine them as to what avocation they are naturally adapted, and place them in positions under the direction of these Government experts. The head of the junior department maintained at the hearing before the joint committee that the parents, the teachers, and the boys and girls themselves were not prepared to discover what avocation the boys and girls should follow, and that the only persons qualified to do this were the experts in this department. We see in this plan a development of the Prussian system in free America, and a breaking up of the home influence over our boys and girls and the destruction of the individual in an attempt to perfect a vast machine.

Very respectfully,

JOHN A. SIMPSON,
President Oklahoma Farmers' Union.

E. A. CALVIN,
Washington Representative,
Association State Farmers' Union Presidents.

Deportation of Certain Undesirable Aliens.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALBERT JOHNSON
OF WASHINGTON.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, July 29, 1919.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization having to-day authorized several amendments to House bill 6750 since the same was reported with one amendment to the House, I desire, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks, to explain briefly these amendments and the necessity for them, as follows:

Amendment No. 1: Page 1, line 9, after the quotation mark, insert the words "if the Secretary of Labor, after hearing, finds that such aliens are undesirable residents of the United States" and a comma.

With reference to this amendment permit me to state that every deportation, to be sustained by the Supreme Court, must show "due process of law." The committee, after giving full consideration to all the facts presented by the Department of Justice and the Department of Labor with respect to interned and convicted aliens, holds to the view that nearly all aliens now interned and nearly all aliens convicted of violation of the war statutes named in this bill ought to be deported. But before deporting any alien, whether interned or convicted, such alien ought to have and is entitled to a hearing on the fact of his undesirability as a citizen. It is provision for such a hearing that this amendment makes.

The bill as reported carried two different provisions, and there appeared a possibility that one or the other might prevail, or that one might be disregarded as contradictory, so that in construing the provisions of the law the courts might conclude that no hearing was required in the case of an alien convicted of one of these war acts. As to an interned alien, there could not have been such a construction, for the provision for a hearing in such cases was clear. This amendment simply requires a hearing running to the question of the desirability or undesirability of the alien. The words immediately preceding carry the provision that such alien shall be taken into custody in the manner already provided by law.

Amendment No. 2: Page 1, line 10, strike out the words "or may hereafter be."

This amendment is offered in the interest of accuracy. Reference is to interned aliens. We have interned all aliens who needed to be interned for the protection of the country in time of war, and it is unlikely that additional internments will be made. In fact, the Attorney General is still releasing internees, or was up to a short time ago.

Amendment No. 3: Page 2, strike out lines 7 and 8.

This amendment avoids redundant construction, the words stricken out being inserted, in effect, in the amendment at line 9, page 1.

Amendment No. 4: Page 2, lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "offense committed against any of the following laws of the United States" and insert in lieu thereof the words "violation or conspiracy to violate any of the following acts or parts of acts."

This amendment is offered as better construction than that in the reported bill and in the interest of brevity. By adopting this amendment we are able to strike out subparagraph (i).

Amendment No. 5: Page 3, line 15, strike out the word "also."

This word is stricken out to avoid possible confusion. It has been suggested that, if this word be included, a construction not intended might be read into the law. That is to say, the word "also" might be held to imply the requirement that a convicted alien must have been convicted of any one of the offenses mentioned in subparagraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), and (g), and in addition thereto a violation of section 6 of the Penal Code. By striking out the word "also" the intention is made plain that a conviction of violation of section 6 of the Penal Code stands by itself as a cause for deportation.

Amendment No. 6: Page 3, strike out all of lines 17, 18, and 19.

This amendment follows as a consequence of amendment No. 4. The wording of subsection 2 having been changed to include conspiracy to violate these war acts, it is not necessary specifically to mention section 37, the conspiracy section of the Penal Code.

Amendment No. 7: Page 4, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "Sherman antitrust law" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Act entitled 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies,' approved July 2, 1890."

This amendment is offered in the interest of accuracy.

Amendment No. 8: Page 4, lines 3, 4, 5, and 6, strike out the words "the fact that such aliens were ordered interned or were convicted of any of such offenses shall be deemed to be prima facie evidence that said aliens are undesirable aliens, and."

The words stricken are considered unnecessary.

Report No. 143, to accompany the bill, states that the measure provides for the deportation as undesirable residents of two classes, as follows: (1) Those alien enemies at present interned as dangerous alien enemies but not convicted of crime; (2) those alien enemies convicted of violation of various acts passed in connection with the war.

The hearings developed that, of the first class—that is, interned unconvicted alien enemies—517 are now held at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., and at Fort Douglas, Utah. The number was at one time in excess of 4,000, that number having been interned out of about 7,000 taken into custody under presidential warrants. Many of these were paroled, and the paroles have now been canceled. Some 2,000 were permitted to return to Germany voluntarily for the purpose of repatriation.

Of the second class, the records show that about 150 convicted alien enemies will be made subject to deportation upon the enactment of this bill for violations of the various acts enumerated.

The Soldier Settlement Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, July 31, 1919.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. EVAN J. JONES, of Pennsylvania, has prepared an interesting analysis of the so-called soldier settlement bill, which I ask consent to print in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. Many Members who want to do the right thing by the soldier and who do not want to be misled have been making inquiries as to the effect upon the soldier of many of the bills that have been introduced, ostensibly in his behalf. The bill H. R. 487, which has been given careful attention by the Committee on the Public Lands, is more discussed than any other, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JONES], at the request of a number of his colleagues, has given it and the hearings pertaining to it close and careful study. I think a perusal of Mr. JONES's views and conclusions upon this much-talked-about measure will be helpful to every Member of Congress who is in doubt about what should be done.

The recess we are about to take will find many of our colleagues back home talking to their constituents upon this subject. We would not, I am sure, want to hand to the soldier an expensive and useless piece of legislation. If we buy remote land which the soldier himself will have to pay for, we may be giving aid and assistance to the landowner rather than to the soldier. If we encourage him to go upon land that is waste and unproductive, we may find that instead of benefiting him we may incur his displeasure.

The story which is told by the gentleman from Pennsylvania leads to no other conclusion than that the scheme which the Secretary of the Interior has been promoting with vigor is not popular with the great mass of the brave boys who fought for us in Europe, since so few of them seem to understand or appreciate it, and that if we are to do something for the soldier in addition to the $60 already granted him upon discharge from the Army some other plan, more in keeping with his inclinations and requirements, must be resorted to. And in view of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JONES] so clearly points out, it may be well to consider whether we should tax the people up to the billions to buy land which the soldier may not want to use. It should be remembered that the soldier is expected to pay for such land as the Government takes from those who desire to sell, and that to the extent he colonizes and breaks it he reduces the supply of labor upon farms already productive and foregoes the opportunity which the better soil presents.

VIEWS OF REPRESENTATIVE JONES.

We will have a few weeks' surcease from the deadly July grind of Congress to think over this very important matter. That the views of Mr. JONES may be available for consideration during the interim, I have asked that they be put in the RECORD. Evidently we need light and skillful guidance with respect to this problem of giving a square deal to those who constituted the Army and Navy in the great World War.

Representative JONES of Pennsylvania says:

"Some time ago I was asked by some of my colleagues of the Pennsylvania delegation to attend the hearings before the Committee on the Pubic Lands in relation to the bill introduced by Mr. MONDELL (H. R. 487) and report my findings, without in any way committing any member of the delegation to the conclusions found. I attended some of the hearings, but on learning that the hearings were printed I saw no necessity for my personal presence, and therefore arranged to have the printed statements and testimony sent to my office. I have up to date read all the statements made before the committee and have formed for myself a conclusion on this bill, which I herewith submit. I do not propose to discuss the phraseology or the construction of the bill. I analyze it from two standpoints: (1) The purpose and scope of the bill; and (2) the application or necessity. The bill contains 10 sections.

THE BILL.

"The first section states that to provide employment and rural homes for (a) those who served with the military and naval forces in the United States during the war between the United States and Germany and her allies, and (b) former American citizens who have served with the military and naval forces of any of the nations allied against the Central Powers and who have been expatriated, and for that purpose establishes a fund in the Treasury to be known as the 'National soldier settlement fund,' to be administered by the Secretary of the Interior.

"The second section allows the Secretary of the Interior to acquire by gift, purchase, deed in trust, or otherwise, necessary lands for soldiers' settlement projects, and to withdraw, utilize, and dispose of public lands suitable for such purposes. The price to be paid and the conditions under which they are acquired shall be approved by a representative of the governor of the State in which the lands are located, and an appraiser designated by the Farm Loan Bureau and the Secretary of the Interior.

"The third section gives absolute control to the Secretary of the Interior, through such agencies as he may provide for the permanent reclamation or development of the project, including the building of essential public roads, and put them in condition for use and cultivation. A sum not in excess of $1,200 in any single case may be drawn from the fund for improvements. The amount drawn must not be in excess of three-fourths of the cost or value of improvements.

"The fourth section recites that the project shall be divided into suitable farms for the support of a family, and, at the Secretary's discretion, into smaller farms, called 'workers' tracts.' Dedication may be made for schools, churches, community centers, and other proper purposes. Town sites suitable for the purposes of the project may be established, developed, and sold.

"The fifth section says that a preference shall be given to those who work on the project in the selection of farms. It excludes from the benefits of the act soldiers who are the owners or proprietors of farms or rural homes and gives the Secretary power to make rules and regulations, general in character, as to residence and cultivation.

"The sixth section states that the purchase price of these farms by the soldiers shall be fixed with a view of repaying the total cost of each project, and the price fixed for each farm, tract, or lot shall represent as nearly as practicable its relative and apparent selling value. It provides that the applicant shall at the time of making the contract pay 5 per cent of the value, the balance to be extended through a period of not exceeding 40 years, with 4 per cent interest, and the loan for improvements to extend through a period not exceeding 20 years, with the same interest. Forfeiture clauses are to be in each contract.

"The seventh section, to my mind, is rather ambiguous. The intention is, I believe, to prevent the transfer, assignment, mortgage, or lease of any right, title, or interest held under any of these contracts without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior at any time during their life, and for a period of 10 years after the contract is made, even though within that time the purchaser receives his deed and the Government has no interest, it can not transfer, assign, mortgage, or lease without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior.

"Section 8 authorizes the Secretary to make short-time loans, not to exceed $800 at any one time, for equipment and live stock. This loan must not be in excess of 60 per cent of the cost of the live stock and equipment purchased and be repaid, with 4 per cent per annum, within a period of five years.

"The ninth section allows the Secretary of the Interior to enter into a contract with any State that provides funds to be expended in cooperation with the United States, and if the State shall furnish 25 per cent of the necessary funds the Secretary may authorize the State, subject to his general supervision, to carry on the subdivision of the land, improvement of farms, and the aid and direction of development after settlement, and to provide for reimbursement of funds so advanced by the State. This section also authorizes the Secretary to cooperate with other agencies to the extent he may deem advisable and otherwise provide for reimbursement to them of funds advanced.

"The tenth section is as follows:

"That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act the sum of $500,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated.

PURPOSE OR SCOPE.

"I have studied this bill in the light of the reports and statements made by everyone who appeared as its proponent, and I am irresistibly drawn to the conclusion that the words "national soldier settlement act' in the title are just a wrapper to sell the stuff more readily. It is a reclamation scheme primarily, although in the minds of many of its friends it is a feasible and commendable plan to employ our returned soldiers and to secure for them a farm or rural home. This end is just incidental. The real thing that is to be accomplished under the provisions of the bill is the development of undeveloped land in large areas found only in a few States.

"It is a settled principle of law that the intention of parties to a contract is the best guide to its interpretation, and the intention of the advocates or proponents to a statute is the best guide to its interpretation.

"Secretary Lane in his report to the chairman of the committee on this bill says it is drawn upon lines similar to those bills introduced in the last session of the Sixty-fifth Congress by Representative TAYLOR of Colorado (H. R. 15993) and Representative BYRNES of South Carolina (H. R. 13651), upon which that department made favorable reports, and it is interesting to read the enacting clause of H. R. 13651, which Secretary Lane says is similar to House bill No. 487. I quote it:

"Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated to be immediately available, and to remain available until expended, a sum of $100,000,000 to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the investigation and irrigation, drainage, and development of swamp, arid, waste, and undeveloped lands for the purpose of providing employment and farms with improvements and equipment for honorably discharged soldiers and the title of the bill is 'Making an appropriation for the reclamation of swamped lands.'

"There are at least six other bills on this same subject matter introduced in this Congress. I have read many of them, and in every one the primary idea in the mind of the draftee is the development of undeveloped lands and reclamation by irrigation or drainage or otherwise of the arid and waste lands. The big thing is the idea of the development of large areas of compact, contiguous lands. The bill to the contrary notwithstanding, the development of checkerboard farms for individual holders is remote.

"The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who introduced this bill, speaking before the committee (pt. 1, p. 6), said:

"Now briefly as to the plan and purpose of the bill. It is proposed to secure by purchase, gift, deed, or in some other manner areas of land from the various States, and in all of the various States where such lands are available in sufficient areas when divided into farms to form complete and comparatively independent communities. * * * The community-settlement idea is at the bottom of this legislation. It is believed that development of communities is essential; that only in that way can we reclaim large areas of land that are now comparatively useless but contain all the essential elements of fertility when they are made available; the lands that while they are not now available for intensive cultivation and successful use by reclamation in the various forms that may be necessary, depending upon the character of the area, may be made very desirable and very attractive places of residences and successful farming communities.

"I am emphasizing this feature of the matter because that is the very base of this soldier settlement bill—the community idea. If the thought on which this bill is based and on which practically all the bills have been based, as I understand it, is carried out, no developments will be attempted where there is not available a sufficient area of suitable land for a good sized, comparatively independent community, and the development will be with such reservation for towns and community centers as may be necessary to foster and develop and maintain the community idea.

"Now, the thought is that after these areas have been secured—arid in the West, cut over in the Northwest, and in parts of the South overflowed or partly overflowed in some sections, abandoned in others—the soldiers and sailors will be invited to aid in the work of developing and restoring them. They will be paid good wages in their work of development, and they will be given to understand that under the provisions of the bill the men who work on the project and, incidentally, the man who works longest on the project, because that would be within the discretion of the Secretary, shall have the preference in the selection of tracts when they shall be divided. In the development of these projects it is proposed to utilize the splendid organization of the Reclamation Service, expanding and enlarging, increasing and extending it. * * * Under the provisions of this bill as it stands—and this is rather an important matter—the Secretary may go into this work of development as far as he deems it essential to go in order to place the lands in condition where the individual can with his own labor utilize them for farm purposes."

"The gentleman from Wyoming in this statement gives you the gist of this bill. He gives you the purpose and the scope of this bill. He tells you in definite and positive terms that the primary object is the development of large areas of compact, contiguous, heretofore-undeveloped lands, and that the benefits to soldiers are incidential only as the soldiers are a means to accomplishing the larger and more important purpose. Every interested proponent speaking on the subject brings out this same thought.

"The Reclamation Record, a magazine issued monthly by the Reclamation Service, Department of the Interior, in its issue of June, 1919, on page 243, under the title 'Soldier settlement in the South,' quotes F. H. Abbott, secretary of the Georgia Land Owners' Association, with these words:

"Therefore, when Congress last year appropriated $200,000, and directed the United States Reclamation Service to use it in the investigation of arid, swamped, and cut-over lands in connection with proposed soldiers' settlement legislation, the South realized that a new day had dawned in her agricultural development, for the searchlight of the Nation's great land-settlement agency was to be turned upon her agricultural resources and potentialities."

"The Southern Land Congress were so interested in the soldiers of our country (?) that they entitled a pamphlet containing 155 pages 'Soldier settlement in the South.' This pamphlet contains the proceedings of the Southern Land Congress. The Southern Land Congress was held under the auspices of the South Settlement and Development Association, Florida Tick Eradication Committee, North Carolina Land Owners' Association, and Savannah Board of Trade. Every address at this congress on November 11 and 12, 1918, emphasized what I have called in this report the primary idea behind this bill. The dominating thought was the reclamation of the cut-over timber lands in the South or the reclamation of the swamps. The keynote of all the speeches might be phrased in the following quotation by Thomas W. Bickett, governor of North Carolina, one of the speakers, who said:

"Mr. Secretary, North Carolina pledges to you lively support and loving sympathy in the prosecution of this noble work. You have the plans, the South Atlantic States have the lands. From Virginia to Florida millions of acres, now a wilderness, are waiting to become a paradise at your touch. It is my judgment that in the State of North Carolina alone can be found desirable homesteads for at least half the returning soldiers who will feel inclined to take advantage of the opportunity the Government affords.

"I have no quarrel with the friends of these projects in their interest and their enthusiasm or their purpose. It is a commendable purpose. These lands ought to be developed and brought into subjection. Every effort ought to be made, but by the respective States and by the citizens of the States, to make every available foot of land respond in some manner for the benefit of mankind. The point I make is this: That the proponents of this bill (H. R. 487) endeavor to create a popular sentiment in favor of the bill by making it appear that the primary thought is the employment of soldiers and the securing for them a home or a farm, whereas these are just incidentally a means for carrying through a program of reclamation of lands in particular States.

"Now, before I leave the subject of purpose and scope it is only fair to call this delegation's attention to the fact that the bill on its face—and it will be argued by its friends—says that every State is to have more or less of this development work. The bill, in section 2, says:

"Projects will be selected with a view to the development of one or more projects in each of the several States in which feasible projects may be found.

"The last seven words are, in my mind, a sufficient excuse to justify a failure to have any project in many of the States. Whether it is feasible or not is wholly in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. If he determines to go into the State, the governor of the State may have something to say as to the price that shall be paid for the lands purchased, nothing more, unless the State appropriates 25 per cent of the amount necessary. The question as to whether a feasible project may be found is an economic question. The Secretary would not be justified in expending a large sum of money to purchase large areas of land in some State when the same amount of money could be used to establish a better, more permanent, more practical project in some other State. You must remember that the right to condemn land is not given, and if they go into Pennsylvania—and what is true of Pennsylvania is true of many of the Middle Atlantic States and, to more or less extent, of the New England States and the Central States—it must be a checkerboard proposition of segregated lands, and that is contrary to every expressed idea by anyone before this committee. Community plans can not be worked out on segregated farms. You would not have soldier settlements as contemplated by the act, or by the bill, or by the friends of the bill.

I have not given you the title of this bill. I refrained until this time, so that you could more readily grasp my thought. The title is, "To provide employment and rural homes for those who have served with the military and naval forces through the reclamation of lands to be known as the "National soldier settlement act." It is my opinion that this title is defective. If this were a bill before the Pennsylvania Legislature, its constitutionality could be reasonably attacked, for our courts have uniformly held that if the title misleads the act is unconstitutional. The title, in my mind, ought to read as follows:

"To provide revenue for the reclamation of large compact areas of undeveloped arid and swamped lands by irrigation, drainage, and otherwise, to cultivate the same, make improvements thereon, and for this purpose to employ discharged soldiers.

APPLICATION OR NECESSITY.

"There would be less than 2 per cent of the soldiers of the United States available for this proposition.

"Statistics show that less than 30 per cent of the people of the United States are engaged in agriculture, forestry, stock and animal raising. If that is correct, then it is reasonable to assume that less than 30 per cent of the boys who joined the colors came from that same character of life or environment. According to the testimony of Gov. Robertson, of Oklahoma, about one-third of this percentage are interested in this proposition. He says that fully 75 per cent of the boys from Oklahoma came from farms, and that only 3 or 4 out of 10 with whom he has conversed are interested in the project. One-third of the total number, then, would be about 10 per cent. Then deduct the boys who are excluded in the bill, viz, boys who own or are proprietors of farms and rural homes; deduct from this the boys who are 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and under 21, for they can not make the contract proposed by the bill only in States where legal majority is under 21; then deduct from that boys who have not a thousand or twelve hundred dollars in cash, for they must have that amount of money; and, finally, deduct the boys who because of dependents or other good and sufficient reasons must stay at home, and I ask you what per cent of soldier boys are available for this project?

"Secretary Lane says he sent out questionnaires. Out of 250,000 sent out he received about 52,000 replies. This questionnaire was inviting, starting out with a headline—

HEY, THERE! DO YOU WANT A HOME ON A FARM? IF SO, READ THIS; FILL IN BACK PAGE; TEAR OFF; MAIL—NO POSTAGE REQUIRED.

"The average American boy when he got this would read that heading, turn it over, sign it, tear it off, and mail it and never read a word of it, and even if he did read it, with the American acumen, he would send it in in the hope of getting something for nothing; yet the Secretary received replies from only about 20 per cent. It is my opinion that the most sanguine promoters of this plan would not expect over 50,000 men available for its operation. The latest newspaper report I have states that the total Army force, including Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, is 4,809,000; the total men in the Army, 4,000,000; men who went overseas, 2,086,000.

"Fifty thousand men would be just 1½ per cent of the men in the Army. What do you propose to do with 98½ per cent? I make the broad statement that the United States Government is not justified in legislating benefits to soldiers by vocational classes; that any law purporting to be for the benefit of soldiers should be relatively for all the soldiers; that if Congress can justify legislation of benefits to soldiers who by reason of training and desire are agriculturists it can legislate benefits to soldiers who by reason of training and desire are miners, or by reason of training and desire are mechanics, or by reason of training and desire are machinists, or by reason of training and desire are professional men, and ad infinitum. No legislation should come from this Congress that is not general in its application and made available for every soldier boy, irrespective of his environment or training in life. You can not make a farmer out of a miner by calling him a discharged soldier. You can not make a farmer out of a mechanic by calling him a discharged or released sailor.

Assuming for the sake of argument that classified distribution of benefits to soldiers is commendable and that the legislation is to provide homes and farms for those soldier boys who by training and desire want the benefits that way, I maintain that the boy will want it in his home county, in his home State, or at least want it where he wants it.

"Gov. Thomas W. Bickett, of North Carolina, speaking for the bill before the Southern Land Congress, said:

"I do not know about the arid lands of the West that require irrigation, but I am satisfied that they would not appeal to the soldiers from the Atlantic seaboard States. If these soldiers shall desire to take advantage of the plans proposed, I am sure they would prefer to settle where they already know the conditions under which they would have to live.

"What is true of North Carolina is true of every other State in this Union. The boys have a right to expect this equitable and fair treatment. The Federal Government is not justified in saying to a soldier if you go North, or if you go South, if you go East, or if you go West you will be entitled to certain benefits under an act of Congress.

Some of the proponents of the bill say it is the intention to improve abandoned or segregated farms in States that do not admit of large compact areas for settlement work. This may be an honest thought upon the part of these proponents, but I can not read that intention in the bill. It is contrary to every expressed intention by its advocates.

"Elwood Mead, consulting engineer, United States Reclamation Service, speaking before the Southern Land Congress last November, said:

"The greatest opportunities are in those sections where settlement is now scanty and where soldier communities can be established without displacing civilian farmers. Most of this land needs reclamation: logged-off lands need to be cleared; the flat lands need to be drained and the arid lands irrigated. The Reclamation Service provides an engineering organization already equipped with a great accumulation of information and manned by competent and experienced men. Every soldier settlement should be large enough to have community organizations for buying and selling and to have a distinct community life and feeling. The experience of other countries has been that to undertake to finance soldiers on individual farms, scattered here and there through communities, is costly and hazardous.

"No, I can not feel that this statement in the bill or this argument by its friends is sincere. A thorough study of the bill and a brief of the testimony before the committee convince me that only where large areas of compact, contiguous territory can be found suitable for community settlement work will a project be established, and that soldier boys who are available and are willing to undertake the task of laboring in the making of the projects must be ready to leave their homes and families and go where they are in order to receive the benefits.

"It will be argued that other countries are doing this for their soldiers. A study shows exactly what I have stated in this report, viz, that whatever is being done—and it is commendable work—is not being done by the Federal Government but by the subdivisions of the Government, by States or Provinces.

"In Canada the different Provinces have taken up the movement. In Alberta an American soldier who enlisted in Canada, if he elects to remain in that country and is qualified to succeed as a farmer, can secure a free homestead of 160 acres. The same is true of Saskatchewan. In Ontario 100 acres is given, and 10 acres of it is ready for planting. In British Columbia a homestead of privately owned land, bought from the Government for $500 less than the Government paid for it, is given. The Dominion Government will lend money to the amount of $2,500 for improvements at 5 per cent.

"In Australia the different States are active, notably the State of Queensland and the State of Victoria. The Commonwealth Government of Australia is supplementing the States by an appropriation of $200,000,000 to be loaned to the soldiers to improve and equip their individual farms.

"The States provide the land, and the Federal Government loans money to improve it and to equip it. It must be remembered that these countries are 80 per cent or more agricultural; that the people are largely engaged in the pursuits of farming, stock and animal raising, so that the States are developing the thing that appeals to the largest number of soldiers, and I am perfectly willing that our Federal Government should in some way, jointly and equitably with the States, do something for the boys who desire to help on the farms in their respective States. But I object to an initial appropriation of $500,000,000 where less than 2 per cent of the soldiers are benefited in a country that furnished less than 30 per cent of the soldiers from the farms without something being done relatively for the other 98 per cent.

"In conclusion let me say I am fully persuaded that the country at large and the soldiers in particular are expecting something in the way of benefits, and some kind of legislation must be and will be enacted.

"There are, as I said, at least 16 bills pending before Congress, all relating in one way or another to the benefit of soldiers, sailors, and marines—4 Senate bills and 12 House bills. It would be unwise and also outside the scope of this address to discuss any of them without discussing all, and that I hope to do later."

The Soldiers' Home Act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM W. HASTINGS.

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, July 30, 1919.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I want to invite the attention of the House to an amended bill introduced by me (H. R. 7710) to provide homes for soldiers, sailors, and marines, and for other purposes.

Everyone is proud of the record our gallant soldiers made in the war with Germany. We were forced into the war, but we knew in advance that the brave sons of America would uphold the historic traditions of our beloved country. They fought for the ideals of our country, in defense of our flag, for humanity, and for the liberty of the world.

Had we not entered the war Germany would perhaps have conquered Europe, triumphed over Great Britain, and in the end endangered the independence of our country.

Celebrations will be held throughout every county in the United States and in the large cities and towns commemorating the signing of the armistice. They will also be held upon the anniversary dates of the principal battles in which our brave boys were engaged. We can not honor them too highly, and it is not only a pleasure but a privilege to join with our other fellow citizens in these celebrations. However, this is not enough. We should do something more for the men who left their homes and loved ones and entered the Army and Navy, willing to make every sacrifice to defend the honor and glory of their country. The Congress did much in advance for those who went forth to defend us. Additional compensation was provided, and provision was made for allotments, both from the soldiers' compensation and from the Federal Treasury, to be paid their loved ones dependent upon them. We provided compensation in lieu of a pension for those who suffered disability in the service, graduated in amount according to disability. We made it possible for the soldier and the sailor to take out insurance on a peace basis to the amount of $10,000 each. We provided for vocational training for the returned disabled soldier who is unable to follow his old trade.

Recently we appropriated $14,000,000 for vocational training of the soldiers, sailors, and marines disabled in the service of their country.

We made liberal appropriations for food, clothing, and equipment. We appropriated every dollar requested by the War and Navy Departments for military equipment and supplies of all kinds. We all rejoice that the war is over, and in these days of reconstruction many plans are proposed for aiding these discharged men. It is my earnest hope to be of some practical, substantial assistance to them. With that end in view I have prepared and introduced a short bill (H. R. 7710), which, in my judgment, is practical and will be of much help to them. I invite the earnest consideration of Congress to it.

The bill introduced by me, in addition to some new provisions, amends two sections of the Federal farm-loan act approved July 17, 1916.

Section 1 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to reserve from entry for two years any part or portion of the public domain, and during that time discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines are given a preference right to enter said lands and get title at once, as he is authorized to waive the time limit of residence on such homesteads. Subject to such entry there are, not including Alaska but including grazing and pasture lands, 212,903,000 acres throughout the West and Northwest, of which 138,788,000 acres are surveyed. In addition we have 155,000,000 acres in the forest reserves subject to special entry under the act of June 11, 1906. These entries are to be made without the payment of the fees and commissions exacted from other homesteaders.

Sections 2 and 3 amend certain paragraphs of the Federal farm-loan act.

Paragraph 5, section 12, of this act permits loans to be made to the amount of only 50 per cent of the value of the land and 20 per cent of the value of the permanent insured improvements. These loans are made through local associations. The bill introduced by me provides that loans may be made to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines to the amount of 100 per cent of the appraised value of the land and the permanent insured improvements thereon; but it divides the amount borrowed into a first and a second lien. The first lien is for 50 per cent of the appraised value of the land and 20 per cent of the appraised value of the permanent insured improvements, and is made in all respects the same as to any other borrower. The second lien that I propose would be up to and not in excess of 100 per cent in the aggregate of the appraised value of the land and the permanent insured improvements. This second lien is secured by a second mortgage on the land and improvements and is also secured by an assignment of the insurance of the borrower taken from the Government under the war-risk insurance act and acts amendatory thereof.

Now, as to the first liens, the notes and mortgages are used by the Federal land banks for the security of the bonds issued, the same as notes and mortgages of other borrowers, but the Government issues its own bonds to supply the money for the second loans secured by the second mortgages and insurance. These bonds shall be denominated "soldiers' bonds." By this plan the Government is insured against loss, and the honorably discharged soldier, sailor, or marine wishing to own a farm gets cheap money. He is permitted to borrow it from 5 to 40 years, payable upon the amortization plan, just as other borrowers under the Federal farm-loan act.

Section 3 of this bill proposes to amend section 15 and permit Federal land banks, with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, to appoint agents all over the country, through whom applications for loans would be transmitted to the Federal land banks. This would not necessitate the discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines joining local farm-loan associations. The plan does not amend the Federal farm-loan act in any other particular, but leaves it in full force and effect. I want to briefly call attention to the advantages contained in this bill.

In the first place, it will enable honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines to borrow money for a long time at a low rate of interest, payable in installments, sufficient in amount to purchase and improve a home. It would permit them to borrow not only 50 per cent of the value of the land and 20 per cent of the value of the improvements, as provided in the farm-loan act, but it would permit them to borrow the full value. It would permit them to look up their own farms, initiate their own transactions, and buy in any locality in any county or State in which they reside or desire to live.

In the second place, it would not require any additional administrative force to carry the act into effect, but the same would be administered by the Federal land banks and their employees. This would avoid any delays in the act going into practical operation and would insure immediate results. Therefore there would be no additional overhead expense. The first loans will be treated exactly as any other loans. The money to make them will be obtained by the sale of farm-loan bonds.

The bill proposed by me provides that the Government shall sell its own bonds to the amount of the second loans, and the money derived from the sale of these bonds is to be loaned through the Federal land banks to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines. These Government bonds, denominated "soldiers' bonds," are to be nontaxable just as far as Federal land-bank bonds are nontaxable. They are to be sold at not to pay a higher interest rate than 4½ per cent and not below par. The second loan is to be made at the same rate as the first loan and upon the same terms and conditions. This means, of course, that these loans are to be made from 5 to 40 years, payable upon the amortization plan, the same as the first loan, but the notes and mortgages for the second loans are not to be used as security for the farm-loan bonds issued, but the proceeds are to be used in the payment of the Government bonds expressly issued for the soldiers' benefit.

It will be seen, therefore, that the bill proposed by me will not depreciate the farm-loan bonds, but that the money is loaned direct from the Government on the second-lien notes and mortgages and the soldier's insurance through the Federal land banks. This will not necessitate another examination of the title or an additional appraisement of the land. In fact, no additional work will be required, because the loan can be made at the same time at which the first loan is made.

The Government will be adequately secured, because, in addition to the second mortgage given to secure the second loan, the soldier, sailor, or marine is required to assign the insurance that he has in force, taken out from the Government through the war-risk insurance act and acts amendatory thereof. In other words, as additional security, the Government has assigned to it its own insurance policy.

In the event any insurance policy has lapsed because of nonpayment of the premiums thereon it may be reinstated within six months after the approval of the act by the payment of all back premiums due. The Secretary of the Treasury has recently issued liberal rules permitting the reinstatement of lapsed insurance policies upon the payment of only two months' back premiums—one for the month succeeding the date the policy lapsed and the other as a payment in advance for the month succeeding the reinstatement of the policy. Under this bill any soldier who had a policy and who was either unable to keep the premiums paid or neglected to do so may have same reinstated within six months after its passage and approval.

As the notes secured by the second loans are paid, the proceeds, both principal and interest, are to be applied to the payment and the retirement of the bonds issued and sold by the Government to secure money with which to make these loans. It will be seen that the Government is secured in every respect against loss. These amendments will provide substantial assistance to the men who made large sacrifices and were willing to endure everything in defense of our flag and country.

The returning soldier, appreciative of the merited recognition of a grateful Republic, will take possession of the land purchased for a home, repair, add to, and erect new improvements thereon, as well as clear up and reduce it to a state of cultivation. All this will add greatly to the value of the land. Good agricultural land in my State in the last five years has increased from 50 to 75 per cent in value. Much of it has doubled in value. This is doubtless true of farm land throughout the whole Nation. Every industrious home owner beautifies his home and enhances the value of his land. As the land increases in value and as the loan is reduced by amortized payments, the second mortgage held to pay the Government bonds will become better security.

In addition, the amendment to section 15 provides that a local agent may be appointed through whom these applications may be made for loans, so that the honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines will not have to become members of local farm-loan associations. This would insure immediate consideration of the applications and expedite action upon them in every way.

When the original farm-loan act was under consideration by the Banking and Currency Committee, I was a member of that committee. In the committee and on the floor of the House I criticized the provision requiring that prospective borrowers become members of local farm-loan associations before being able to secure loans. I tried to have the same amended when the bill was under consideration in the House. I called attention to the fact then that the organization of local farm-loan associations would cause vexatious delays and would have the effect of defeating the purposes of the act. A man can not wait 90 days or longer for the formation of a local association through which to apply for a loan after he purchases a farm. He must know with reasonable certainty immediately, or not later than a week or 10 days. If this amendment is adopted, local associations will not be necessary, but agents would be appointed throughout the country, and applications may be made and forwarded through them to the farm-land banks. These agents in a short time will become so proficient that they will see that all the papers necessary to accompany an application are made in due and proper form, and that the abstract accompanying the same is completed, thus avoiding many interminable delays. There is no reason why an application should not receive favorable action within 10 days at most. This amendment should apply to all borrowers, including soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Section 4 authorizes loans to be made soldiers, sailors, and marines who do not desire to purchase farm lands, but are desirous of acquiring homes in which to live in cities and towns. The loans are to be made under the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and out of the proceeds derived from the sale of soldiers' bonds. They are to be made upon the same terms and conditions regarding payment as the loans made for the purchase of farm lands. This section needs no explanation. It is intended to assist and take care of men who live in cities and towns.

Section 5 makes nontaxable for a period of five years both the farm lands and the homes in cities and towns purchased or built in whole or in part with the money secured from the Government, providing the property is owned and occupied during such time by the original soldier, sailor, or marine who contracted the loan.

Section 6 properly denominates the act as the soldiers' home act.

Every other plan that I have heard suggested involves the creation of new bureaus, with a vast army of employees, involving too much overhead expense.

The plan presented in this bill does not involve any additional expense, but uses the machinery of the farm-land banks to come to the aid of the defenders of our country. Instead of spending money upon employees, I want to give the benefits to the men who made sacrifices that liberty should not perish throughout the world.

I can not too strongly emphasize the fact that this plan provides money for soldiers, sailors, and marines to purchase land in the locality of their choice and allows them to exercise some judgment in the selection of it. It does not necessitate their leaving the community where their friends and loved ones reside in order to secure a home.

I want also to emphasize the fact that this plan provides cheap money to them. The money can be borrowed from 5 to 40 years upon the amortization plan, providing for the payment of 1 per cent additional annually or one-half per cent semiannually as a payment upon the principal on long-time loans. The returning soldiers of our country are only asking a fair chance, and this plan gives it to them. It enables everyone who desires a tract of farm land to purchase it for a home.

In the long run the Government will not be out anything. The bonds issued by the Government will be repaid out of the collections, principal and interest, of the second mortgages, and, as additional security for these second loans, the insurance which the soldiers, sailors, and marines have taken out from the Government is assigned. Certainly the Government's own insurance is good security. This insurance must be kept alive and in full force and effect, and this of itself will be helpful in inducing them to keep the insurance in force. In the event of a man's death his wife or other dependents can pay off the loan upon the farm with the insurance and have a home.

In addition to the general legislation enacted for the benefit of men in the service during this war, we have given them a small additional sum to tide them over their period of unemployment. This bill will prove of substantial and lasting benefit to them. It affords the men opportunity to get cheap money, is an inducement to purchase homes, gives them employment, encourages thrift and economy, and will prove of permanent benefit to them. It will aid in the development of our country and show that this Republic is not ungrateful to the men who were willing to sacrifice all in order that liberty might live.

I voted for the declaration of war against Germany. There was no other course to pursue. I voted for all the legislation recommended as necessary and the appropriations asked in order that we might triumph over German military force. From the date of the passage of the resolution in April, 1917, until the armistice was signed and proclaimed on November 11, 1918, I felt keenly the responsibility laid upon the representatives of the people of this country. I now feel as keenly the necessity for proper and just recognition of the services of the men who were ready and willing to carry the Stars and Stripes to victory. Their services were invaluable.

Be it enacted, etc., That any honorably discharged soldier, sailor, or marine who served in the war with Germany, on and after the passage of this act, shall be entitled to enter a tract of public land, under the provisions of the public-land laws applicable to the land entered and shall further be entitled to make said entry without payment of fees and commissions as now provided by law.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to reserve the entry for a period of two years from the passage of this act any part or portion of the public domain, during which time the said soldiers, sailors, and marines herein mentioned shall have a preference right to enter said land: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to the prescribed by him, is authorized to waive the time limit of residence on said homesteads, as required of other settlers.

SEC. 2. That the fifth paragraph of section 12 of the act entitled "An act to provide capital for agricultural development, to create standard forms of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes," approved July 17, 1916, shall be amended so as to read as follows:

"Fifth. No such loan shall exceed 50 per cent of the value of the land mortgaged and 20 per cent of the value of the permanent insured improvements thereon, said value to be ascertained by appraisal, as provided in section 10 of this act: Provided, That loans may be made, as hereinafter provided, to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the war with Germany to an amount equaling 100 per cent of the value of the land and permanent insured improvements thereon: Provided further, That the loans shall be divided so that a first mortgage shall be taken upon the land and the improvements in each case to secure the note for a first loan in an amount not to exceed 50 per cent of the value of the land mortgaged and 20 per cent of the value of the permanent insured improvements thereon, which notes for said amounts may be used by the farm loan banks as security for the farm-loan bonds, the same as notes made by other borrowers, and a second mortgage shall be taken upon the land and the permament insured improvements thereon, to secure a second loan evidenced by a note for the remainder of the loan in each case, in an amount in the aggregate not to exceed 100 per cent of the value of the land and the permanent insured improvements thereon, which said second mortgages shall be held by the farm-land bank of the district in which the land and improvements so mortgaged are located, and collections shall be made on them, both as to principal and interest, the same as notes secured by first mortgages; and the United States shall issue its bonds, which shall be denominated 'soldiers' bonds,' to such an amount as may be necessary to make the proceeds equal the amount of the second mortgages, which said bonds shall be nontaxable and bear interest at a rate not to exceed 4½ per cent and be sold for not less than par value, and the money shall be loaned to said honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines at the same rate as paid upon the notes secured by the first mortgages, and the proceeds derived from the payment of the notes secured by the second mortgages shall, when collected, be used for the payment and retirement of the Government bonds herein authorized to be issued: Provided, however, That said second loan shall be made only to those honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines who carry life insurance under the war-risk insurance act approved October 6, 1917, and acts amendatory thereof, in full force and effect, which shall be assigned and held as additional security for said second loan, and any policy that has lapsed because of the nonpayment of the premiums thereon may be reinstated within six months after the approval of this act by the payment of all back premiums due thereon.

"In making said appraisal the value of the land for agricultural purposes shall be the basis of appraisal and the earning power of said land shall be a principal factor.

"A reappraisal may be permitted at any time in the discretion of the Federal land bank, and such additional loan may be granted as such appraisal will warrant under the provisions of this paragraph. Whenever the amount of the loan applied for exceeds the amount that may be loaned under the appraisal as herein limited, such loan may be granted to the amount permitted under the terms of this paragraph without requiring a new application or appraisal."

SEC. 3. That section 15 of said act shall be amended by adding at the end of said section the following paragraph:

"Each farm-land bank in its respective district is authorized to make loans to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines on farm lands through agents appointed by it and approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board, which agents may be other than duly incorporated banks, trust companies, mortgage companies, or savings institutions chartered by the State in which they have their principal office."

SEC. 4. That in the event any honorably discharged soldier, sailor, or marine who served in the war with Germany does not want to take advantage of the provisions of this act and borrow money for the purpose of buying farm lands, but desires to borrow money for the purpose of acquiring a home in which to live in a city or town, there may be loaned to him for such purpose, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, out of the proceeds derived from the sale of soldiers' bonds authorized to be sold by section 2 hereof, in an amount not to exceed $2,500, at the same rate and upon the same terms and conditions of payment as may be made to soldiers, sailors, and marines who purchase farm lands.

SEC. 5. That all farm lands or homes in cities and towns purchased or built in whole or in part with money secured as provided in this act shall be nontaxable for a period of five years, providing the same is owned and occupied by the original soldier, sailor, or marine who borrowed the money upon the property.

SEC. 6. That the short title of this act shall be the "Soldiers' Home Act."

SUMMARY.

To summarize: This bill, first, gives the returning soldier the preference right for two years to enter the remaining public lands and authorizes the waiving of the time limit of residence.

Second. Amends the farm loan act so as to permit two loans to be made to returning soldiers, aggregating not to exceed 100 per cent of the value of the land and the insured improvements through a first and second loan secured by the land and an assignment of the soldier's insurance. The soldier can borrow as much as $10,000 from 5 to 40 years at not to exceed 5 per cent interest.

Third. Those soldiers not desiring to purchase farms can borrow not to exceed $2,500 to build or acquire homes in cities or towns.

Fourth. All property upon which money is borrowed is exempt from taxation for a period of five years.

Fifth. No soldier need leave his own community to receive the benefits of this bill.

Daylight Saving Repeal.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RICHARD YATES.
OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, July 18, 1919.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, on the 18th instant I asked, and was granted by the House unanimous consent to my request, that I be allowed to revise and extend certain remarks made by me earlier in the day. The remarks referred to were as follows:

"Mr. Chairman, I want to say I have never known the people of Illinois to be so wrought up over a proposition as they seem to be over this.

"On Monday, the 14th, I voted to override the President's veto and pass the repeal bill. Through an inadvertence, which nobody intended, a couple of dispatches were sent from here to the papers stating I was the only Illinois Member of Congress outside of the city of Chicago who had voted to sustain the President's veto. From that time to this life has been a burden. To show the intensity of the feeling, I want to take the liberty within my few minutes to read a portion of a letter I have received:

"HON. RICHARD YATES,
"Washington, D. C.

"DEAR CONGRESSMAN YATES: I have just noticed that you voted to sustain President Wilson on the nonsensical daylight-saving law. I am surprised to see you vote thus, but you know what you want to do. You will not have many supporters in this section when you ask for votes again. I have supported you a great many times and under trying circumstances, but I can not and will not support you any more.

"I venture to say that every Member of this House has heard from his constituents in every nook and corner of the country on this subject. I have, Mr. Chairman, and I do not want any mistake whatever as to how I am going to vote. I am going to vote here to-day to pass the repeal of the daylight-saving law over the President's veto. And in doing so I will register the will, the overwhelming will, of the overwhelming majority of the people of Illinois."

I was not satisfied, and am not satisfied, with the above remarks. It was not at all my intention to emphasize that I was not voting to sustain the President or that I was voting to override the President's veto. I was misled into that phrase "override the President's veto" by the language used in the two statements published in two leading Illinois newspapers on Tuesday, the 15th instant, to the effect that I was the only Illinois Representative outside of Chicago who voted to "sustain the President." It was natural that when they, these two daily Chicago newspapers, in presenting me to Illinois in an attitude offensive to all rural Illinois, used certain phraseology, it was natural that I should use corresponding language in denying the assertion.

The thing I had in mind was this: The Chicago Tribune of Tuesday, July 15, had an article on its first page, filling entirely the third column. This article was headed "House backs daylight act repeal veto." In the middle of the article or dispatch occurred these words:

Representative at Large YATES, whose home is in Springfield, voted to sustain the President. Without exception every other down-State Member voted to pass the bill.

On the same morning—Tuesday, the 15th—the other morning paper of Chicago, the only other morning paper, the Herald-Examiner, had also on its first page a column headed "Daylight-saving foes defeated." In this article, halfway between top and bottom, the Washington dispatch of this paper said:

Representative at Large YATES, whose home is in Springfield, voted to sustain the President. Without exception every other down-State Member voted to pass the bill.

I had no idea whatever that any reporter or journal had me registered or reported as voting for the daylight-saving law or against its repeal until Friday, the 18th, when six letters arrived from Illinois censuring me, and two newspapers—the Jacksonville Journal and the Marion Herald-Enterprise—arrived containing editorials intimating that I had made myself unpopular. Thereupon I rose in the House and made the remarks on the 18th—page 2839 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I repeat, it was not my intention to say, directly or indirectly, in substance or effect, that I thought I voted right because I voted against the President. I did vote against the President's veto. But I was not trying to magnify or glorify that feature or phase of the situation. I do not conceive it to be my duty to come down here to Washington to spend valuable time trying to thwart Woodrow Wilson. I was not elected for that purpose. The people of Illinois did not give me 142,000 majority for that purpose. I did not vote for Woodrow Wilson; but, legally and officially, he is my President as much as anybody's. I will vote to give him every dollar and every gun he really and truly needs and every other mite of support really and truly needed which is in my power to give. And that, too, while I am a Republican, a stalwart Republican, an avowed partisan, and from a State which in 1916 and 1918 has gone against the President. When he is right I shall vote with him; when he is wrong I will not. One of our greatest men once said, "I am not afraid to go along with any man who is right; I am not afraid to part with any man who is wrong."

In this particular instance Mr. Wilson was wrong. It was not a party question. There was no political or military emergency. There was not that condition which should always obtain before the President should use the extraordinary and extreme remedy of the veto. The veto is to curb hasty action. The United States Constitution plainly contemplated its use only when passion or an inflamed public sentiment had upset the poise of Congress. Had it been deemed an everyday necessity, the Constitution would have granted the Executive the power to override any majority of the legislative department. But it empowers the Executive to make himself the equal, by his veto, of two-thirds of both Houses of Congress. This vast power, this sweeping concentration of power, is manifestly to curb partisan, racial, sectional, or sectarian rancor and revenge or recklessness, and temporary abuse of majority rule, or something like that. There was no such excuse here. No abuse of power, no constitutional offense or tragedy was involved; it was not a question of policy affecting the fabric of the Republic.

And when I and other Republicans voted against the veto we did not vote as partisans; scores of Democrats voted with us. I want it distinctly understood that I will fearlessly vote against any veto I deem to be wrong, but I voted against this particular veto because I believed that nine out of every ten of my constituents wanted to do away with the daylight-saving law. I received only 10 letters favoring it and fully 1,000 begging me to vote to do away with it. I am very proud of what followed. My constituents must have believed I voted conscientiously, for only six out of thirteen hundred thousand voters censured me when at first glance they thought I was wrong. It is heartbreaking to be scolded when you do right; by the same token it is fine to be scolded by only six out of over a million when they think at first glance you are wrong. One lesson I have learned all over again in this connection. I will never, on my part, indict and try, convict, and condemn a public servant, condemn him to criticism and sentence him to unpopularity, until I have heard what he has to say. Is it unfair to ask the press, especially the press of my own State, to be governed by the same rule? It does not cost anything to wire a Representative when you think he has done wrong. Is it unfair to ask you to do so, and meanwhile to suspend judgment?

Effects of Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic upon Crime, Disorder, Dependency, etc.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
OF MICHIGAN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, July 1, 1919.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following highly interesting and instructing report upon the effects of prohibition in the city of Detroit, the largest city in the world to be bone dry before war-time prohibition took effect in this country, July 1, 1919. This valuable article is by Mr. George B. Wilson, of the Royal Statistical Society of England, secretary of the United Kingdom Alliance. His review is as follows:

If prohibitionists had been given the choice of a battle ground on which to fight out the issue of wet or dry, the city of Detroit would certainly not have been selected for that purpose.

With a population which has doubled in less than 10 years, and now numbers nearly 1,000,000 persons, of whom 45 per cent were foreign born; with a population which in 1918 rejected State-wide prohibition by 9,000 majority and in April, 1919, supported the proposal to admit beer and wine by 30,000 majority; with an extremely wet State (Ohio) within 60 miles; with a judiciary unsympathetic to stringent law enforcement; and with an annual wages bill of not less than $250,000,000, it might have naturally been assumed that the chances for the success of prohibition would be very remote.

The following summary, compiled by the present writer from official statements in his possession, is submitted for the careful consideration of the reader, in the hope that it will prove a helpful contribution to the study of the great question, "How far does prohibition succeed in a great city?"

The comparisons which follow are between the year ending April 30, 1918, during which intoxicants were legally procurable in 1,337 liquor shops, and the year ending April 30, 1919, during which the manufacture and sale of intoxicants were forbidden by the State law. There is little doubt that during the closing months of the wet régime large quantities of intoxicants were stored up by private persons for their own use. In February, 1919, further supplies in considerable quantities were smuggled into the city during the period when a decision of the State courts "let down the bars" for a time. During the year also it is not disputed that illicit transport of additional quantities of liquor from Ohio has taken place.

The following figures have been very kindly supplied me by the police department of Detroit:

	Wet.	Dry.	Per cent decrease.
Murders	138	78	43
Assaults	1,668	994	40
Burglaries	390	253	35

The following figures are supplied by the medical officer of health, the coroner, the Wayne County (Detroit) Infirmary, the public welfare department, the industrial accident board for the State, and the McGregor Institute, which provides lodging for large numbers of men:

	Wet.	Dry.	Decrease.
DEATHS.
Alcoholism	107	19	82
Cirrhosis of liver	90	80	11
Suicides	122	82	33

Destitute men	22,893	8,251	64
Ratio of men who repaid lodgings, per cent	12	24	.....
"Repeaters"	13,169	4,088	69

In addition to the foregoing, the president of the People's State Bank at Detroit (Mr. John W. Staley) writes that "the savings deposits in Detroit banks increased $30,000,000 from May, 1918, to May, 1919, which is about 20 per cent increase," and a very considerable portion of the fourth Liberty loan and Victory loan, which totaled for Detroit over $160,000,000, was taken by the industrial classes. In considering the foregoing figures it must be remembered that during the dry year there was a large increase in population, even after making allowance for the demands of military service, so that by comparison the figures are even more favorable than at first sight appears.

In the opinion of the medical officer of health the death rate of the city during the first dry year was the lowest on record—if allowance is made for the special mortality due to the fierce influenza epidemic. The wet months, May–September, 1917, showed a mortality of 4,777, whereas the corresponding dry months in 1918 showed only 3,789, a saving of 988 lives, or 20 per cent of the mortality during the period. Then followed the influenza, but when it ceased the mortality in April, 1919, on a greatly increased population, showed a decrease from 1,293 to 983, or 24 per cent.

Inquiries in the most well-informed business circles in Detroit elicit a unanimous verdict in favor of the economic value of the step that has been taken. The figures given above show beyond dispute its social and moral value. There is no whisper, even, in the city that industrial unrest will result from prohibition. Law enforcement is steadily improving, and will be greatly facilitated by the State-wide prohibition in Ohio and by Federal action. A great incubus has been lifted from the city.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WALLACE H. WHITE, JR.,

OF MAINE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, August 1, 1919.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I support the pending bill as a step toward the return of this country to a policy with respect to our coastwise trade which has justified itself through a hundred years of our national life.

A brief review of the history of the development of our coastwise trade and of the acts of Congress affecting American shipping passed since 1912 will aid in arriving at an appreciation of the significance of this proposed legislation. Since the beginning of our Government up to the passage of the Panama Canal act of August 24, 1912, both our coastwise trade, including the trade of our Great Lakes, and the American register for our foreign trade had been reserved for American-built ships. The first Federal Congress under the Constitution on July 20, 1789, laid such heavy discriminating duties on foreign ships that none could enter our home trade, and in 1817 the foreign-built and foreign-owned ship was expressly forbidden the privilege of our coastwise trade under penalty of forfeiture. This policy was extended to the trade with our noncontiguous possessions—Alaska, Porto Rico, and Hawaii. The undoubted purpose in the original adoption of this policy was to encourage American shipbuilding and navigation and thereby to promote the national defense.

During most of the period from the beginning of our Government to 1860 there had been some legislative encouragement for and protection of our overseas trade, and until the later date American ships carried an appreciable part of our commerce to and from the markets of the world. But by 1860 changes in economic and trade conditions and in legislative attitude were bearing us rapidly to our commercial downfall. In the early years of the century we carried 90 per cent of our foreign commerce; in 1860 we carried 66 per cent; in 1870, 35.6 per cent; in 1880, 17.4 per cent, and in 1914, with a commerce totaling $4,500,000,000, only 8.9 per cent found the markets of the world and reached our own shores under our flag. We saw our seaports glutted, warehouses, terminals, piers loaded beyond capacity with a stagnant commerce; every line of railroad stretching into the interior telling its tale of embargoes; but we transported overseas only that which foreign nations chose to take. All else was immovable. Great, powerful, rich, we were bound by the shackles of commercial slavery.

In marked and glowing contrast to this story of our foreign trade is that of our coastwise commerce. In 1789 only 68,000 tons of coastwise shipping were under the Stars and Stripes. In 1810 this had increased to 405,000 tons. In 1860 we had 2,644,000 tons, and at the outbreak of the war in 1914 our magnificent coastwise fleet totaled 6,852,536 tons, a merchant fleet greater than the combined overseas and coast fleet of the German Empire, exceeding the combined tonnage of France, Norway, and Italy. This is an American-built and an American-owned fleet. I would never permit it to be otherwise.

But the shipping legislation since 1912 puts it and our overseas trade as well in jeopardy. The Panama Canal act of August 24, 1912, authorized the admission of foreign-built ships not more than five years old to American registry. It did not adequately provide for American ownership. By its terms, seagoing vessels not more than five years old at the time they applied for registry, wherever built, and being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or by corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which were citizens of the United States, might secure an American register. Under this act a foreign-built vessel owned by a corporation the entire stock of which except the qualifying shares of the president and managing directors is foreign owned is entitled to American registry. This act was a "freeship" act, subject to the age limitation and to this feeble provision as to American ownership. It authorized a radical departure from our previous policy.

By the act of August 18, 1914, the limitation as to the age of foreign ships permitted American registry was repealed and the door was opened wide. Other provisions of this act permitted the giving of positive advantage to the foreign-built ship over the vessel built at home. Section 2 authorized the President to suspend so far and for such length of time as he deemed desirable the provisions of law prescribing that watch officers of vessels of the United States registered for the foreign trade shall be citizens of the United States, and by section 3, under like conditions, in like manner, and to like extent, the President was authorized to suspend the provisions of law requiring survey, inspection, and measurement by officers of the United States of foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act.

Acting under this authority, the President on September 4, 1914, ordered, first, that all foreign-built ships admitted to registry under the act might retain the watch officers employed thereon, without regard to citizenship, for seven years, and that any vacancy occurring among such watch officers within two years might be filled without regard to citizenship; and, second, that the provisions of law requiring survey, inspection, and measurement by officers of the United States of foreign-built ships admitted to American registry under the act should be suspended for two years.

These provisions and the action of the President constitute a patent discrimination against the American-built vessel. In just the degree that foreign ships took advantage of the privilege of American registry thus accorded them construction in American yards was discouraged.

These two acts did not relate in terms to our coastwise trade, but it is necessary to make reference to them that one may understand this act of October 6, 1917. By this latter act vessels of foreign registry and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, were permitted to engage in our coastwise trade during the war with Germany and for 120 days thereafter. If this act was necessary as a war measure, that reason does not now exist. No American interest calls for its further presence in our law.

The pending bill repeals this act of October 6, 1917. Its effect is to exclude the foreign-built and the foreign-registered ship from our coastwise trade. It protects the magnificent American fleet we now have in our coastwise trade and encourages its further growth. It should have the vote of every man who stands for an American marine.

A Curb for Profiteers.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE HUDDLESTON,

OF ALABAMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, August 1, 1919.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, the greatest question confronting the American people is not the adoption of the treaty of peace with the league of nations, but the high cost of living. All during the war prices mounted day by day, the purchasing price of the dollar constantly grew smaller. The necessaries of life which a day's wages would buy became steadily less and less. Profiteers were active in the land and their prices were more and more extortionate. The economic sufferings of the people were mitigated somewhat by increases in wages; however, at no time did the increase in wages keep pace with the rise in the cost of living. From 1914 to the signing of the armistice prices of necessaries of life increased 77 per cent, while the average increase to labor of all kinds was only 34½ per cent; that is, for what the workingman could buy in 1914 for $1 in the way of food, clothing, and so on, in November, 1918, he paid $1.77, while for the same work for which he received $1 in 1914 in November, 1918, he received only an average of $1.34½.

PROFITEERING DURING THE WAR.

The people accepted the increases in the cost of living during the war with the best grace possible—they were willing to make their sacrifices—they were conscious that unjust prices were being charged, but bore with it with patience, hoping that the situation might clear when the war ended. The armistice was signed eight months ago, yet the cost of living continues to soar. Indeed, the situation is becoming rapidly worse. There has been a net average increase in the cost of the necessaries of life since last November of more than 5 per cent, and the future promises darker results. Prices instead of declining are mounting on every hand, yet wages are not responding to the increase. Due to the demand for labor during the war the worker was able to add to his income by working overtime, holidays, and Sundays. But now there is much idleness; labor is plentiful; opportunities for the laborer to increase his wages by straining himself beyond the safety point are gone, so that the situation from the wage-earner's standpoint is becoming more and more aggravated.

The increase in the cost of living since 1914 has worked a great hardship upon wage earners, but it has oppressed people with small fixed incomes, small professional men, salaried clerks, and others who are unable to get increases to an almost unbearable point. It is they who have suffered most of all. The widow and orphan living off of a small inheritance or the interest on the insurance money of a departed breadwinner have been brought to extreme suffering. Disabled persons and others forced to depend upon their accumulated savings have been forced to eat into the principal until it is rapidly vanishing.

But the end is not yet in sight. Every day marks an added rise in price on some necessary of life. Every newspaper that we pick up tells us of soaring prices. Profiteers are not content with the millions that they were able to wring out of the people while the war was on. They are not satisfied to sober up from their war orgy of greed. They have had a taste of war profits, and they want to keep them up in time of peace. They are holding on to their 50 per cent and 100 per cent profits like grim death. They are unwilling to go back to normal and sane prewar business conditions.

MONOPOLY OF WEALTH AND RESOURCES.

Profiteering during the war was not confined to war contractors who took advantage of their country's peril to fill their strong boxes with unjust profits, but meat packers and dealers in the necessaries of life took advantage of the opportunity to grind the faces of the people and to heap up fortunes running into many millions. It is estimated by a conservative authority that there are now over 25,000 millionaires in the United States—that is, 25,000 men who have property worth more than a million dollars—and that more than 8,000 new millionaires were made during 1918. The collection of the wealth and resources of the Republic into the hands of a few is highly dangerous to the public welfare. It is a threat to American institutions. It provokes the spirit of discontent and disorder and gives excuse to those who agitate for revolution among the great propertyless multitude. This is one of the political aspects of profiteering. Its moral aspects are just as sinister. It means poverty, degradation, and disease to the thousands of men and women who are its helpless victims. Love of country and mankind alike demand our serious attention to the situation.

I am happy to be in close touch with those whom I represent in Congress. I am the confidant and friend of the common men in my district. I have received many letters from them recently full of bitter complaints against the high cost of living. For some reason I receive from the masses of the people of the country at large many letters pleading with me to do something to relieve their distress. I believe that I do not overstate the case when I say that serious discontent pervades the entire country and is growing especially bitter among the populations of our great cities and industrial districts. The forbearance of the people is being stretched near to the breaking point.

RAILROAD BROTHERHOODS MAKE STATEMENT.

The President on yesterday gave to the press a statement submitted to him by the great railroad brotherhoods which presents the situation from the angle of their members. I believe that I can not do better than to quote it:

> The statement from the Brotherhood of Trainmen presented to the President declared that "conscienceless profiteering by the great interests who have secured control of all the necessities of life" has brought about such conditions that the trainmen felt they must demand increased wages unless living expenses speedily were reduced.
> Mr. Lee made public an abstract of the report of hearings recently held by the board of railroad wages on the trainmen's demands, at which he declared an "upheaval" was nearer in this country to-day than ever before, due to the unrest arising from mounting living costs.
> The railroads and Government departments had better be assisting "to crush profiteering" by the "packers and other industries," he said, than "shouting across the table at each other" at hearings to consider still further increases.
> "All of us are to blame," he said, "because we are exerting every effort to get more money for ourselves and better conditions. Every day we must realize that the profiteers are taking double from the workingmen what is given them; and the trouble with the people on the hill (Capitol), with us, and with every corporation, and with everybody is that we are exerting ourselves to get the dollar, while the workingman is merely existing and while the profiteer is piling up millions.
> "I will admit to you gentlemen that we are going the wrong way. I admit to you that it is time to call a halt; and I admit to you that until we get together, until we commence together to stop this, there will be hell in this country—and it is nearer to-day than I ever knew it in my years of experience. Just let somebody drop a match in this country of ours and it will be a sorry day for all of us.
> "Unless my vision is most terribly obscured, then there is something coming to us pretty soon in this country that we had better take notice of. We had something of peace in this country prior to the war conditions. We were getting along fairly well until profiteering became so noticeable everywhere, and until the commodities that working people are compelled to pay for were permitted to be increased, doubled, and trebled, without any question and often seemingly with the approval of the Government.

"We are nearer war in this world to-day, I believe, than when the Kaiser threw down the gauntlet.

BITTERNESS AND DISCONTENT.

The statements laid before the President may be considered extreme. That the President did not so consider them is evidenced by his giving them to the public. The propertied and business classes, I fear, do not realize the bitterness of the discontent which generally exists. It is highly important that they should take note of it.

A glance through the columns of a daily paper is sufficient to show the causes for resentment against high prices. We have the exposure of the extortion of the Packers' Trust recently made by the Federal Trade Commission. Coal operators have advanced their prices beyond the maximum war prices and are threatening further increases. Flour has advanced $1.50 per barrel since the armistice was signed. The fever of extortion has run through the entire business world from the manufacturer, with his plant covering acres, down to the peddler, with his pushcart. After a few days of hot weather comes an "ice famine," with a 25 per cent boost in prices. The 10-cent man's collar is now 25 cents, the $1 shirt is $2, the $5 pair of shoes is $10 to $12. With cotton at 35 cents we are paying on a basis of $1 a pound for raw cotton for many kinds of cotton goods after allowing for all costs of manufacture and handling. Even bananas, that used to sell three for 5 cents, are now 5 cents each. Green tomatoes are 20 to 30 cents a pound; bacon, 65 cents. Where will this thing stop?

CONGRESS SHOULD GIVE RELIEF.

I am greatly distressed that the House has been in session now for more than two months and is about to take a vacation for August without having attempted to do anything whatever for relief against high prices. I voted against the vacation for that reason. We have talked but have taken no action. We have threatened the packers but the bill rests in the committee. I am unable to learn of any measure which has been proposed or discussed which would attempt to give any general relief. I regret that Members of the House should be so unmindful of the wishes of the people at home as to be willing to return to them for a vacation without having taken some positive action against the profiteers.

I am not willing to leave this duty to others any longer, and duly cognizant of the magnitude of the question I feel called upon to present my solution of the profiteering problem as it presents itself to me. I can not escape the view that the only hope for relief against high prices is a thoroughgoing system of price fixing. Accordingly I have introduced a bill to that end. My bill would create a trade commission with power to fix prices on the necessaries of life and upon the great basic commodities which constitute a foundation for all prices. It would forbid all combinations among producers and dealers to fix prices or to limit production and would forbid the sale of any necessary of life at a price higher than charged when the armistice was signed. It also would require that the cost and sale price be legibly marked on every article offered for sale.

I extend in the RECORD a copy of the bill as I have introduced it in the House, where it has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A CURB FOR PROFITEERS.

A bill to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the distribution of necessaries, preventing the sale thereof at excessive prices, punishing conspiracies relating thereto, and otherwise regulating the distribution and sale thereof, and to create a national trade commission.

Be it enacted, etc., That by reason of the recent existence of a state of war it is essential for the national security and defense and for the restoration of peace and order to insure the equitable distribution and sale at reasonable prices of the necessaries of life and of other commodities and to prevent scarcity, monopolizations, injurious speculations, manipulations, and controls affecting the supply, sale, and distribution thereof.

SEC. 2. That all articles and commodities manufactured, produced, or sold to be used as food, clothing, feed stuffs, medicines, furniture and furnishings, building materials and supplies, tools, iron, steel, coal, coke, copper and the materials used in producing said articles and commodities, gas, electricity, and transportation, and dwellings and apartments let for hire, shall be deemed necessaries within the meaning of this act.

SEC. 3. That the words used in this act shall be construed to import the plural, or the singular, as the case demands. The word "person" wherever used in this act shall include persons, firms, associations, and corporations. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any person, firm, association, or corporation within the scope of his employment or office shall in every case also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such person, firm, association, or corporation as well as that of such person.

SEC. 4. That the provisions of this act shall cease to be in effect at the expiration of five years after the date of the termination of the war between the United States and Germany, as same shall be ascertained and proclaimed by the President under section 24 of the act approved August 10, 1917, known as Public Law No. 41, Sixty-fifth Congress, but the termination of this act shall not affect any act done or any right or obligation accruing or accrued or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil case before the said termination pursuant to this act; but all rights and liabilities under this act arising before its termination shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if the act had not been terminated. Any offense committed and all penalties, forfeitures, or liabilities incurred prior to such termination may be prosecuted or punished in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been terminated.

SEC. 5. That any willful violation of the provisions of this act shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 6. That a war-trade commission composed of five members, to be appointed by the President without confirmation by the Senate, each to receive an annual salary of $5,000 and to hold office during the will of the President, is hereby created.

SEC. 7. Said war-trade commission shall have authority to appoint agents and employees at their discretion, none of whom shall receive annual salaries exceeding $5,000, and shall have the further powers conferred upon them by the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. That said war-trade commission shall have authority to fix the maximum sale, use, and service prices for necessaries; to adopt regulations for the distribution, transportation, sale, handling, and storage of same; and to license dealers, agents, and other handlers thereof.

SEC. 9. That it shall be unlawful for any person to sell, offer for sale, deliver, or to make a charge for, directly or indirectly, any necessary at a price greater than the maximum price fixed thereon by the war-trade commission, or if no such maximum price has been fixed, at a price or charge greater than such necessary sold for or was charged therefor on November 11, 1918; or to make any agreement, express or implied, with any dealer, producer, or handler thereof to fix or increase the price of a necessary or to limit the production of same; or not being a producer thereof, to sell, deal in, handle, or transport any necessary after 15 days after the approval of this act without permission or license, general or special, from said war-trade commission.

SEC. 10. That it shall be unlawful for any person who has not produced the same to sell, exhibit for sale, or offer for sale any necessary without same being legibly marked in plain figures with the original cost to him and the sale price thereof, where such necessary is physically susceptible of being so marked or where same is not physically susceptible of being so marked, to refuse to inform any intended purchaser thereof of such cost and sale price.

SEC. 11. That the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act.

Jurisdiction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads Over Telegraph and Telephone Legislation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. C. WILLIAM RAMSEYER,

OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, August 1, 1919.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, May 29, 1919, when the question of the jurisdiction of the wire-control bill was up before the House, Mr. ESCH, chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, made this statement: "The main thing determining the jurisdiction of committees is the original proposition—the wire control—and our committee has always had control of the wire systems." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 401.) That is a bold affirmative statement which I challenge.

As late as February 28, 1918, Mr. MOON, then chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, made the motion for change of reference of a wire-control bill from the Committee on the District of Columbia to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. In support of the motion Mr. MOON said:

The power of Congress to take over the telegraph and telephones arises, as I said, from the provisions of the Constitution that enable it to establish post offices and post roads. These instrumentalities must be taken over as a means of communication, as a part of the Postal System. They can not otherwise be constitutionally obtained. The committee that has the right to legislate and appropriate money for the Postal Service under the rules of the House is the committee that properly has jurisdiction to report a bill on this question. Inasmuch as these instrumentalities can be obtained only as postal facilities, no bill could be drafted under the rules over which any committee except the Post Office and Post Roads Committee would have jurisdiction, unless, possibly, the instrumentalities might be taken over under the war power of Congress by a bill from the Military Committee.

The motion carried—ayes 149, noes 102.

During the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads had referred to it a bill for the return of the wire systems, and that committee held hearings thereon—more extensive hearings than those recently held by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The bill was reported out with a report to return the wires December 31, 1919. That bill was on the calendar for a month before the close of the session, and no question of jurisdiction was ever raised against the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. That bill was not considered by the House, for the simple reason that the pressure of other business was so great that it was impossible to consider the wire-control bill during the short session which ended March 4, 1919.

I know that this discussion can have no effect on the action of the House on May 29 last, but I am citing the precedents herein to register my protest against taking the hasty and ill-considered action of the House on that date as a precedent for future legislation. It is in the interest of orderly procedure to prevent as far as possible the encroachment of one committee on the jurisdiction of another. To bring about such procedure is my purpose for presenting this brief of authorities.

I have made a very careful search of both the House Manual and Hinds' Precedents. If Hinds is any authority on parliamentary procedure in the House, it is plain that prior to July, 1918, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce never did assume jurisdiction over bills affecting the wire systems of the country. In Hinds' Precedents, discussing the jurisdiction of this committee, the word "telegraph" never once appears. (Hinds', secs. 4096–4117.)

If the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is to have jurisdiction over legislation affecting the telegraphs and telephones just because those instrumentalities are used in interstate business or commerce, then there is no reason why it should not have jurisdiction over bills affecting the parcel post and the postal savings banks, both under the supervision of the Postmaster General, for both of these instrumentalities are used in interstate commerce, as are also the mails. Not only does Hinds never mention the word "telegraph" or "telegraph systems" or "telegraph wires" in discussing the jurisdiction of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, but in discussing the jurisdiction of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee, in section 4193, Hinds states affirmatively, "Subjects relating to postal savings banks and postal telegraph are within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads," and cites many precedents in support of this statement.

Congress has recognized the jurisdiction of the Post Office Department over the telegraph and telephone systems of the United States by repeated statutory enactments, by directing the Postmaster General to make reports concerning telegraphs and telephones, and nearly every Postmaster General from the time of Morse's invention to the present time has in his annual report covered the subjects of telegraphs and telephones, a brief synopsis of which I submit herewith:

ACT OF MARCH 3, 1843.

This act appropriates $30,000 for construction and operation of the Morse system of electromagnetic telegraph from Washington to Baltimore, and places supervision of expenditures under the Secretary of the Treasury.

ACT OF MARCH 3, 1845.

This act appropriates a sum for maintenance and operation of Government electromagnetic telegraph, and transfers superintendence of line to Postmaster General. At this time the Government owned whatever there was of the telegraph system of the country.

ACT OF JUNE 19, 1846.

This act appropriates $4,000 for expenses of Government electromagnetic telegraph from Washington to Baltimore, and authorizes the Postmaster General to lease or, under the direction of the President, to sell the system.

ACT OF AUGUST 10, 1846.

This act provides that "the proceeds of the telegraph between Washington City and Baltimore be, and the same are hereby, directed to be placed in the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the Post Office Department in the same manner as other revenues from postage."

ACT OF JULY 24, 1866.

This act is entitled "An act to aid in the construction of telegraph lines and to secure Government use of same for postal, military, and other purposes." Section 2 provides that Government messages shall have priority over all other business and shall be sent at rates to be annually fixed by the Postmaster General. Section 3 of this act specifically provides that the United States may, at any time after the expiration of five years, purchase the telegraphs for postal, military, or other purposes at the appraised value, to be ascertained by five competent, disinterested persons, two of whom shall be selected by the Postmaster General. Section 4 provides that before any telegraph company shall exercise any of the powers or privileges conferred by this act such company shall file a written acceptance with the Postmaster General.

In 1888, in passing additional legislation in reference to telegraphs, it is specifically provided that—

Nothing herein contained shall be held to deny, exclude, or impair any right or remedy in the premises now existing in the United States or any authority that the Postmaster General now has * * * to purchase lines as provided for under said title or to have its messages given precedence in transmission. (U. S. Compiled Statutes, sec. 10086.)

ACT OF JANUARY 22, 1901.

The postal act of January 22, 1901, directed the Postmaster General to report to Congress the probable cost for connecting telegraph and telephone systems with the Postal Service by some feasible plan.

Proposed legislation always recognized telegraphs and telephones a part of the Postal Establishment.

Altogether up to 1913 about 70 bills were introduced in Congress for the purpose of establishing telegraph service as part of the Postal Establishment. Eighteen times committees of the House or Senate have reported on such bills. Sixteen times the report was favorable and twice adverse to Government operation in connection with the Postal System. There have been no reports by congressional committees in which operation by any other department of Government has been recommended.

ANNUAL REPORTS OF THE POSTMASTERS GENERAL.

The following annual reports of the Postmasters General prior to the beginning of the present administration recommend Government operation of telegraphs through the Post Office Department.

1845 (Postmaster General Cave Johnson)—Democrat.
1846 (Postmaster General Cave Johnson)—Democrat.
1871 (Postmaster General Creswell)—Republican.

OPERATION OF TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES IN OTHER COUNTRIES.

Not only do the Statutes of the United States and the Precedents of Hinds all recognize that the wire systems are properly a part of the postal system, but every other leading country in the world recognizes the telegraph and telephone systems to be a part of the postal system. The telegraphs outside of the United States and a few Latin-American countries are owned by the Government and operated as a part of the postal establishments. This is the case in all the leading countries of Europe, such as Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, the Balkan States, Greece, Spain, Portugal, the Scandinavian countries, Germany, Austria, Russia, and Japan; also in all the British self-governing colonies. In almost all the countries, including the important ones, the telephone systems are treated as part of the telegraphs. In Holland in some of the larger cities the telephones are municipally owned and operated. In the Scandinavian countries the telephone has been developed in the rural districts to a considerable extent by mutual companies and cooperative associations, just as in the Middle West in our own country, but the systems in the larger towns and cities and the toll lines are owned and operated by the State. The United States is the only important country in the world where both telegraphs and telephones are left entirely to private ownership and are not administered as part of the Postal Establishment.

THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION ACT OF AUGUST 7, 1888.

Sections 1 and 2 of this act make provision for connecting telegraph companies extending their lines to any station or office of a telegraph line belonging to any railroad or telegraph company, and provide against discrimination for or against any one of such connecting lines and that the rate of exchanges shall be on terms just and equitable. Section 3 gives power to the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant the necessary relief upon proper complaint being filed. (U. S. Compiled Statutes, 10080–10082.)

The act for the regulation of common carriers of interstate and foreign commerce includes telegraph, telephone, and cable companies, whether wire or wireless, engaged in sending messages from one State to another.

CONCLUSION.

While it is true that the act of July 22, 1918, gave the power to the President to control and operate the wire systems, he in turn named the head of the Postal Establishment as the proper agent to control and operate them. In doing this and in making the telegraph and telephone systems a part of the Postal Establishment he followed the precedents not only of this country but of every other enlightened country in the world.

The executive and legislative branches of this Government have always recognized that their right to control and operate the telegraph and telephone systems, both interstate and intrastate, was by virtue of the postal clause of the Constitution. It is only under the post office and post roads clause of the Constitution that Congress had the right to authorize the taking over of both interstate and intrastate wire systems, unless, as suggested by Chairman MOON, those "instrumentalities might be taken over under the war power of Congress by a bill from the Military Affairs Committee."

The Interstate Commerce Commission has not now and never did have given to it any right of "control" or "operation" of either interstate or intrastate wire systems. Under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution the Federal Government can not assume any jurisdiction whatsoever of intrastate wire systems. Under the postal clause of the Constitution the Federal Government can "operate" and "control" both interstate and intrastate wire systems. Under existing law the Interstate Commerce Commission has been designated the court to which can be referred some questions of "regulation" of wire systems engaged in an interstate business only.

Even though we concede that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has jurisdiction of all subjects coming under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution and of all subjects concerning the Interstate Commerce Commission, it follows conclusively that the right to "control" and "operate" all wire systems—both interstate and intrastate—is by virtue of the postal clause of the Constitution, and therefore all bills affecting interstate and intrastate wire systems are properly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROSCOE C. McCULLOCH,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, August 2, 1919.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, on February 21, 1919, when the wheat-guaranty bill was under consideration by the House, I contended that the loss, if any, which would result from the fixing of $2.26 a bushel as the guaranteed price of wheat to the producer should be paid out of the Treasury of the United States and not added to the price of bread to the consumer. The bill passed by Congress placed the power in the President to handle the wheat situation as he saw fit, it being admitted during the debate that the United States Grain Corporation was to be the medium through which the President would act, and it was further admitted that Mr. Julius H. Barnes, who would have charge of the activities of the United States Grain Corporation, favored distributing the loss between the Treasury and the consumer or placing the loss entirely upon the consumer. It now develops that Mr. Barnes, as the directing head of the United States Grain Corporation, has not only placed the entire loss upon the consumer but has added a profit for the Grain Corporation over and above the guaranteed price. During the month of March it is admitted that as much as 17 cents a bushel profit was added to the guaranteed price of $2.26 a bushel. Just recently a statement issued by the Grain Corporation showed that they had carried to earned surplus over $23,000,000, representing the surplus profit that had been made through its various operations. A large part of that profit came from the increased price in wheat to the consumer as fixed by the Grain Corporation; in other words, a Government agency having the power to create a monopoly in a food product has been making a profit at the expense of the consumers of bread.

I noticed by this morning's paper that an Executive conference is to be held, to be attended by Mr. Barnes, and that it is probable that "serious consideration will be given to the plan to sell wheat at the market price, with the Government absorbing the difference between that and the $2.26 per bushel guaranteed the farmers." If this is done, it will be following the plan I suggested in February when the wheat-guaranty bill was under consideration. The consumers of the country are entitled to secure bread at the market price to be determined by the law of supply and demand without artificial interference. If there is a large wheat crop and the increased supply will reduce the price, the consumer should benefit by it, and the artificial interference of the United States Grain Corporation should be removed.

There can be no doubt but that the high cost of living is the most vital question before the American people at this hour, because prices have increased to a point where the earning power of the people, even with the high wages, is not sufficient to enable them to meet their necessary requirements. Unrest is general. I shall not try to offer a solution to this problem—it is a subject requiring the most thorough investigation before action is taken—but I do have certain suggestions that I think should be considered.

During the war Government officials encouraged a getting together by the producers of all kinds of products and the fixing of prices by the producers in combination to the Government and to consumers. It developed during the investigations of the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department that the Council of National Defense had created certain committees composed of the producers of products in various lines; that those producers not only fixed the price but sold their own products to themselves acting for the Government. There can be no doubt that the system has been continued since the signing of the armistice; and in my opinion there will have to be drastic action taken by the Government to break up these combinations and force competition before we can expect any very material results in the way of eliminating profiteering. It has been contended that during the war patriotism tempered the natural greed and avarice of human nature; and that men, because of their patriotism, were willing to accept small returns on capital invested and small profits. Whether the theory put into operation during the war was sound will be shown by the facts developed by the investigations of the committees of Congress that are now authorized to go into these matters. It is clear now that some process is at work that is keeping the price of commodities up. I believe that one cause of the high prices is combinations among producers of goods to keep prices up; and, in my opinion, the only way to force competition and eliminate the profiteering resulting from combination is to invoke the criminal sections of Federal and State statutes, punishing men who, through unlawful combinations, are fixing prices and profiteering at the expense of the consuming public. If it should develop that an unusual demand from abroad is resulting in keeping the prices of commodities in this country up, it may be necesary to resort to embargoes. Because, after all, our first duty is to America and to the American people; and we would be justified in taking any action that may be necessary to restore normal conditions and to enable the American people to exist upon the wages they are able to earn.

In line with combinations and unlawful agreements is the holding of food in storage for higher prices. An immediate investigation should be made of methods of this kind and prompt prosecutions instituted if it is found that food is being so held, and the food should be released. It is not strange that private concerns should be encouraged in such a practice when it developed only this week on the floor of the House, in the debate on the resolution to release the billions of dollars' worth of food held by the War Department, that it was the policy of certain officials to hold food owned by the Government to keep the prices up and to prevent a break in market prices. The trouble with the whole situation is that there have been too many artificial interferences with the natural order of things and too little regulation of combinations. If competition is forced by criminal prosecution, if the American consuming public is protected against undue demands from foreign countries, and if the food in the storage houses is released, it would seem to me that we are on a fair way to a solution of this problem. I believe that it is the duty of Congress to act, and to act at once.

I desire to call attention to the following correspondence that I have recently had with Mr. Julius H. Barnes, president of the United States Grain Corporation:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., April 12, 1919.

UNITED STATES GRAIN CORPORATION,
New York City, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: I desire to enter a protest against what seems to me to be an outrage upon the American people. If I have the facts correctly, the Grain Corporation, under authority granted by Congress to handle the wheat situation, is cheating the farmer and placing an unfair burden upon the consumers of bread.

A constituent of mine, who is a large dealer in grain, has just informed me that he was compelled to pay to the Grain Corporation last week $2.56 a bushel for wheat, this amount being 30 cents per bushel over the guarantee price of $2.26 paid to the farmer. He says that it was practically admitted that the 30 cents per bushel over and above the guarantee price of $2.26 was to take care of the expenses of the Grain Corporation, such as inspection charges and the like.

During the debate in Congress on the wheat guarantee bill I predicted that this is just what would happen; that not only the loss resulting from the guaranty would be placed upon the consuming public, but the expenses of maintaining your inspectors and employees would also be placed upon the consuming public.

I desire to call your attention to my speech upon this subject as it appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 21, 1919, page 4157, in which I contend that no part of this loss should be placed upon the consuming public, but that the loss should be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. If this were done, it would eliminate in a large measure the necessity for your corporation and its expensive operations.

I can not think of anything that would cause greater discontent among the people than for the Government to create a monopoly on wheat and then profiteer at the expense of the farmer and the consuming public.

I would appreciate your advising me whether or not it is the purpose of your corporation to continue the policy I have referred to, and I am asking this information with a view to presenting the matter before the House when Congress reconvenes, because I do not believe it was the intention of Congress that the wheat situation should be handled in this way.

Sincerely, yours, ROSCOE C. MCCULLOCH.

SPEECH OF HON. ROSCOE C. M'CULLOCH IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FEBRUARY 21, 1919.

"Mr. MCCULLOCH. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], a member of the committee, will probably later on introduce an amendment that will amount at least to a declaration of policy along the line I have had in mind. If he does not introduce such an amendment, I shall do so. If the market price of wheat is less than the guaranteed price, there will be a loss, and, as I understand it, under the provisions of this bill it is left to the President or to the executive branch to apportion that loss. They can place the entire burden of the loss upon the Treasury or upon the consumer, or they can apportion the loss between the Treasury and the consumer.

"I shall vote for this bill because I believe that the contract entered into between the Government and the farmers of the country should be carried out to the letter. The farmers have done their part in this war nobly, and they submitted to the fixing of the price of wheat without objection. For the Government to repudiate its obligation now would be the worst kind of a breach of faith. But the consumer should not bear the loss. The loss should come out of the Treasury of the United States.

"I endeavored to develop information by questioning the chairman of the committee during the debate this morning as to just what effect the passage of this bill would have upon the consumers of the country, but the time of the chairman of the committee seemed to be so limited that he could not go into that phase of the situation. I made another attempt to develop the same information from the ranking member of the Committee on Agriculture on this side of the Chamber, but his answers to my questions were, to say the least, unsatisfactory. No one seems to have given very serious consideration to the effect of this legislation upon the consumer. To my way of thinking that is now the most important matter to be considered in connection with this bill. No one has advocated, to my knowledge, at any time that the Government should not make good in the spirit as well as the letter the guaranty that it has made to the farmers of America. We are not now considering whether it was wise or not to provide for the fixing of a maximum price on wheat. We have now reached the point where the Government is called upon to consider ways and means to make good a contract already entered into and acted upon in good faith by the farmers and producers of the country.

"Most of the debate has been consumed in a discussion of whether or not we should repudiate our contract and the guaranties when that point is not at issue at all. The method, however, of making good these guaranties is an important question, and therein lies the interests of the consuming public.

"Assuming, as I have said, that the market price of wheat will be less than the guaranteed price—and I think that is a fair assumption—there will be a loss. The question is, Who shall bear the loss? If this were a business proposition, there would be no doubt about who would bear the loss. The loss would be borne by the guarantor, and the Government is the guarantor in this instance and should bear the loss. But it is possible under this bill to make the consuming public bear the loss, which means, in effect, that the poor man who must buy bread to feed his family will have to bear the burden by increased prices.

"This bill provides that the President shall have the power to place the loss entirely upon the consumer or entirely upon the Government, or to distribute the loss between the Government and the consumer. He is given the power under this bill to buy wheat at the guaranteed price and then to supervise its distribution at prices to be fixed by him. If the price of wheat in the market, through the operation of the law of supply and demand, which this bill will interfere with, were $1 a bushel, the loss would be the difference between the market price and the guaranteed price, which would be $1.26. The President could have the wheat distributed, as I understand the provisions of the bill, at, say, $1.90, or any other price which would mean a distribution of the loss between the Government and the consumer.

"Now, I am opposed to that method for two reasons. In the first place, I do not believe that Congress should continue to pass legislation which shifts responsibility from the Congress to the Executive branch, because by shifting responsibility Congress also at the same time extends powers to the Executive branch which may or may not be used to the benefit of the public. In other words, I believe that Congress should assume its proper prerogatives and say what should be done and what should not be done. During time of war it was probably all right, or, to put it more in accordance with my views, it was probably necessary to centralize power and authority in the Executive and to leave him free to act as he might see fit under conditions which might be very uncertain. But the emergency has passed, and the Congress should now legislate definitely upon these important subjects and assume responsibility to the extent of passing laws which are directory rather than discretionary. Second, I do not believe that Congress should make it possible for any part of this burden to be placed upon the consuming public. The Government having entered into this contract, it should meet this guaranty and take its loss. The poor man with a large family will without doubt be less able to contribute in this indirect way to the meeting of this obligation than would the taxpayer who would have to meet it by paying the increased taxes. Besides, it is to the interest of those who have property and of those who have possessions which are subject to taxation to remove in every possible way the chances for unrest and discontent among the people, and I can not think of any way whereby the tendencies toward discontent would be increased more rapidly than by keeping the cost of living up, and whatever you may say about it the price of bread is always regarded as a basis from which to judge the cost of living; at least, if the price of bread is high the average consumer will look upon the cost of living as high, and I do not believe that the Congress should be in the attitude of making it possible for the price of bread to be kept up for the purpose of taking care of this obligation. I understand that the provisions of this bill, which places the entire matter in the hands of the Executive branch of the Government, are regarded by some Members as being such as to protect the consumer against exorbitant profits by millers and others through the licensing provision. There, again, is a provision about which I disagree with those who have framed this bill. I believe that there can be too much Government interference and that the regulations can be made too complicated to result in any real good, even if the Executive branch of the Government acts from the highest motives possible. We should get away just as soon as we can from Government interference with private business. I am for the strictest kind of regulation for the purpose of eliminating unfair practices and the preventing of the raising of prices by artificial means, such as trade agreements and otherwise, but I believe that after the Government provides strict regulation that then it should keep hands off and allow the natural laws of supply and demand to work unhampered.

"I shall restate my position in regard to this bill in order that it may not be misunderstood. The Government having guaranteed the price of wheat to the farmer, should make it good, but the guaranty should be made good out of the Treasury of the United States, and not out of the pockets of the consumers of bread. Therefore I believe that this bill should be amended along those general lines, and the power should be taken away from the Executive branch to distribute this loss as it may see fit.

"So, therefore, while I am in sympathy with the spirit of the amendment which the gentleman from Minnesota informs me he will propose, which amounts to a declaration of policy, I do certainly think that Congress should assume for once the full responsibility, and, instead of shifting the responsibility to the Executive branch of the Government, granting it the power to fix these prices, that we should provide specifically that the Government will take care of it itself and pay the guaranty. [Applause.]

"The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
FOOD ADMINISTRATION GRAIN CORPORATION,
General Office, New York City, April 22, 1919.

Hon. ROSCOE C. MCCULLOCH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 12th received.

It has been the policy of the Grain Corporation to handle the wheat situation on a basis which would be fair to both the producer and consumer. So far as the price which the Grain Corporation pays for wheat is concerned this is following out the Executive order of the President of the United States, namely, $2.26 at Chicago for No. 1 wheat. The original price at Chicago was named at $2.20 by the Fair Price Commission appointed by the President to ascertain what in their judgment was the proper price to pay the farmer for wheat.

It has also been the policy of the Grain Corporation, and our records will show that we have been very active in seeing that this terminal price is properly reflected by the dealer to the consumer. We have been able to secure restitution of hundreds of thousands of dollars back to the producers from the dealers.

In reselling wheat we had just one price—the guaranteed price plus 14 cents a bushel during the month of March. This was to take care of the actual storage and interest on the money invested and not for the purpose of profit. The fact of the matter is that when we entered the market as resellers the wheat was selling at from 40 cents to 50 cents premium in certain sections of the country and the Grain Corporation did not undertake to secure a profit greater than to take care of the storage and interest.

Your constituent, of course, added the freight to the price the grain was purchased at in Chicago. So therefore about 16 cents of the 30 cents went to the Railroad Administration and was therefore compensation for proper service.

We are very glad at all times to have situations presented to us which appear to be unfair or unsatisfactory in order that we may explain them, or if a mistake has occurred that we may correct it.

The President, Mr. Barnes, is always ready to discuss matters of policy with representatives of the Government, or individuals, at any time. It has been the policy of the Grain Corporation to keep an open mind on every phase of its operation in order that this business of the Government may be conducted by this agency on as fair a basis as possible to all interests involved, including the Government of the United States.

So far as a policy of the Government is concerned for 1919, that will depend somewhat upon the development of the crop and the extent of the demand abroad, and the direction of the President, from whom Mr. Barnes, the president of this corporation, has his appointment as wheat director.

We will again read carefully your speech, which appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 21, 1919, as there are undoubtedly points there which we would want to consider in formulating policies for making effective the wheat guaranty for 1919 under the congressional act.

Yours, very truly,

WATSON S. MOORE,
Secretary.

NEW YORK, July 3, 1919.

Hon. ROSCOE C. MCCULLOCH,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: In order that you may be promptly advised of the result of the 22 months of operation of the Food Administration Grain Corporation, which on July 1 became the United States Grain Corporation, and in order that the statement may be fully placed before you, I venture to inclose you clipping of the press release covering the result of the meeting of the stockholders and of the new directors.

You will note that the directors feel justified in carrying forward as earned surplus $23,763,320.93, which surplus, together with the original capital stock of $150,000,000, in addition to the appropriation carried in the act of March 4, 1919, will be used in administering the wheat guaranty.

You will recall that for the crop year 1917–18 the Grain Corporation was directed to stabilize wheat at the fair price recommended by the independent price commission, which it succeeded in doing, and for the crop year 1918–19 was directed to make effective the guaranty price for that crop, which it has succeeded in doing without loss. With these obligations rested also the duty of furthering the supply of necessary foodstuffs to our Allies and for our own Army and Navy, without domestic price disturbance, and also to so facilitate the equal distribution at home that the supplies available should be made to cover these home and foreign needs.

We lay especial emphasis on having planned the past operations of the Grain Corporation not with the primary purpose of profit earning, but to carry out these necessary national policies, and, at the same time, to conduct its business in a sound manner.

We shall need on your part a measure of sympathetic consideration in relation to our efforts in this coming year to make effective the national guaranty to the producer and to market the possible accumulations therefrom in a fair and just manner.

Yours, truly,

JULIUS H. BARNES.

GRAIN CORPORATION EARNS NET SURPLUS OF $23,000,000—ANNUAL MEETING HELD AT CORPORATION'S OFFICES—WAR UNDERTAKING CHANGES CORPORATE IDENTITY IN PREPARATION FOR HANDLING 1919–1920 WHEAT CROP—MADE PROFIT FOR UNITED STATES.

America's most gigantic war undertaking yesterday changed its identity as the Food Administration Grain Corporation and undertook the task of handling the 1919 wheat crop for the coming year under the new corporate title of the United States Grain Corporation, with a capital of $500,000,000.

At the annual meeting of stockholders with the president, Julius Barnes, United States Wheat Director, held in the corporation's offices, 42 Broadway, reports of work accomplished revealed the Grain Corporation not only as a war body which had paid all of its own expenses and operated at a small profit rather than a loss, but also as perhaps the greatest commercial undertaking in the world in regard to the volume of business handled.

Upon the suggestion of the executive committee of the Grain Corporation, the stockholders adopted the recommendation that the organization was justified in carrying forward as earned surplus the equivalent of 6 per cent on capital supplied by the United States of $10,191,666.64 and earnings of one-half of 1 per cent net on $1,800,000,000 worth of commodities handled, amounting to $9,000,000. This recommendation was made after setting aside a reserve for contingent liabilities, such as fire insurance, which the Grain Corporation carries on its own stocks, and the necessary adjustment of outstanding obligations in European relief.

A total of funds returned by mills as refund of excess profits over the regulated amounts of the 1917–18 crop year, amounting to $4,571,654.29, was also carried into earned surplus, making a total carried forward to net surplus earned amounting to $23,763,320.93.

Herbert Hoover, who has been chairman of the board of directors of the Grain Corporation for nearly two years, cabled from Paris to the meeting of stockholders his resignation from that position, which will be filled by Mr. Barnes as Wheat Director. Mr. Hoover, who continues as director in the corporation, cabled Mr. Barnes as follows:

"Will you kindly request the directors of the corporation to accept my resignation as chairman and at the same time record my sense of loss at this termination of two years' personal cooperation with them in national service? I should not resign did I not feel certain that the corporation is in hands which will assure the same public interest as hitherto."

HOOVER RETURNS IN TWO MONTHS.

This resignation of the director general of relief in Europe is one of the first steps in his intended withdrawal from public service as rapidly as the war service of the various departments of the Food Administration is finished or they are absorbed by other agencies. It is expected that Mr. Hoover will return to America in about two months, upon the completion of European relief and the arrival of the European harvest.

During the existence of the Grain Corporation the purpose of Mr. Barnes and the executive officers has been that the United States funds employed to conduct its affairs should at least earn the customary interest charge, and that beyond this the turnover of its large business should be with as small an operating profit as could be properly calculated, considering the complexity of its operations. During the 22 months of its existence the Grain Corporation has been fortunate in not losing a single dollar through fire loss. Calculation of its margin of profit at one-half of 1 per cent on commodities handled is in part due to the fact that its earnings were not drawn upon to absorb fire losses, which might easily have been expected under war hazards.

Since its incorporation 22 months ago the Grain Corporation has disbursed $3,500,000,000 and collected $3,500,000,000. It has bought from first hands and sold for overseas shipments commodities to a value of about $1,800,000,000, at an operating expense of about $3,250,000. This means that its operating-expense ratio has been about one-sixth of 1 per cent.

Throughout the month of last November the Grain Corporation was using in the handling of commodities, principally wheat, its own capital of $150,000,000, its own surplus of about $20,000,000, besides $360,000,000 borrowed from banks and others, or a total employed of $530,000,000.

The Grain Corporation has been for the past two years a vast collection and distribution agency. Its function has been to assist in supply to the Allies and the American Army and Navy large quantities of wheat, wheat flour, and other foods, with very little disturbance of American prices, and with such an even control of American distribution that reserves from one crop to another have been brought down to the lowest possible compass, and without the development of actual scarcity anywhere in the United States. In the year just past it carried on all the buying and the shipping for the Belgian Relief Commission until the commission retired, on May 1, and the Belvian Government itself undertook its own overseas supplies.

NO CHANGES IN PERSONNEL.

The business of the Grain Corporation has been carried on since the beginning of its active duties under Mr. Hoover two years ago without a single change in personnel. Although other war agencies have demobilized, the Grain Corporation will continue in service for another year.

At the meeting of stockholders the first changes in the executive body became effective with the withdrawal of Frank G. Crowell, of Kansas City, as first vice president and Gates W. McGarrah as treasurer, both of whom have held office in active service since the incorporation of the organization. Both Mr. Crowell and Mr. McGarrah have been mentioned in a special cable of thanks from the President for their war services in these offices. They retire under pressure of private duties.

Edwin P. Shattuck, of New York, who has acted as general counsel of the Grain Corporation since its inception, has been elected as the new first vice president. Mr. Shattuck will also continue as general counsel of the Grain Corporation.

FLESH NEW TREASURER.

The new treasurer-elect is Edward M. Flesh, of St. Louis, who has been in London for the past six months handling the widespread European activities of the Grain Corporation in food relief, as the active buying and distributing agency of the American Relief Administration. It is expected that Mr. Flesh will be able to close up the European work within the next few months and subsequently become actively identified with the Grain Corporation work in New York.

Watson S. Moore, of Duluth, was elected second vice president of the Grain Corporation and will continue in New York as a director. A. W. Frick, of Duluth, formerly assistant secretary, was elected secretary of the Grain Corporation. H. M. Smith was made secretary to the United States wheat director.

The new board of directors of the corporation includes Julius H. Barnes, Herbert Hoover, Edwin P. Shattuck, Watson S. Moore, Edward M. Flesh, Darwin P. Kingsley, of New York, and J. W. Shorthill, of Omaha. Mr. Kingsley and Mr. Shorthill have been directors in the corporation for the past two years.

The second vice presidents in charge of the 13 outside offices of the Grain Corporation and supervising each zone of operation will remain the same as for the past two years, with the single exception of San Francisco, where R. A. Lewin has withdrawn under pressure of private affairs and has been succeeded by W. A. Starr, his assistant for the past two years.

The second vice presidents are George S. Jackson, Baltimore; Howard B. Jackson, Chicago; E. F. Newing, Galveston; F. L. Carey, Minneapolis; D. F. Piazzek, Kansas City; C. B. Fox, New Orleans; Charles T. Neal, Omaha; H. D. Irwin, Philadelphia; M. H. Houser, Portland; B. H. Lang, St. Louis; W. A. Starr, San Francisco; Charles Kennedy, Buffalo, N. Y.; and P. H. Ginder, Duluth.

JULY 11, 1919.

Mr. JULIUS H. BARNES,
United States Wheat Director, New York City.

DEAR SIR: Your letter dated July 3, inclosing clipping showing earnings of the Food Administration Grain Corporation, has been received.

In April of this year I had some correspondence with officers of your corporation in regard to your adding a profit to the guaranteed price of wheat.

I am opposed to the Government creating a monopoly in wheat and selling it at a profit. The people are now overburdened with the high cost of living, and for the Government to exact a profit on the sale of foodstuffs seems to me to be a little short of an outrage.

From the statement you inclosed in your letter, it appears that the Grain Corporation has earned $23,763,320.93, and that you are carrying this amount forward as an earned surplus. It is apparent that this amount was earned over and above the expenses of operating your corporation and after you had paid all your expenses, which must have been very heavy.

I am writing you now for the purpose of securing a full and complete statement of just how and from what sources this $23,763,320.93, together with your operating expenses, were earned, and a statement showing your operating expenses. I would appreciate your furnishing me this information as soon as possible.

In a letter I received from your corporation, dated April 22, 1919, the Secretary says: "The Grain Corporation did not undertake to secure a profit greater than to take care of the storage and interest." The same letter contains the following:

"In reselling wheat we had just one price—the guaranteed price plus 14 cents per bushel during the month of March."

In addition to the statements above requested I would thank you to furnish me the reselling price of wheat as determined by your corporation for all the months during which you have administered the law and fixed the resale price.

In view of the strained conditions throughout the country, which, so far as the cost of living goes, have reached almost the breaking point, I ask you for information, if you can furnish it, which will justify a Government agency taking out of the pockets of the consumers of bread a net surplus of $23,763,320.93. This profit must come out of the pockets of the consumers and the producers do not get it. In what way do you justify exacting this enormous profit at the expense of the consuming public?

At the time the bill to make good the guaranty on wheat was being considered by the House, I contended that the loss, if any, which would result from the guaranteed price being greater than the market price, that the difference should be paid out of the Treasury of the United States and not added to the price of wheat, thus increasing the cost of bread to the consumer.

I listened to the debate carefully, and I do not believe that Congress ever intended, in granting the authority contained in the wheat guaranty bill, that it should be used in the way your corporation has been handling it.

Trusting that I may be favored with an early reply, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

ROSCOE C. MCCULLOCH.

NEW YORK, July 21, 1919.

Hon. ROSCOE C. MCCULLOCH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MCCULLOCH: I have your letter of the 17th.

In storage, insurance, and interest calculation it costs on an average about 2½ cents per bushel per month expenses.

Our first resale of wheat in America was in January, at which time we calculated that our stocks of wheat had been carried an average of above five months, and made a resale price at that time of 12 cents over the basic price at which we had made purchases. At that time we sold about 14,000,000 bushels of wheat, and hoped this would be sufficient to relieve the strain on American prices, which had advanced beyond the fair-price Government basis. On the contrary, in March, we found the situation worse than ever, so that we at that time offered in practically all our offices the resale from our stocks of wheat in those markets, and to reimburse the accrued charges, estimated as carefully as possible, we made a price of 14 cents over for wheat in March, 15 cents over April 1 to 10, 16 cents April 11 to 20, and 17 cents April 21 to 30.

Under this latter resale offer something over 70,000,000 bushels of wheat was put out into domestic markets here, and still this was insufficient to hold down the price to the Government level. It did curtail our shipments to foreign buyers, which we had expected to make, and it has resulted in the practical exhaustion of all wheat stocks in the United States as of July 1. Prior to last January, when we offered the first resale lot of wheat, we had not resold in America any wheat. Every bushel we had was required urgently by our Allies, and this resale was solely to produce a natural pressure on the wheat price to eliminate the high prices which had obtained, at one time as much as 80 cents per bushel above the Government price for certain kinds of wheat at Minneapolis. This was effected only with the discontinuing of export buying of flour, which we were able to make effective at the same time, turning all the flour production into domestic markets, and the price of flour reacted then to about its former basis.

As to how your particular client in Ohio paid $2.56, I can not offer an explanation without knowing where he bought the wheat, how it was shipped, and the freight paid, but I have explained above our resale basis in all markets where we had wheat, and if your buyer bought wheat on that resale offer he undoubtedly calculated what he would pay, which was openly stated in trade bulletins put out at that time, and knew how to calculate freight and other charges which he must necessarily incur in getting it to his mill.

Our interest in the wheat terminated when the wheat was put f. o. b. car at the selling market.

Have you any criticism on a policy of reselling wheat, curtailing our foreign shipments, and using that resale of wheat to help control the domestic market price against further advances? Have you any criticism of a policy which asked for a resale price sufficient to reimburse us for the charges which accrued on that wheat? Remember this whole transaction was not under the act of March 4, carrying the $1,000,000,000 appropriation to the guaranty, but under the former food-administration act, and that no effective control of prices was given except by producing a natural pressure on prices in this manner, even though the Food Administrator was convinced that the fair-price basis named by the President's price commission was the fair basis to try to stabilize.

I am perfectly in accord with you that the Government should not create a monopolistic agency that lays burdens on the consumer or on the producer. I am so in accord with that, that during the two years ending July 1, last, we tried to operate the grain corporation without any profit, merely earning for the National Treasury the interest on the money employed, for which the Treasury itself was paying interest to our own people in its borrowings.

As an experienced man you will agree with me that after handling almost $2,000,000,000 worth of foodstuffs of various kinds in overseas shipment, a profit return of one-half of 1 per cent was about as near operating without a profit, and without a loss, as could be calculated to result.

More than that, I am so thoroughly in accord with the view that the Government should not compete with private business at all that I opposed the wheat guaranty from the start; yet as a good citizen when I am called upon to put my experience and what ability I have and the organization which has been acting as the Government agency for two years at the service of a wheat guaranty which Congress in its wisdom passed, I have no alternative but to do the best I can, and I can, I know, count with confidence upon the support of every Congressman in this difficult duty.

Your suggestion about making payments from the National Treasury to the producer through the Department of Agriculture and restoring a free market shows, I believe, a lack of full consideration of the difficulties involved. With 1,000,000 wheat farmers, with all the questions of relative quality, with all the inducements to the buyer, by collusion with the seller, to buy the grain relatively cheap, because the producer would be reimbursed from the National Treasury, I think the door would have been opened for a national scandal on such a scale as would have made the whole world ring.

If world-wide supply and demand influences could be reinstated to-day, that is the only just substitute for the fair-price expression which we are making effective, but in my humble judgment you are totally in error in calculating what the effect of that supply and demand influence would be if reinstated. It would be just as likely to result in higher prices as in lower; whereas your whole argument is constructed on the feeling that the wheat price is sustained solely by the Government guaranty, although for the past three months the wheat price in this country has ruled higher than the guaranty. It is because it is impossible to calculate the exact price which would be registered by supply and demand that we have assumed the fair-price expression which has ruled for two years is the best measure now attainable.

In international trade the conversion of British sterling alone within the last week fluctuated the equivalent of 15 cents per bushel, and every trade-handling facility along the line between producer and consumer faced with any such fluctuating hazard as that one item of exchange would insure against it by excessive trade margins, and would greatly widen the spread between the producer and the consumer. There is, therefore, a real public service at this time in the grain corporation acting as the guarantor against such trade hazards, and thereby establishing moderate trade margins along the line of conversion.

I shall be glad to give you any additional information which you will indicate.

Yours, truly,

JULIUS H. BARNES.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JULIUS KAHN,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, August 8, 1919.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, availing myself of the leave extended me this morning, I submit the following remarks on the Shantung question:

Under our Constitution, the House of Representatives has no voice in the ratification of treaties entered into by the President of the United States with foreign nations. Therefore, ordinarily, the Members of the House do not discuss the questions involved in those treaties. But I believe our countrymen are so thoroughly interested in the peace treaty that was recently signed at Versailles that it becomes the duty of Representatives to explain the various problems which the treaty presents. I believe it best to do this before public sentiment has been thoroughly crystallized throughout the country. And therefore I am taking the liberty to speak frankly and freely upon a phase of the treaty which appeals with particular force to the people of the Pacific Coast States and the western section of our country generally.

Unfortunately great world events follow each other so rapidly in this period of important, and oftentimes involved, international affairs that we are apt to forget after the lapse of a few years what actually did happen in the preceding decade. Accordingly I shall take the liberty at this time of recalling to you some matters that I fear have been partially, if not entirely, forgotten.

The peace conference that recently met at Paris was confronted with several propositions that affected both China and Japan. During the period covered by the last 75 years of our history we have been looked upon as the traditional friend of both these countries; but there have been times when our friendship with each country became somewhat strained. However, the American people, through their official representatives, have always tried to be fair and just in their dealings with the orientals, and I believe the statesmen and the people of both China and Japan recognize that fact. As one of the Representatives from the State of California, and representing in part the people of the great western section of this country, I want to take this opportunity to state in most emphatic terms that the opposition to oriental immigration in the West is not and never has been a racial question. With us it is entirely an economic question. The problem of oriental immigration on the Pacific coast has been an acute one for many years. I repeat there is not a particle of race hatred or race prejudice behind it. There is not now and there never has been any objection to the coming to our shores of Japanese of the so-called "Shizuko" class.

This class comprises the professional people, the merchants, bankers, scholars, and students. The objection is altogether to the laboring class—the coolies. We feel that our white workingmen can not compete with the oriental laborers. The latter have an entirely different standard of living. They can and constantly do underbid the Caucasian in almost every field of endeavor. It is for this reason, and this reason alone, that objection is made to the immigrant from the Orient. China long ago acknowledged our rights to restrict the coming of Chinese coolies to our shores. Japan has likewise, through what is known as a "gentlemen's agreement," recognized the right of the United States to regulate the coming to our mainland of Japanese laborers. If there be a lurking suspicion in any part of the world that our attitude on this question is due to race prejudice, it ought to be dispelled without delay. Personally I object most emphatically to this matter being used as a smoke screen to mask the real intention of any country in the world.

We in the United States, conscious of the fact that in our dealing with oriental countries we have not been guilty of race prejudice of any kind, most emphatically object to any misrepresentation of our attitude at this time. Nor do I believe that the English colonies of Australia and New Zealand and the Province of British Columbia in Canada have had any different motive in the passage of their exclusion laws. They, like us, are trying to protect their laboring class from the competition of the Asiatic coolie. Therefore the cry for "racial equality" should have no terrors for the people of the United States. But surely Japan does not object to our immigration laws. She herself forbids the entrance into Japan of laborers coming from other countries who underbid Japanese laborers in her own territory. She has in recent months deported Chinese workmen from Shimonoseki who were brought from China to work at the Hiroshima sawmill there. Evidently she treats the matter of the admission of cheap Chinese labor into Japan as an economic question, even as we do with respect to oriental laborers who seek to enter our country. The question of "race equality" is not involved in Japan any more than it is in the United States in the immigration laws of the two countries.

Up to the time of the conclusion of the treaty of peace between Japan and Russia, negotiated at Portsmouth, N. H., in 1905, the Japanese Government had always looked upon the people and the Government of the United States as true friends. This friendship manifested itself on many occasions. And yet, in 1897, when the Republic of Hawaii sought admission to the United States through the instrumentality of a treaty of annexation, Japan was the only country in the world that filed a formal protest with the State Department at Washington against the consummation of the annexation. The Japanese Government took the ground, first, that the maintenance of the status quo in Hawaii was essential to the good understanding of the powers having interests in the Pacific; and, second, that the absorption of the islands by the United States would tend to endanger certain rights of the Japanese subjects in the group, under its treaties, constitution, and laws, and might result in postponing the settlement of claims and liabilities existing in favor of Japan under treaty stipulation.

The officials and people of this country at no time manifested a feeling of indignation against Japan on account of this attitude. We did not look upon it as an affront, nor did we feel that our national honor had been offended. We respectfully took Japan's protest into consideration and finally answered objections to her entire satisfaction.

In 1904, when she entered the Russo-Japanese war, the overwhelming sentiment of the American people was favorable to Japan. After the war had progressed for about a year President Roosevelt undertook to bring together commissioners from both countries to negotiate a peace treaty. The President in his autobiography speaks of the fact that he endeavored to secure for Japan from the Government of Russia a money indemnity. Russia, however, announced from the start that she would under no circumstances agree to such a payment. The President, on pages 585 and 586 of his most interesting autobiography, says:

> The chief difficulty came because of Japan's demand for a money indemnity. I felt that it would be better for Russia to pay some indemnity than to go on with the war, for there was little chance, in my judgment, of the war turning out favorably for Russia, and the revolutionary movement already under way bade fair to overthrow the negotiations entirely. I advised the Russian Government to this effect, at the same time urging them to abandon their pretensions on certain other points, notably concerning the southern half of Saghelien, which the Japanese had taken. I also, however, and equally strongly, advised the Japanese that, in my judgment, it would be the gravest mistake on their part to insist on continuing the war for the sake of a money indemnity, for Russia was absolutely firm in refusing to give them indemnity.

Mr. Roosevelt further states:

> The Japanese Government had been wise throughout except in the matter of announcing that it would insist on a money indemnity. Neither in national nor in private affairs is it ordinarily advisable to make a bluff which can not be put through. Personally, I never believe in doing it under any circumstances. The Japanese people had been misled by this bluff of their Government, and the unwisdom of the Government's action in the matter was shown by the great resentment the treaty aroused in Japan, although it was so beneficial to Japan. There were various mob outbreaks, especially in Japanese cities; the police were roughly handled; and several Christian churches were burned, as reported to me by the American minister.

I recall very well that some distinguished Americans were rather roughly handled in the streets of Tokyo soon after the terms of the treaty of peace had been announced. In Japan the United States was blamed for the failure of that country to secure an indemnity. A distinguished writer in the Contemporary Review of February, 1907—Dr. E. J. Dillon—states:

> M. Witte, however, told the President that he was not prepared to discount the future in favor of Japan; that Russia would not pay her enemy for the damage that enemy had inflicted upon her; and that if the Japanese wanted money they must come and take it. * * * The Czar of Russia, both in the instructions given to his plenipotentiary and in the manifestation of his will, which were called forth by the sittings at Portsmouth, had laid it down as a principle from which he was determined not to swerve, that Japan should receive no war indemnity, avowed or masked.

Indeed if one will take the trouble to follow the proceedings at the Portsmouth conference, it will reveal the fact that M. Witte, Russia's plenipotentiary, constantly rejoined, whenever the question of indemnity was broached, "not a single copek." And yet, I fear, Japan allowed her people to believe that she had been thwarted in her efforts to secure an indemnity to repay her for the expenses of the war through the unfriendly efforts of the people of the United States. From that time on the cordial and friendly feeling that had theretofore existed between the two peoples has been strained, to say the least. Nor has the attitude of Japan, I regret to say, in the settlement of the questions arising out of the Russo-Japanese war tended to allay the suspicion of the American people respecting the honesty of purpose of the Japanese Government with relation to Korea and Southern Manchuria.

In the meantime, after Japan's successful war against China in 1894, some of the European nations proceeded to demand leases of areas of Chinese territory, which areas, with their contiguous hinterlands, were looked upon as "spheres of influence" by the respective countries that had compelled China to negotiate these leases.

Thus England had secured Wei Hai Wei; Russia, the Liao Peninsula, which includes Port Arthur and Dalny; Germany, Kiaochow—where the Germans subsequently built the port and city of Tsingtao—and certain economic concessions in Shantung Province. After the Russo-Japanese war, Japan took over under her treaty with Russia all of Russia's rights and privileges in the Liao Peninsula. Italy also had requested territorial acquisitions, but her request was refused by China. France, at an earlier period, had become possessed of French Indo-China, including Cochin China, Tonkin, Cambodia, Annam, and Laos. But at this time she further secured a foothold on Kwang-Chow Bay.

Of all the great powers, our country was the only one that made no demands on China for territory. On the contrary, the American concessions at Shanghai, Hankow, and Tientsin, which had been voluntarily offered to us by China, were refused by our Government. The dismemberment of the great Chinese Empire seemed to be imminent. The newspapers and periodicals of that period were full of articles proclaiming the practical end of the Celestial Empire.

In 1899 our Secretary of State, the lamented John Hay, issued a note to the powers announcing the so-called "open-door" policy. In 1900, when China had passed through the horrors of the Boxer uprising and stood before the world practically a criminal ready to receive the punishment the world might impose, John Hay, as Secretary of State of the United States, was further able to help China by adding to the open-door policy a statement that it was our aim "to preserve China's territorial and administrative entity, to seek a solution that will bring about permanent peace and safety to China, to protect all rights guaranteed to friendly powers by treaty and international law, and safeguard the principle of equal and impartial trade with all parts of the Chinese Empire."

The rest of the world acquiesced in this policy, and the Chinese Empire was saved from partition. The people of China even during the days when we were passing our restrictive immigration laws felt that we were really the friend of the Chinese Government. We had manifested our friendship in various helpful ways. The fact that we returned a good part of our share of the indemnity we had received on account of the Boxer trouble was an additional act of friendship which China fully appreciated.

Prior to 1894 China had claimed Korea as a vassal state. Japan denied China's claim. It was one of the causes that brought about the war between the two countries. At the outbreak of that war Japan had entered into a treaty with Korea; more specifically, on August 26, 1894. Under article 1 of that treaty, it was stated "the object of the alliance is to maintain the independence of Korea on a firm footing." In the treaty of peace between Japan and China, negotiated at Shimonoski on April 17, 1895, it was declared by China that she recognizes definitely the full and complete independence and autonomy of Korea. On April 25, 1898, the Governments of Japan and Russia entered into an agreement to recognize definitely the sovereignty and entire independence of Korea, and pledged themselves mutually to abstain from all direct interference in the internal affairs of that country. And on September 11, 1899, Korea and China entered into a treaty, article 1 of which reads:

There shall be perpetual peace and friendship between the Empire of Korea and the Empire of China.

So, at the end of the nineteenth century, Japan, China, and Russia had all agreed among themselves and with Korea that the independence of Korea should be maintained. On January 30, 1902, the first Anglo-Japanese alliance was promulgated. The preamble of that treaty recites:

The Governments of Great Britain and Japan, actuated solely by a desire to maintain the status quo and general peace in the extreme East, being, moreover, especially interested in maintaining the territorial integrity of the Empire of China and the Empire of Korea and in securing equal opportunities in those countries for the commerce and industry of all nations, hereby agree * * *:

ARTICLE 1.

The high contracting parties having mutually recognized the independence of China and Korea, declare themselves to be entirely uninfluenced by any aggressive tendencies in either country.

On March 3, 1902, the Governments of France and Russia, having received a copy of the Anglo-Japanese agreement of January 30, 1902, announced that "the two Governments consider that the observance of these principles is at the same time a guaranty of their special interests in the Far East." In the meantime Russia had begun to encroach upon the territory of Korea. After many weeks of negotiation and frequent delays Japan suddenly made war upon Russia. On February 10, 1904, the Emperor of Japan issued a rescript reciting the causes that impelled him to declare war against Russia, which rescript contained the following language:

The integrity of Korea is a matter of gravest concern to this Empire. * * * The separate existence of Korea is essential to the safety of our realm. * * * The absorption of Manchuria by Russia would render it impossible to maintain the integrity of China and would, coming in addition, compel the abandonment of all hope for peace in the extreme East.

About two weeks thereafter Japan and Korea signed a protocol, which reads as follows:

ARTICLE 1. For the purpose of maintaining a permanent and solid friendship between Japan and Korea and firmly establishing peace in the Far East, the Imperial Government of Korea shall place full confidence in the Imperial Government of Japan and adopt the advice of the latter in regard to improvements in administration.

ART. 2. The Imperial Government of Japan shall, in a spirit of firm friendship, insure the safety and peace of the Imperial House of Korea.

ART. 3. The Imperial Government of Japan definitely guarantees the independence and territorial integrity of the Korean Empire.

Up to this time Japan had been announcing to the world that it was her firm intention to maintain the independence and territorial integrity of China and Korea. From this time forward Japan's attitude with respect to Korea, and especially after her forces began to win marvelous successes against the Russians, materially changed. Henceforth she began to maintain that she possessed "paramount political, military, and economic interests" in Korea. Great Britain and Russia, in treaties negotiated with Japan, respectively on August 12, 1905, and September 5, 1905, acknowledged Japan's "paramount interests" in Korea. Gradually the Government of Japan began to absorb the sovereign rights of the Emperor of Korea, and Marquis Ito, in 1906, was made Japanese resident general in Korea. By degrees the independence of the Hermit Empire was absorbed by her eastern neighbor, and finally on August 22, 1910, His Majesty, the Emperor of Korea, made complete and permanent cession to His Majesty, the Emperor of Japan, of all rights of sovereignty over the whole of Korea. His Majesty, the Emperor of Japan, accepted the cession and consented to the complete annexation of Korea to the Empire of Japan.

Just one week later, on August 29, 1910, Japan formally declared Korea annexed to the dominions of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Japan, and the curtain rung down on Korea as an independent and sovereign State. Under the terms of the treaty of peace between Japan and Russia, the former came into control of many of Russia's rights in southern Manchuria. Article 3 of the treaty of Portsmouth reads as follows:

Japan and Russia mutually engage * * * to restore entirely and completely to the exclusive administration of China all portions of Manchuria now in the occupation of their troops. * * *

The world was led to believe that Japan intended to withdraw from southern Manchuria, although no specific time was ever mentioned in any of the statements made as to the probable time of such withdrawal. The fact of the matter is that Japan has not only failed to withdraw but has strengthened her position in Manchuria in at least half a dozen directions

With all these facts in mind, it is small wonder that the people of the United States who have always retained a feeling of sincere friendliness to the people of China, and have also maintained a high regard for the people of Japan, regret that the President of the United States and the premiers of Great Britain and France should have made their decision in favor of Japan in the Shantung matter.

The ratification of our adherence to this decision is now before another body in the Capitol. It is now known that after we broke off diplomatic relations with Germany on February 3, 1917, and induced China to follow our course on February 9, 1917, that the British, French, Russian, and Italian Governments, without informing either the American or Chinese Government, negotiated and entered into secret agreements with Japan by which the rights of Germany in Shantung were to be turned over to the Nipponese in the event the Allies won the war. Neither the American nor Chinese Government had knowledge of these secret treaties when it entered the war.

On November 2, 1917, about nine months after we had broken off diplomatic relations with Germany and had induced China to do likewise, the Lansing-Ishii agreement was negotiated at Washington. There is no record extant, at least none has been made public, which discloses the fact that either President Wilson or Mr. Lansing had been informed by the Japanese ambassador, Viscount Ishii, of the existence of the secret agreement between Japan and the Governments of Great Britain, France, Russia, and Italy, under the terms of which these Governments had agreed to support Japan's claims in Shantung. If Viscount Ishii failed to inform our Government of the existence of these agreements, signed in the latter part of February and the early part of March, 1917, and after our country and China had severed diplomatic relations with the Imperial Government of Germany, was it not a questionable diplomatic practice on the part of Japan to have kept us in ignorance of the agreements with Great Britain, France, Russia, and Italy? Ought we to permit these secret agreements to overrule our obligations to China?

The United States during its comparatively brief history has formulated two distinct fundamental foreign policies. One is known as the Monroe doctrine; the other, the Hay doctrine. In principle the two doctrines are practically identical. One refers to the countries of Central and South America, the other to China. The Monroe doctrine was intended to protect the Latin American States against European aggression. It was never intended to obstruct or to regulate the commerce or social relations between the Republics on the Western Hemisphere and the countries of Europe and Asia. As a matter of fact, the European countries in many instances have developed a much more extensive trade with Latin America than has our own country.

Under the Monroe doctrine our citizens are not given any superior or preferential position in regard to the commerce or the financial and social relations of the nations of the Western Hemisphere.

The Hay doctrine was intended to prevent injustice to China. It attempted to preserve the territorial integrity of the Chinese Empire and secure the maintenance of the principle of equal commercial opportunity for all nations that might desire to secure trade in China. The latter principle became known to the world as the policy of the "open door." There was never any attempt either in the Monroe doctrine or the Hay doctrine to secure special privileges for ourselves in the countries of Latin America or China. On the contrary, we as a nation have always intended that all maritime countries should enjoy commercial, financial, and industrial rights, opportunities, and privileges in the countries included in the Monroe doctrine and the Hay doctrine.

Japanese apologists and propagandists speak feelingly of Japan's "Monroe doctrine" for China. According to all the information we have been able to obtain concerning Japan's attitude in China, it is the very opposite of the Monroe doctrine as the United States has defined that policy.

Bitter outcry is frequently made in Japan because some American publicist or some American official calls attention to things that are happening in the land of the cherry blossom and the chrysanthemum. I think it not amiss at this time to read an extract from "Japan and World Peace," by K. K. Kawakami, published in 1919. Mr. Kawakami is a well-known author of books on Japanese subjects. He lives in the United States. This is what he says about the Monroe doctrine:

To be frank, the Monroe doctrine is an antiquated idea of a by-gone age. It is incompatible with such advanced ideas as these embodied in the covenant of the league of nations.

It is almost pathetic to see Mr. Wilson and other supporters of the league striving to explain that the principles of that new world organization do not conflict with the Monroe doctrine. Of course the President knows better. But he also knows that he must trim his sails in order to conform to the traditional belief of the American people with regard to President Monroe's historic doctrine.

If Japan is to be honest with herself, if she is to be consistent in accepting the principles of the league of nations, she should not propose to espouse any such antiquated, provincial document as the Monroe doctrine of to-day, but should purpose to abolish all such doctrines.

But Japan knows the futility of such a move. She knows that America will stand as a wall of adamant against any proposal to weaken, not to say abolish, the Monroe doctrine. The only alternative for Japan is to recognize the American principle, requesting at the same time that she be allowed to adopt a similar principle in the Far East.

Truly, a frank statement from a well-known Japanese. And if Japan's Monroe doctrine in China were similar in scope and plan to the Monroe doctrine in America, the entire world would rejoice with Japan in having taken such a stand.

The quotation is a good example of the propaganda which Japan uses to defeat the beneficent as well as the fair and impartial Hay doctrine by using the Monroe doctrine as a sort of screen. The artfulness of this propaganda is evident. The peoples of the Orient are led to believe that the American practice of the Monroe doctrine in South America is on a par with Japan's policy in China and Korea. Of course, there is no similarity whatever between the principles of John Hay's doctrine of the open door and territorial integrity in China and the arbitrary action of Japan in promoting her self-interest in both China and Korea. We Americans are not being fooled in this matter.

It is true that the world is weary of war. It is true that an overwhelming number of our citizens believe that we ought to exert every influence to bring about a condition that will make for universal peace. It is true that there is a deep-rooted sentiment among a great number of Americans that the league of nations will be instrumental in bringing about universal peace. But I believe that an overwhelming majority of our countrymen believe in the spirit of justice and fair play which has characterized the people of the United States ever since our Government was founded. It has been truly said that "nothing is ever settled until it is settled right." I do not believe that there is any considerable percentage of the people of America who believe that the Shantung question was settled right at Paris.

Japan, in my opinion, owes it to herself, to the United States, and to the world generally to make a frank avowal of what she intends to do in Shantung.

Japan's ultimatum to Germany declared that she was to restore the entire leased territory of Kiaochow to China. This was on August 23, 1914. Soon thereafter Japan sent the following communique to China:

The Japanese Government has been obliged to take this last course for the assurance of the peace of the Far East and the preservation of China's territorial integrity and the maintenance of peace and order in the same country.

A little later Count Okuma, then the premier of Japan, issued a message to the American people. I believe it was printed in the Independent of August 31, 1914. Among other things, he declared:

Every sense of loyalty and honor obliged Japan to cooperate with Great Britain to clear from these waters the enemies who in the past, the present, and the future menace her trade, her shipping, and her people's lives. This Far Eastern situation is not of our seeking. As premier of Japan, I have stated, and now again state to the people of America and of the world, that Japan has no ulterior motive, no desire to secure more territory, no thought of depriving China or other people of anything which they now possess.

I repeat, a frank statement at this time on the part of Japan as to the time when she intends to return Shantung to China will help materially to clarify a serious situation. We all hope that such a statement on the part of Japan will not be long delayed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MELVIN O. McLAUGHLIN,

OF NEBRASKA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, August 14, 1919.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the recent race riot in this city has prompted statements by Members of this body that, in my judgment, are wholly unwarranted in the light of clearly evidenced facts in the case. With your indulgence I wish briefly to call attention to two such statements that both the Members of this House and the people of the country in general are entitled to have verified by the gentlemen making them if any possible verification can be made.

The first statement to which I refer was made by the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] on July 23 and was widely circulated over the country by means of the Associated Press. The gentleman stated, in substance, that the recent race riot in Washington was due, in large measure, to prohibition legislation.

When I first read the press items crediting the gentleman from California with this sweeping statement I could not believe it to be true, but an examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD confirms the report. It is to be regretted that the amiable and esteemed gentleman, who has made a record for thoughtful, conservative statesmanship in this body, should have so far forgotten himself as to make such an erroneous and unqualified statement on such an important subject at such a critical time. Since when, may I ask, has it been rationally concluded that sobriety provokes riot? Very numerous instances may be cited all through the history of this and other countries where race riots far more extensive and disastrous in their scope have been, if not directly caused by liquor consumption, greatly augmented and inflamed by the product of the brewery. It is a well-known fact, based on experience, that it has been found necessary, before the inauguration of prohibition, to close the saloons and deprive people of liquor, so far as it was possible, whenever even the symptoms of a riot began to show in any community.

This is the first time in my life that I have either read or heard of anyone charging that temperance and soberness is the underlying cause of riot and criminal disorder. It is a new thing under the sun, and certainly demands an explanation by its author.

Mr. Speaker, the other statement to which I refer was made on the floor of this House by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], who, in a great burst of enthusiasm almost bordering on eloquence, declared without reservation that the race riots in the city of Washington and everywhere else where disorders have occurred were directly traceable to German propaganda. To quote the gentleman exactly, he said, as recorded on page 3367 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

They are back of every disturbance in the country now. They had a hand in the recent race trouble in the city of Washington, and they are operating in Chicago at this very hour. They are back of every devilish move in America that seeks to disturb the country that conquered Germany.

Furthermore, if I may digress a moment from the subject under consideration, the gentleman from Alabama, in another outburst of enthusiasm yesterday on the subject of the league of nations, made the statement, either direct or by implication, that the great and worthy Americans who are now seeking to safeguard the sovereignty of the United States by urging reservations to certain clauses of the proposed league of nations were backed and prompted in their efforts by German propaganda. It is to be regretted that any Member on this floor would so far forget himself as to make such charges against the keen-minded, liberal-hearted, farseeing statesmen who seek, as servants of the American people, to exercise their treaty-ratifying function in the regular constitutional manner in an earnest endeavor to perpetuate the independence for which Washington and his copatriots left their footprints in blood at Valley Forge, and the liberties for which Lincoln and the veterans of the Civil War offered their lives.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in view of the causes that are quite generally understood to have provoked this recent riot in the Capital City, I submit that any gentleman who makes the sweeping statement that German propaganda had anything to do with the matter should at least be willing to insert in the RECORD his reasons for such a statement. I will go just as far as any man in this country toward deporting undesirable aliens and prosecuting traitors and criminals. I also agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] and the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] that our immigration and naturalization laws must be so changed as to provide that every person entering this country shall be physically, mentally, and morally fit, and that they shall be required within a reasonable length of time to become informed and naturalized citizens or else be deported; but I resent the thoughtless and frequent statements and allegations that are regularly coming forth with the velocity and recklessness of a phonograph charging all the people of foreign birth that are now respectable and loyal citizens of this country with seditious and traitorous conduct. It is a fact that hundreds of thousands of the best and most loyal citizens in this Republic, who have given their sons and money without stint for the winning of this war, have been daily abused and insulted by the thoughtless, indiscriminate, wholesale charges that have been made both in Congress and out of Congress. I have never believed in making the innocent suffer for the guilty, and in the interest of the future harmony and growth of this great Republic I hope that gentlemen hereafter will either be more careful in their statements or have the fairness to put into the RECORD their reasons for making such statements.

If the gentleman from California is right in his deductions, then the gentleman from Alabama is absolutely wrong, and if the gentleman from Alabama is right, then the gentleman from California is utterly wrong. The fact of the matter is that neither of the reasons given by these gentlemen had anything to do with the race riot in Washington.

This riot was caused by a series of assaults by some negro man or men extending over a period of weeks. The police authorities apparently were unable to apprehend these offenders, and, as has often been the case under similar conditions, white men became greatly agitated and disturbed over the delay in bringing these criminal offenders to justice. On the other hand, negroes who had nothing whatever to do with the assaults that had been committed were subjected to search procedure and questioning which they resented. Then, unfortunately, one evening a company of soldiers and civilians who were pretty thoroughly wrought up over the fact that these criminals had not yet been brought to justice took occasion to beat up a few negroes just on general principles. The resulting flame that spread until the police and soldiers succeeded in bringing it into check was identical with similar riots that have occurred in various communities ever since there has been a race question in America.

Mr. Speaker, I hope I shall be clearly understood in what I have said. My only object in referring to the statements of my esteemed colleagues is that we should be careful and considerate in this body as to the matter we place in the RECORD and the statements we give to the public. The whole world is in a seething state of unrest; we seem to be standing on the crater of a smoking volcano that may break forth in violent eruption at any time. There are inconsiderate, hot-headed agitators that take up statements made on this floor, accepting them as the truth, and proclaim their violent exaggeration from the housetops. It is a serious matter, therefore, for anyone to make mistakes here at this time. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, in view of these facts, that the statements and declarations that are made by the Members of this House should only be made after careful and deliberate study of the questions under consideration, and that in every case Members should be in position, when called upon, to place clearly in the RECORD substantial proof of any sweeping and wholesale charges they may choose to make in connection with the unsettled conditions that now obtain. Any thoughtless or sensational utterance now only adds fuel to a rapidly burning fire. We must study the conditions with great care, and act only on the fullest possible information, in a calm and deliberate manner.

Protection of American Shipping.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY E. BARBOUR,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, August 1, 1919.

The House had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7500) to protect the coastwise trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct the attention of the House to a communication which I recently received from the Pacific American Steamship Association, which has its headquarters at San Francisco. This association is composed of 17 steamship companies operating on the Pacific, and its statements are enlightening upon the subject of coastwise shipping between the Hawaiian Islands and the mainland of the United States. This communication is also interesting when considered in connection with the general subject of an American merchant marine.

SUSPENSION OF THE UNITED STATES COASTWISE LAWS.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 1½, 1919.

Hon. H. E. BARBOUR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: You are doubtless aware of the formation of the Pacific-American Steamship Association, composed of steamship interests on the Pacific coast, with offices at the above address. This association is an organization similar to the American Steamship Association, and closely connected with it.

The purpose for which the Pacific-American Steamship Association was formed is to provide a medium for discussion and action on matters involving National, State, or municipal legislation, and policies affecting owners or operators on the Pacific coast of American vessels engaged in the carriage of cargo and passengers or oil, and generally for the purpose of promoting the welfare of the American merchant marine.

Our membership includes the following: Associated Oil Co., China Mail Steamship Co. (Ltd.), Columbia Pacific Shipping Co., W. R. Grace & Co., Gulf Mail Steamship Co., Hind, Rolph & Co., Luckenbach Steamship Co., Matson Navigation Co., Oceanic Steamship Co., Pacific Mail Steamship Co., Pacific Steamship Co., W. S. Scammell & Co. (Inc.), Standard Oil Co., Struthers & Dixon (Inc.), Swayne & Hoyt (Inc.), the Robert Dollar Co., Williams, Dimond & Co.

We respectfully call your attention to H. J. Res. 128, a bill introduced in the House of Representatives June 21, 1919, by Mr. KALANIANAOLE, which was referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, a copy of which is attached.

We are opposed to the bill referred to because we believe that whatever strength the American coastwise shipping laws afford the American merchant marine should be jealously guarded and that the operation of these laws should only be suspended in the case of an extreme emergency. This emergency now exists, and the operation of our coastwise laws is temporarily suspended, with the approval of this association. A large part of the Hawaiian passenger business is at present being taken care of by foreign vessels, but we are opposed to their continuing to do this after such a time as a sufficient number of American vessels can be returned to the Hawaiian trade to take care of the business.

The Matson Navigation Co. expects that their ships, now operated by the Government, will be returned to them by the end of this July. Such being the case, these vessels will be put back on their former run by the 1st of November. It is expected that during the first part of 1920 other American ships will also enter the Hawaiian trade.

We are informed that the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, in its building program, has plans for the construction of 25 to 30 large mail and passenger steamers, capable of making from 16 to 18 knots, to be completed within the next year and a half, and that a number of these vessels will be placed in the Pacific trade.

We believe that American commerce should be handled by American ships, and that they should be protected against foreign competition in order to build up a strong American merchant marine. If the bill introduced by Mr. KALANIANAOLE were adopted by Congress it would constitute the entering wedge for foreign competition. It is for just such an opportunity as this that the Japanese steamship companies, with their excellent equipment, are waiting. In the development of our merchant fleet on the Pacific Ocean there will be a continued struggle with the Japanese, which, you are well aware, now do more than 50 per cent of the trans-Pacific business. We shall have to fight for every inch we gain.

Investigation has shown that before the United States entered the war there was more than sufficient tonnage and passenger space to take care of the Hawaiian trade. With the return of the vessels of the Matson Navigation Co. to their former run, the present emergency will no longer exist, and therefore the present suspension of the coastwise navigation laws should be discontinued. We believe that for the present no action should be taken, and that developments should be awaited.

You are earnestly requested to do all in your power to prevent the passage of this bill, which is manifestly prejudicial to the development of American commerce upon the Pacific.

Trusting that you will concur in our opinion and will therefore oppose Mr. KALANIANAOLE'S bill as written, we beg to remain,

Very sincerely, yours,

PACIFIC AMERICAN STEAMSHIP ASSOCIATION,
By J. B. BANNING, Jr., Secretary-Treasurer.

The bill introduced by the Delegate from Hawaii, and which inspired this letter, differed from the bill under consideration in that it contained a declaration that the present congestion in the Hawaiian-American passenger traffic would continue for one year, and provided that the suspension of coastwise shipping laws as applied to this traffic should continue until a sufficient number of American steamers should be available to accommodate the same and until the President should, in his judgment, decree a further suspension unnecessary.

The Kalanianaole bill also contained the provision that after the President should declare a further suspension of the coastwise shipping laws unnecessary vessels of foreign registry would be permitted to engage in passenger traffic between Hawaii and the mainland of the United States upon payment of a sum equal to 30 per cent of the cost of transportation for such voyage.

While I am not informed as to whether the present bill answers the objections of the Pacific coast steamship companies to the bill introduced by the Delegate from Hawaii, I believe that it is to be preferred to the latter. In the present bill, whenever the President is satisfied that a sufficient number of American ships are available to accommodate the Hawaiian passenger traffic, he shall so declare. It is but reasonable to expect that the President will make such declaration at the proper time; but in the event that he should not do so, Congress has power to act and to remedy the situation by the repeal of the legislation contained in section 2 of the present bill.

To-day the chief competitors of the American steamship companies on the Pacific coast are the Japanese, and Japanese competition is heartbreaking. Our American steamships are required to maintain American standards—the standards prescribed by our navigation laws as to the number of crew, wages to be paid, and living conditions. Yet we are forced to compete with the magnificent but cheaply operated liners of the Japanese steamship companies. As an illustration of this competition, a statement was recently made by one of the leading steamship men on the Pacific coast, giving comparative cost of operating three 10,000-ton steamers which left the port of San Francisco. One of these vessels sailed under the American flag, another under the British, and the third under the Japanese. I regret that I have not the exact figures of the monthly cost of operating these ships, but the substance of the statement was that the monthly cost of operating the British vessel was about two-thirds that of the cost of operating the American ship, and the monthly cost of operating the Japanese ship was about one-third that of the American. Therefore it is readily seen that under any extended suspension of the coastwise shipping laws the Japanese could pay the $40 required for a permit for each passenger, as provided in this bill, and still compete successfully with American ships.

If our ships are forced into open competition with the Japanese, we must lower our standards to their level, or we must be protected in the maintenance of those standards. Without such protection we can not compete with the Japanese.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN N. GARNER,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, August 20, 1919.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include two letters from Secretary Glass on the financial condition of the Treasury.

They are as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, July 25, 1919.

DEAR SIR: I am writing the banking institutions of the country, in pursuance of the plan followed by my predecessor during the past year and a half, to inform them of the financial plans for the remainder of the calendar year and the probable requirements of the Treasury during that period, and, indeed, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, in so far as they may now be foretold. I have only recently had occasion to lay before the appropriate committees of Congress a report of the financing of the war to the end of the fiscal year June 30, 1919. A copy of this report may be had upon application to any Federal reserve bank or to the Treasury Department.

It is not possible at this time, when appropriations for the coming year are under consideration by the Congress, when contract claims by and against the United States are still in process of settlement, when demobilization is still incomplete, when the extent of the liability on the wheat guaranty is unascertained, and when the business upon which the income and profits tax receipts in the first half of the calendar year 1920 are to be based is still only half transacted, to make a formal estimate of the receipts and expenditures of the United States during the fiscal year 1920 (ending June 30, 1920). I do not hesitate to say, however, that I anticipate that the Government will be in receipt of revenues under existing law and from the Victory-Liberty loan during the fiscal year 1920 to the amount of at least $6,500,000,000, divided somewhat as follows:

Internal revenue	$4,940,000,000
Customs	260,000,000
Sale of public lands	3,000,000
Miscellaneous	300,000,000
Total ordinary receipts	5,503,000,000
Victory-Liberty loan installments	1,032,000,00
Total	6,535,000,000

In the absence of a budget system or of any Treasury control of governmental expenditure it is even more difficult to foretell the expenditures than the receipts of the Government. Current expenditures, which reached the maximum of $2,060,000,000 in December, 1918, fell in June to $809,000,000, and, after deducting the amount of the certificates of indebtedness of the Director General of Railroads paid during the present month of July, should show a still further decrease in this month. Allowing for all the elements of uncertainty above referred to, I have no present reason to believe that the expenditures of the Government during the fiscal year 1920 will exceed the amount of its receipts as above indicated, excluding transactions in the principal of the public debt other than the Victory loan. If these expectations prove to be correct, the gross public debt of the United States, which on June 30, 1919, amounted to $25,484,506,160.05, should be increased during the fiscal year 1920 by not more than the amount of the deferred installments of the Victory-Liberty loan payable in the fiscal year 1920, $1,032,000,000, making a total public debt on June 30, 1920, when presumably the whole cost of the war will have been financed, of, say, $26,516,506,160.05.

The realization of these sanguine expectations is contingent upon the practice of most rigid economy by the Government and the continuance of ample revenues from taxation.

The heaviest period of expenditure during the current fiscal year will probably fall in the summer months of July, August, and September, because of the heavy disbursements of the Railroad Administration heretofore held back for lack of an appropriation, the heavy payments in settlement of Army contracts, and on account of demobilization, and the maturities of certificates issued in anticipation of the Victory loan. The amount of certificates outstanding in anticipation of the Victory-Liberty loan at any one time (excluding certificates redeemed, tax certificates, etc.), which on May 5 had reached the peak at $5,797,296,500, had up to July 22 been reduced by $4,402,519,000, leaving outstanding $1,394,777,500. During the next few months, therefore, the actual cash requirements of the Treasury can not be expected to show a heavy further decrease, and, on the other hand, the proceeds of the deferred installments of the income and profits taxes for the year 1919, and the deferred installments on Victory loan subscriptions, will not have been fully received until nearly the end of the calendar year 1919.

Three months have passed since the last offering of Treasury certificates other than those issued in anticipation of taxes. This interval has been made possible by the rapid decrease in the current expenditures of the Government, the very large early payments on the Victory loan, and the ready sale of tax certificates. Beginning early in June, these have been issued up to July 22 to the aggregate amount of $1,875,437,500, but in amounts less than the income and profits tax receipts due at their respective maturities. Having borrowed as much as it is, in the Treasury's judgment, proper to borrow in anticipation of the income and profits tax installments payable September 15 and December 15, and having already sold up to July 22 Treasury certificates maturing March 15, 1920, to the amount of about $275,000,000, so that the limit of that issue also would soon be reached, the time has come when the issue of loan certificates should be resumed.

The Treasury has, accordingly, determined to issue loan certificates, of five months' maturity, and, with a view to aiding the banking institutions of the country in the distribution of these certificates, will issue the certificates on the 1st and 15th of each month, beginning August 1, 1919, thus making the issue semimonthly instead of biweekly as heretofore, and setting fixed dates in each month on which the issues will open. Treasury certificates which, at the beginning of our participation in the war, had little or no market outside of the banking institutions of the country, have come to be appreciated by a great and steadily increasing class of investors. Banking institutions, on the other hand, which at the outset were loath to sell certificates to their customers, fearing loss of deposits, have come increasingly to realize the wisdom and advantage of buying and distributing the certificates. Those incorporated banks and trust companies (numbering some 9,500) which have availed themselves of the privilege, open to all, of becoming depositaries of the proceeds of the certificates purchased, have found ample compensation in the resulting deposits.

The minimum amount of each semimonthly issue of certificates should not in any case exceed, say, $500,000,000, and, after September and during the balance of the calendar year, should not on the average exceed half of that amount, for then all the Victory loan certificates will have been paid or provided for, and such progress should have been made in Army settlements and in demobilization as greatly to reduce the requirements of the current program. That would mean the issue, during the remaining five months of the calendar year, of certificates to the amount of, say, $3,500,000,000. During the same period there will mature and be paid loan and tax certificates to the aggregate amount of $2,997,540,500. Net increase, $502,459,500.

The figures which the Treasury is now able to present seem fully to justify the announcement made in April that the Victory loan would be the last Liberty loan, and the statement, made in the report to the committees of Congress above referred to, that the Treasury expects to be able to meet its further temporary requirements by the sale of Treasury certificates of indebtedness, bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent or less, and also to fund as many of these as it may be desirable to fund by the issue of short-term notes, in moderate amounts at convenient intervals when market conditions are favorable and upon terms advantageous to the Government.

The Federal reserve banks will advise all national and State banks and trust companies in their respective districts of the minimum amounts of certificates they are expected to take from time to time in pursuance of this program, which should be not less than 1.6 per cent of the gross resources of each bank and trust company for each semimonthly issue during August and September and may fall as low as, say, 0.8 per cent toward the end of the calendar year.

The program may be varied at opportune times by the substitution of an issue of tax certificates or by an alternative offering of such certificates to which no quota will be applicable.

It is with confidence that I lay before the banking institutions of America, who did so much to make our successful record of war finance possible, the present program of the Government's current requirements for the balance of the calendar year, and ask each of them not only to subscribe its quota for each semimonthly issue of Treasury certificates, but to use its best efforts to distribute these certificates as widely as may be among investors.

Cordially, yours,

CARTER GLASS.

To the president of the bank or trust company addressed.

LETTER FROM THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 9, 1919.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I take pleasure in handing you herewith for your information and that of the Committee on Ways and Means the following statements:

A. Preliminary financial statement of the United States Government for the period from April 6, 1917, to June 30, 1919.

B. Preliminary statement of the public debt on June 30, 1919.

C. Statement showing classified receipts, exclusive of the principal of the public debt, by months, from April 6, 1917, to June 30, 1919, as published in daily Treasury statements.

D. Statement showing classified disbursements, exclusive of the principal of the public debt, by months, from April 6, 1917, to June 30, 1919, as published in daily Treasury statements.

Expenditures in the month of June just ended amounted, in round figures, to $809,000,000, or less than for any month since September, 1917.

Expenditures for the fiscal year just ended amounted to $18,514,000,000.

Expenditures for the war period amounted to $32,427,000,000, and of these more than $9,384,000,000, or about 29 per cent, were met out of tax receipts and other revenues than borrowed money, although payment of nearly half of the income and profits taxes for the fiscal year 1919 has not yet been made, such payment being deferred until the fiscal year 1920. In this calculation no deduction is made of expenditures for loans to the Allies, which on June 30 amounted to $9,102,000,000, or for other investments, such as ships, stock of the War Finance Corporation, bonds of the Federal Land Banks, etc.

If we assume that the expenditures of the Government on a peace basis would have been at the rate of $1,000,000,000 a year, or for the period under discussion of nearly 27 months would have equaled $2,250,000,000, then we may estimate the gross cost of the war to June 30, 1919, at $30,177,000,000.

The gross public debt (without any deduction for loans to the Allies or other investments) amounted on June 30, 1919, to $25,484,000,000. Of this sum only $3,634,000,000 was in the form of Treasury certificates, or floating debt. Of such certificates more than $608,000,000 matured or were redeemed on July 1, 1919, and were paid out of the net balance in the general fund on June 30, 1919, which amounted to $1,251,000,000. Deducting the certificates last referred to, the floating debt on June 30, 1919, was little more than $3,000,000,000, which is roughly the estimated amount of the deferred installments of the income and profits taxes for the fiscal year 1919 and of the deferred installments of the victory-loan subscriptions.

In the announcement given to the press on April 14, 1919, of the terms of the Victory Liberty loan, I made the following statement with reference to financing the future requirements of the Government:

"This will be the last Liberty loan. Although as the remaining war bills are presented further borrowing must be done, I anticipate that the requirements of the Government, in excess of the amount of taxes and other income can, in view of the decreasing scale of expenditure, be readily financed by the issue of Treasury certificates from time to time as heretofore, which may be ultimately refunded by the issue of notes or bonds without the aid of another great popular campaign such as has characterized the Liberty loans."

I confirm the statement above quoted. The decision then taken has been fully sustained by the experience of the past three months. The successful flotation of the Victory loan and the adjustment of the amount and terms of the issue have resulted, as I hoped they would, in a strong market at about par for these notes, without the necessity of Government support, and in an improving market for the bonds of the second, third, and fourth Liberty loans, evidenced not only by the firm market quotations, but by strong undercurrents of investment buying, which give reason for the hope that, with the continuance of favorable general conditions, there will be consistent appreciation in the market prices of these bonds.

I do not now think it will be wise to make any further issues of long-term bonds before the maturity or redemption of the Victory notes, when there will have been such an interval in Government offerings of all kinds as must inevitably result in marked improvement of the market prices of the existing issues, with corresponding decreases in the interest bases at which they are selling, and consequent assurance that the Government will be able to finance itself for a longer period upon better terms.

It is not possible at this time, when appropriations for the coming year are under consideration by the Congress, when contract claims by and against the United States are still in process of settlement, when demobilization is still incomplete, when the extent of the liability on the wheat guaranty is unascertained, and when the business upon which the income and profits tax receipts in the first half of the calendar year 1920 are to be based is still only half transacted, to make a formal estimate of the receipts and expenditures of the United States during the fiscal year 1920. But so large a part of the war expenditures has been paid or provided for out of taxes and the issue of bonds or notes already sold and so small a part is unfunded that I confidently expect that the Government will be able not only to meet its further temporary requirements for the decreasing scale of expenditure by the sale of Treasury certificates of indebtedness bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent or less, but also to fund as many of these as it may be desirable to fund, by the issue of short-term notes, in moderate amounts, at convenient intervals, when market conditions are favorable, and upon terms advantageous to the Government. It will not be desirable to fund all the certificates of indebtedness, for the issue of certificates of indebtedness in anticipation of income and profits tax installments not only furnishes a means of financing the requirements of the Government temporarily upon easy terms, but constitutes an almost necessary financial expedient, to enable the taxpayer to save and to prepare gradually for the great tax payments, and to relieve the banking machinery of the country of the great strain which would be imposed upon it if these tax installments had to be paid on a single day without such preparation.

I need scarcely say to you that the realization of these sanguine expectations is contingent upon the practice of the most rigid economy by the Government and the continuance of ample revenues from taxation. Such a course, accompanied by the practice of sober economy and wise investment by our people and strict avoidance of waste and speculation, will make it possible for the American people to respond to the demands to be made upon them privately for capital and credit by the nations and peoples of Europe—demands which are reinforced by the strongest and most vital ties of sympathy for the Allies, who fought and won the war with us, as well as by the most obvious dictates of self-interest.

I am writing a similar letter to the Hon. BOIES PENROSE, chairman of the Committee on Finance.

It has seemed to me only proper at the end of the last fiscal year of the war period to lay these facts and opinions before the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Finance Committee, which bear so large a measure of responsibility for the war-loan legislation; and to make them public also, since they vitally concern the millions of Americans whose purchases of Government securities and tax payments made this record of war finance possible.

Very truly, yours,

CARTER GLASS,
Secretary.

Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives.

Let the President employ the means directly within his power for the relief of the people from the high cost of living before asking Congress for new laws, while the Department of Justice and other administrative agencies lift no finger to enforce present antiprofiteering laws, but, on the other hand, are directly responsible for soaring prices.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL W. RIDDICK,

OF MONTANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, August 9, 1919.

Mr. RIDDICK. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a joint resolution which reads as follows:

Whereas the primary causes of the high cost of living, due to and correctible by administrative action, are—

(1) Government extravagance and waste, creating fictitious prices and causing heavy taxation to be loaded on the cost of the necessities of life;

(2) The purchase and hoarding by the War Department of vast quantities of food, clothing, and other materials acquired at profiteer prices and causing general prices to rise in sympathy;

(3) The exportation in vast quantities of necessities for the relief of foreign populations, thus decreasing the supply of staples in the United States;

(4) The continued inflation of the currency under the management of the Federal Reserve Board, causing a depreciation of the value of the dollar;

(5) The encumbering of the pay roll with hordes of unnecessary and unproductive Government employees;

(6) The failure and refusal of the administration to enforce existing Federal statutes prohibiting combinations in unfair restraint of trade: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is hereby requested to employ the means directly within his power for the relief of the people of the United States from exploitation by profiteers and from high living costs imposed by administrative methods before asking Congress for additional legislation which will be powerless to remedy the situation, in the face of the failure and neglect of the executive department to utilize the means of relief within its immediate power.

Mr. Speaker, I am neither an experienced nor a distinguished Member of Congress, but only a plain farmer from the far western State of Montana. But in view of the fact that there has come no other protest against the effort of President Wilson to pass from his own shoulders to that of Congress responsibility for the high cost of living and its correction, I feel it to be my duty to let my voice be heard.

I desire to say that the President's recent utterances on this subject constitute a clear case of trying to "pass the buck." President Wilson seeks to use against the Republican Party certain abuses for which I charge he and his administration are directly, personally, and officially responsible, in so far as governmental action or inaction is responsible.

Nearly seven years ago President Wilson and his party came into complete control of the executive and legislative branches of Government on the claim that the country was in the hands of the plutocrats and profiteers. By laws curbing monopoly and introducing the "new freedom" and by bringing back the Government to "that simplicity and economy befitting a democratic government," they said they were going to lift the burden of high living costs and high governmental costs from the backs of the American people.

Now, after six years of complete control of Government by the party that was out to smash plutocracy and the high cost of living, President Wilson comes to a Republican Congress less than three months old with the confession that legislation for the curbing of the profiteer is yet to be enacted.

It is in the knowledge of every American citizen that the profiteering so suddenly discovered by the President is no new thing, but that notoriously and flagrantly it has been going on for nearly five years without the slightest effort being made either by President Wilson or by his Democratic Congress to prevent it.

It is an astounding fact that, although President Wilson came to power pledged to paralyze the plutocrats and the profiteers, the income-tax reports show that many more millionaires have been created during the six years of the Wilson administration than during all the previous history of the Republic.

During that previous history practically all the real wealth of this country was created by the development of our farms, mines, factories, and transportation systems. But since the inauguration of President Wilson there has been no growth of consequence in the productive capacity of the American people. The recent increase of wealth, or "plutocracy," as Mr. Wilson used to call it, has been due in large measure to speculative profiteering rather than productive activities, and much of it at Government expense during the past five years. In fact much of it has been possible only through the extravagance, waste, and loose administration of law by the present national administration. These are the plain facts, so why try to ignore or deny them?

I charge that for every condition affecting high and mounting living costs capable of governmental correction President Wilson and his administration are directly responsible.

I further charge that every measure of correction possible of enactment by Congress is at the President's disposal right now, and that the effort of the President to throw the public off the scent by declining to use these means at his hand and attempting to throw the responsibility for correction upon Congress represents a most reprehensible, partisan, campaign attempt to camouflage neglect of duty with the appearance of desire to serve the public.

The biggest contribution to high living costs has been the waste and extravagance of the administration still continued. Money has been poured out as if the chief object of the administration were to spend all the money of all the people of this country over and over again. The country is filled with monuments to a saturnalia of spending, the like of which never before was dreamed of in all the history of frenzied finance. The Government pay roll has been swollen to gigantic proportions. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been wasted in cost-plus and other similar contracts, which have placed a premium on waste. War supplies have been purchased at the sellers' prices and at the waste not merely of millions but billions.

Billions of dollars have been loaned to foreign nations with all the liberality characteristic of the politician spending other people's money. All this has, of course, forced up prices to dizzy heights by fixing fictitious bases of values.

Vast stores not only of food but of clothing and other supplies, bought as if it were expected the war would last forever, and as if the country would be called upon to feed and clothe the whole solar system, have been withheld from the market. Only now the War Department, at the demand of Congress, is reluctantly releasing some of the canned goods that have been piled mountain high in the storehouses. Supplies of shoes and clothing of incomprehensible magnitude are still held out of the market, while prices continue to mount higher and higher.

We have been draining the American market of staples to feed the next friends of the administration all over the globe and overlooking suffering here at home. That process continues with a constantly mounting volume of exports which costs the American people two dollars in added prices for every dollar realized from our sales abroad. Meanwhile we are permitting our own markets to be invaded by foreign manufactured articles to an extent which will soon cause a slowing down of American industry.

The vast sums borrowed from the people by the Government, with the consequent huge issues of securities, coupled with the operations of the Federal Reserve Board, have inflated our currency until we have, not merely the 50-cent dollar Mr. Bryan cried for, but a dollar that has come to look like 30 cents.

We have politicalized the railroads and raised passenger and freight rates to a point that would have caused a popular uprising had the roads been in private hands. Of course all this increase in railroad rates has been loaded on the high cost of living. It is a part of the endless chain of price hoisting by the present administration. And yet we are now told that one way to correct the high cost of living is to boost these rates still higher.

Not only have the people had to pay increased transportation rates, but we have a billion dollar deficit to foot on account of losses in operation of the railroads. That anybody wants more political management of railways seems incredible, yet during the past few days we have had it suggested that more of this sort of business will help reduce the cost of living.

At the time President Wilson was inaugurated we had a law on the statute books, put there by Republicans, called the Sherman antitrust law. The law enforced prevents and punishes combinations in unfair restraint of trade. Early in the first Wilson administration a new group of laws was passed, urged by President Wilson, on the ground that they would end the exploitation of the people by the "interests," which he said in his book, The New Freedom, had been going on during all the years of Republican supremacy, but would instantly stop with the turning on of the "new freedom." Nobody knows whether these new laws are worth more than the paper they are printed on, but we do know that the Sherman antitrust law is effective with an administration that desires to use it.

In the face of this charge of wholesale and widespread profiteering by "big business," why is it that President Wilson's Department of Justice stands paralyzed, without moving a finger to stop the carnival of exploitation of the people that we are told is going on?

Why has the Democratic floor leader backed other Democratic Congressmen in an effort to get Congress to prod the Trade Commission for hoarding and profiteering in shoes?

Every one of the administrative branches of the Government, from the Department of Justice down, are under the direct authority of the President. They will function vigorously and promptly when the President desires such action.

To those in Congress and to the man on the street it is well known that for five years living prices have been steadily increasing and illegal combining and profiteering and governmental wastefulness and hoarding have gone on riotously uninterrupted by a single word or motion from the White House.

The people are at last expressing themselves everywhere in terms that can not be mistaken. Even organization Democrats are outspoken in charging that the President and his administrative officers have been neglecting the people at home while secretly conniving with Europeans about matters that are of questionable advantage, if not an actual menace, to the United States. Only to-day my attention was called to the fact that Francis J. Finneran, president of the Democratic Club of Massachusetts, has sent to Homer Cummings, chairman of the Democratic national committee, a letter, signed by Mr. Finneran and by two Massachusetts senators and 15 Massachusetts representatives, demanding that the Democratic national committee repudiate the action of President Wilson, who, according to the words of the letter, "wrecked the party after we had lifted him from obscurity."

The letter contains 14 indictments, and reads in part as follows:

We, the undersigned Democrats of Massachusetts, request you to call a meeting of the northern and western members of the national committee and repudiate the actions of Woodrow Wilson, who wrecked the party after we had lifted him from obscurity, making him governor and then President. He has held the party up to ridicule by the following acts:

1. By appointing incompetent men to positions of responsibility, the most glaring examples of which are Postmaster General Burleson, Secretary of War Baker, and Fuel Administrator Garfield.

4. By his idle promises at Washington's Tomb when he declared he would demand independence of small nations, and by refusing to take up the question at the peace table of the liberty of Egypt, India, Ireland, and South Africa, and recognizing England's right to govern Egypt.

7. By his policy in Mexico—his recognition of Carranza, an anarchist and anti-American, and the toleration of the murder of over 300 Americans in Mexico without a declaration of war.

14. By his policy of shipping vast amounts of foodstuffs to Europe and spending $100,000,000 for food at the expense of America, thus causing the present high cost of living which confronts the American people.

We hope immediate action will be taken, so that we can build up our party anew and let the people forget that he was ever a member of our party, and make it possible for us to elect a northern or western Democratic President in 1920.

The people will no longer be fooled. They will be heard from in November, 1920, as they were heard from last November, and will send into permanent seclusion the political party that got into power by promising to paralyze plutocracy and to closely regard the rights of the people, but which at the end of its lease of power is found to have neglected all the opportunities at hand to fulfill its promises, and is found only, with cunning leadership, attempting to throw over onto a Republican Congress responsibility for doing in six weeks what it confesses it was either unwilling or incompetent to do in six years.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OSCAR E. KELLER,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, August 18, 1919.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this is my first opportunity to address you, and I want to thank you for your kindness to me in the few days I have been here; also, I am glad to see that a real democratic spirit prevails in this House. I realize a new man has lots to learn as a Congressman, but I am willing to learn, and I shall appreciate any advice from any Member.

I realize the great responsibility placed upon a Member now, in this reconstruction period. That is why I take a little of your time to-day to give my views. To win the war was a wonderful achievement. It brought out what this country—the Americans—could do. We have found ourselves. But we have a bigger problem before us now—the reconstruction period after this war. We have got to forget politics absolutely. We must have nothing in our minds except what is best for our country at this time. We are now dealing with ourselves, not with foreign countries in a bloody war, and we surely ought to be able to convince ourselves and our people what is the right thing to do, and I know we will if justice and square deal will rule, as I know it will. There are many big problems to solve, and we must do the right thing, no matter how much it hurts or who it may hit. We must do the thing which accomplishes the greatest amount of good for the greatest number.

We know from reports that our manufacturers can manufacture enough goods for our own consumption in six months. That means we must find foreign markets for the balance of our production. And that will be one of our serious situations that need thought and sane action, of how to get our goods on the market. We must establish credit and a banking system whereby our Government will protect all manufacturers, small and large, and also extend credit so the foreign people can buy our manufactured goods.

There is no question in my mind in three or four years, after Germany, Austria, France, and England have rebuilt their destroyed countries and reestablished their commercial activities after five years of destructive warfare, and after we have helped them to return to normal in their demands, that with their efficient methods, knowledge, experience, and inventions during the war they are going to fight for the world business, and we are going to have another war, but not a war of bloodshed, but a war for commercial supremacy, and those countries are going to do everything they possibly can to hold the trade they had before the war and go after more. There is no question they will transport by rail and water at a loss any goods from their country to foreign ports; there is no question they will transport them even for nothing in order to hold their foreign business, to regain their loss, especially Germany. Now, we must be able to meet that situation, not trying to grab any more than our share but to put ourselves in a position where we get at least our fair share, at least enough to take care of our production and keep our factories going. And now is the time to prepare to meet the situation. How are we going to do it? We must get right down to rock bottom and find out where our weaknesses are and have our economists point out to us where the inefficiency lies, right from the producer to the time of sale to our people or to foreign countries. There are certain things we have to do.

The first thing for us to do is to take care of the high cost of living, to bring it down to normal. Common labor has received a fair salary during this past year, but the cost of living has exceeded his income. In years past he was able to save a little during the summer, which, together with a little surplus foods he put in his cellar, such as potatoes, vegetables, a few stored eggs, and so forth, and the little credit he had with his grocer and meat man he was able to get by during the winter. He was behind even under normal conditions with the salary he received. Because of the high prices and the lack of salary increase this year he has no money left; he has no food in his cellar, for he had no money left to lay in his little surplus; and his credit is limited, for the merchant in the past was willing to carry him for one, two, or three months, but he can not carry him for six months. This class, especially in the northern part of the country, have but a limited amount of work after it freezes up. You can readily see he is going to be in straitened circumstances, and the price of food is steadily increasing. The profiteers throughout the country are boasting of what the prices will be next winter. Something must be done to take care of this class of people immediately. Even if action is taken and we are successful in breaking up the monopolies in the food line there is no other way to take care of the food situation, in my opinion, than that outlined in the resolution I introduced several days ago. Now, gentlemen, I agree with the President in his statement; we are dealing with critical times, but I do believe that if we comply with his suggestions and pass certain laws he requests in my opinion they will not bring immediate results. I believe some action must be taken which will give us immediate relief, and with that end in view I introduced House joint resolution 180, which reads as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 180) to conserve American products for the American people, to prevent profiteering, and to reduce the high cost of living.

Whereas during the World War millions of men have been withdrawn from productive activities and have been engaged in destruction, creating a world shortage in all of the necessities of life, which shortage must exist until an equilibrium is reached through increased production and careful saving; and

Whereas during this period of world shortage of the necessities of life prices, unless regulated, will remain uncertain and continue to mount higher and higher, encouraging speculation and profiteering and disturbing all of the legitimate lines of industry and threatening to create great distress and suffering; and

Whereas we recognize our first duty as Americans is to America, and that we should refuse to sell in foreign markets such necessities of life as are actually needed to prevent suffering by the people of our own country; and

Whereas the fixing of fair prices guaranteeing fair profits will prevent speculation and profiteering: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby created a national board of conservation, to consist of the members of the Cabinet, and five United States Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, and the President of the United States, which board shall have full power, during a period of five years after the passage of this act, to make all necessary rules and regulations necessary to secure information as to the supply available, and as to the probable need of all food, clothing, and other necessities of life, from time to time. This board shall have full power and it shall be its duty to forbid the exportation of any and all articles of necessities of life in all cases where the supply does not exceed the amount that will be required for home consumption. This board shall have the further power to investigate wholesale and retail prices and to fix prices and profits on all staple articles which may be fairly included under the term "necessities of life."

SEC. 2. That the sum of $500,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available immediately and until expended, for carrying out the foregoing provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That any person or persons, corporation or corporations, violating any of the regulations of this commission shall, upon conviction, be subject to a penalty of not exceeding $500.

This is the first economic point which will aid us in meeting this foreign competition for world trade.

Now, to justify my statement that we will not get immediate relief. For example, the Department of Justice, I understand, is trying to do certain things, but they show an awful weakness when they start in arresting a little groceryman and fining him for selling sugar at 15 cents a pound. Why not start in on the other end and get the real profiteer, the man who teaches this little fellow how to do it? I not only believe that if they were successful in driving food onto the market from the storage houses and profiteers it will not change our situation much or help much, because the World War threw millions of men into destructive channels, taking them from productive channels, so there is a great shortage of food and materials which will take a number of years of production to return to normal. Germany and Austria are short of fats, and it will take a number of years to raise enough hogs and other fats to return to normal, and you can readily see that with that shortage the situation will be bad for several years.

Second. We must make working conditions satisfactory for labor. We all know a satisfied laboring man is 50 per cent more efficient, and that is another economic point to assist in this fight for world trade.

Third. We must squeeze out all watered stock and overcapitalization; in other words, there must be no dividends or returns to any investor except a fair return on actual money invested in plants, and that must be reasonable, say 4 per cent. Of course, there will be arguments pro and con; but I know foreign countries many times have been satisfied with 2 per cent. And that is another condition we must meet in the fight for world trade.

Fourth. All utilities must be owned and operated by the Government, small or large. There should not be any profit to any private individual on that kind of service. It should be given to the people at cost. That is another point in itself which reduces the cost of living to the laboring man, stabilizes wages, and helps indirectly to meet foreign competition.

Now, I know there are many men here opposed to public ownership because of the railroad situation, but I believe there has not been a fair trial of Government operation of railroads. Railroads as operated during the war it was expected would cost more than in normal times. Certain interests think they should be protected when they invest money, and the Government did take over the railroads and guarantee them a certain return, whether it was fair or not. There is no question in my mind that is one reason why there is a deficiency. In my opinion they were paid too big a return; a good deal more than fair. And naturally when the Government ordered shipments of war material to the seaboard everything had to be sidetracked for it, and that was a loss; and I think those two things will almost cover the deficiency. I believe public ownership should be given a trial for at least four or five years to find out if we are on the right track. If wrong, let us change.

There is no question in my mind, though, that a three or four year trial will show it to be successful. Another reason for not returning to private ownership is that foreign countries will transport their products to any market in the world at cost, and even at a loss, and we must meet that situation. We must have Government-owned railroads and merchant marine, so we can meet this competition and hold our business when that time comes, no matter what the cost. And if there is a deficiency, that loss should be borne by the people of this country and not by individuals, and the only way it can be borne is by Government ownership and the loss paid by taxation. With income taxes the man who does make money will help pay for the weaker ones, and finally it will adjust itself satisfactorily. And in my opinion those are two strong reasons for public ownership. And the men to-day who are arguing against public ownership will be the first to whine, for they will be hit hardest with their plants operating only six months a year. Suppose the investor makes but 2 per cent for three years, if we keep our men and boys at work, especially those who came back from overseas, and hold the business we have, it would be a good investment for everyone.

I said in my previous remarks that we won the Great War, and it was a great achievement. But if we can reconstruct our financial and unsettled condition it is a bigger job, in my opinion, than winning the war. I know we can do it. All we must do is work together and everybody work for the interest of his country regardless of cost to him. We must go right on as though nothing had happened, as though this war had never occurred. Let us quit criticizing the men who handled this war and forget it, and not think of how we can hit the other fellow, but how we can solve this problem. Let us not waste our energy but use it to do what is right. By that I do not mean that investigations in different departments should not be carried out. They should be, and wherever irregularities are found, punish those responsible, no matter who it hits. We ought to go right ahead, make plans to construct buildings, to develop our water powers, reclaim lands, develop the air service because of its commercial value, and a number of other activities. The Government should be a leader in this progressive program, which will place confidence in every investor and we need fear no calamity or any hard times. Who is urging economy outside of Congress? I will tell you who they are. They are the men who have made money in this war and the profiteers. They realize that the Government expenses have increased and probably will increase, and the obligations of the Government must be met. They also realize that we have taxed the common people, through the revenue tax, about the limit. And right here I want to point out that adding to the burden of the common workingman increases the high cost of living. That burden should be transferred to the man who can well afford to pay. This is another economic point to help meet foreign competition. There is a way of obtaining this revenue, and that is why the men mentioned above are complaining. A more rigid income tax and an inheritance tax should be enacted, which will return to the Government part of that ill-gotten gain to help rebuild where these men, in my opinion, have helped to destroy. I believe in taxing incomes and inheritances to the limit.

The money that I claim was made unjustly will be placed in the hands of the people through the Government, where it belongs, and will incidentally help in this reconstruction period by circulating money which has been during the war placed in fewer hands by accumulating big fortunes. There are more millionaires to-day by far than there were before the war; and it might be said that the money power has been distributed somewhat, but my belief is to the contrary. Those men have invested their money in different factories and corporations which are controlled by a few men, so that many more millions really are added power to the present big money powers—for instance, Wilson & Co., incorporated for millions of dollars; and the men who control that company to-day obtained control with but a very small percentage of the total capitalization, and thereby control a corporation of such magnitude; and all those men, of course, during the war bought some stock in that company. The investor draws dividends, the big men control, making one big power. There are four other big packers, and they all have huge capitalization and one or two men control. A similar corporation is the steel business, and there are a few more, and, with the bankers of Wall Street, they always work together. Therefore this big, powerful combination of all these interests controlled by a few men finally gets down to one big head. If an individual corporation needs anything, they appeal to the leader, and they all get together, exert their combined pressure, and get what they want. So that to-day the money is controlled by very few people in this country.

But that is not the only reason why this man was urging economy. I know a number of manufacturers who told me when the armistice was signed, "We do not care; we made enough during this war; we can close our factories and get along"; and, figuring by that method, they would create a panic and such a condition that they would be able to dictate to labor as they have in the past. And in that way labor would lose everything it had gained during this war. And then this man says he is a good American. In my opinion he is the worst kind of an anarchist. He is willing to go beyond that limit, no matter what it costs our country, just so he can control the situation again; but I have the utmost confidence in this House of Representatives and the people in general to know that they are not going to allow this man to have his way. There is no question which course will be followed or whether the people will allow this anarchistic plan, under the disguise of economy, to triumph over the plan of progressive construction. These are, in some people's minds, radical steps, but they are not so radical when you figure or think for a minute how the people's mind has changed in the last two or three years. In my opinion the thought of the people has changed more in this time to a progressive and human state than in 40 years previous. Some big men have made statements in the last year that they must divide their profits with the workers. And right here I want to say that organized labor deserves a lot more credit, although they might have made mistakes and are making mistakes, but they must at least have this credit, they kept this man, who is willing to sacrifice everything to realize this selfish idea of controlling labor, from getting by.

The Chamber of Commerce is the biggest union in the world and for years have been a powerful factor in forming public opinion and putting over legislation, of course, which was for their interest and as they saw it. I have heard a number of business men say, and they are sincere in the belief, that they were doing the right thing—they thought by that kind of action, suggestions, and recommendations they were building up this country and giving labor work, but it was also building up at the same time our great monopolist. And they have always criticized labor for organizing; but it was all right for them to organize. They realized when labor was thoroughly organized under one head, the same as they were, that labor's power would equal their own, and, naturally, would interfere with their plans. This war brought this on, and now labor is just as powerful. And now they are commencing to whine. This organization business may be wrong, but it is the only chance labor has to compete with the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

This job is a real American job, and there is no question in my mind we are going to do the same thing we did to win this war. We are going to win this battle. But we must be good Americans. This thought has flashed through my mind a number of times: What is a good American; who is he? In my opinion a good American is a man who believes in a Supreme Being; a good American is a man who places his country first, last, and all the time; a good American is a man who protects his family, raises a family, and leads a clean, Christian life; a good American is a man who loves his brother; a good American is a man who is willing to serve in this world, not for the pleasures and conveniences he can get out of it, but serves for his fellow man. Let us at least try to be real Americans.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM D. UPSHAW,

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, August 13, 1919.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include two communications, one from the Chamber of Commerce of Atlanta and the other from the Atlanta Federation of Trade, concerning the present railroad situation.

They are as follows:

Whereas there is manifestation of unrest in the life of the Nation, which is now affecting all transportation and threatens the whole industrial fabric of the country; and

Whereas in these times of stress when all law-abiding people are, in good faith, endeavoring to adjust themselves to new conditions brought about by the war and as the result of the sacrifices of the lives of thousands of American boys on foreign soil; and

Whereas the Government is now engaged in the vitally important task of making a treaty which will be of world-wide importance not only to this country but to all the nations of the earth; and

Whereas calmness of thought and sturdiness of purpose are essential to the correct adjustment of the relations of this country to the other countries of the world; and

Whereas open threats of industrial war have been made and strikes which affect the welfare of the country are at hand and other strikes of Nation-wide proportion are threatened, which condition is inconsistent with the sober fitting of the relations of the peoples of this country to each other and with that calm judgment which this country must show in dealing with the other countries of the world; and

Whereas the railroad employees who are now actually on strike were in the service of the Government, and their action in breaking down the transportation system of the Nation is a disservice to the country at the time when it most needs the support of all patriotic citizens: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to call upon those employees to return to the patriotic service of the country by resuming the duties which they have left off; be it further

Resolved, That the existing strikes now affecting the railroads of this locality, and which threaten to be extended to all of the railroads of the country, are most severely condemned, for that the actions of the Government in such matters do not justify this method of treatment of this subject by those who are responsible therefor or participate therein; and, further, because such action is inconsistent with the higher duties of citizenship and is an attempt to substitute intimidation for law; be it further

Resolved, That the governor of this State and others in authority be, and they are hereby, requested to take immediate steps to protect the lives and property of our citizens against the food and fuel shortage which must inevitably follow the proposed strike and suspension of transportation; be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, to the governor of Georgia, to the Legislature of Georgia now assembled, to the mayor and general council of the city of Atlanta, and to the press.

ATLANTA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

ATLANTA FEDERATION OF TRADES,
Atlanta, Ga., August 11, 1919.

Hon. WILLIAM D. UPSHAW,
Congressman Fifth District of Georgia,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: The Atlanta Federation of Trades most respectfully submits the following memorial to your earnest consideration:

First. (a) That on December 22, 1918, the members of the trade organization—for reasons hereinafter mentioned—in regular and legal manner, petitioned the Railroad Administration for a specific and graduated increase in the wages commensurate, in their judgment, with the then prevailing cost of such commodities as are properly termed "the necessities of life."

(b) That the maximum per hour wages paid such operatives as machinists, blacksmiths, and boiler makers was at the time 68 cents per hour, the operatives in the so-called semiskilled trade and apprentices being proportionately less.

(c) That although at the time the justice and the need for such increase in wage scale as that asked for in said petition was apparent and undisputed, if any attention whatsoever was paid by the petitioned authorities to the petitioners' petition the fact was not at any time manifested in action, and to this day, so far as any remedial action is concerned, the said petition still stands in statu quo.

(d) That regardless of the failure of the Railroad Administration, the National War Labor Board, or any other Federal agency, to grant the needed relief sought, said petitioners remained continuously and faithfully at work under the wage condition complained of, which condition continued to become more and more aggravated and oppressive by reason of the constantly increasing cost of living, even with the coming of peace, until August 1; then the men, after serving due notice of their intentions, inaugurated the present protest.

Second. (a) That, contrary to the often-reiterated charge that the men acted without the express sanction of the international officers of their trade organizations, does not argue any lack of interest on the part of these officials in the welfare of the protesting workers or the cause which impelled their walking out; nor does it in any measure indicate disloyalty to or disrespect for on the men's part to said international officials or the general movement in which all the affiliated unions of the American Federation of Labor, and notably the four railroad brotherhoods, is actively engaged just now in promoting.

(b) That there is no dispute between the men and their international officials as to the justification of the former's action, the only difference of mind having to do solely with time and technical regularity of method, and not with any basic principle of action. In other words, at heart the said officials do sanction the course of the men, but belatedly made known a preference to order the men out only after a referendum vote should have been taken.

Third. (a) That the result of the suggested referendum vote could not be ascertained and action thereupon made effective without the loss of 30 days, long before the end of which time—if we may judge the immediate future by the immediate past; the ravages of the necessities—profiteers would have reached a point at which the petitioning workers and their families' condition would have been positively and absolutely unbearable.

(b) That the trend of events having to do with national economic conditions took such shape and latterly became so accelerated in motion that the petitioning workers, in sanguinity that their course would meet with approval, with which it really has met unofficially by the said international officials, decide, concertedly and with one accord by their several local union organizations, to institute the actions that are now under way and not to temporize longer with a situation in which further delay only threatens disaster, rather than offer hope, for the attainment of the desire and imperative object.

(c) That while this action argues neither lack of faith in said official by said men, nor vice versa, the fact of the ignoring of petitioners' petition from December, 1918, to this good day argues with particular and indisputable force a lack of interest in the welfare of the petitioners and their families on the part of the Federal Railroad Administration.

Fourth. (a) That the workers involved in this movement to a man each did his part—his full man's part—loyally and patriotically and zealously, either in the service uniform of the United States or in the no less potent ranks of labor at home, in the winning of the World War for the safeguarding of the civilized nations of mankind against Prussian autocracy.

(b) That surely a people or a class that can in the shedding of its blood and the sweat of its brow make a world "safe for democracy" can and should apply the fundamental principles of democracy, the principles involved in the inherent rights of "life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness," to itself and its own.

(c) That these basic and inherent rights can not be enjoyed by citizens who and whose families, while forced to subsist within fixed and circumscribed limited income, are from day to day dependent for their subsistence upon the uncurbed and inordinate profits, rapacity of an unrestrained and rampant class, whose zeal is for gain alone.

Fifth. (a) That these workers did not leave their work in response to any desire of their own to be idle, nor to manifest any inclination of disloyalty to their leaders. They did not go out from choice, and certainly, as their past services and sacrifices have abundantly proven, they have only the highest regard for their country, loyalty to its interest, and respect for its flag. But they do feel that an injustice has been committed against them; that they are being made to suffer under a wrong which is none of their own making; that disregard and disrespect for them and their welfare and interests are manifested in the failure of their petition to receive that measure of attention which all right-thinking men must concede it deserves.

(b) And it is solely with the end in view to bring about a removal of that injustice and a correction of the wrong and a recognition of their rights of American citizenship that they elected to follow the course now being pursued.

(c) That in view of the President's then announced plan to absent himself from the Capital to launch upon a protracted tour of the country in the interest of an issue that is entirely apart from and foreign to the domestic economic crisis which menaces these men, and in view of the further fact that the House of Representatives itself had voted to recess for a period of 30 days or more, during all of which time no remedial action on the part either of the administration or of Congress could have been hoped for, much less expected, it was only natural and reasonable that these men should conclude that their only hope for release lay in such action as that decided upon by them and put into effect.

(d) Your petitioners further submit that the protest of said workers was and is regarded by them, and approved by this federation, as a protest not only necessary and in the interest of their original petition for higher wage, but most particularly as a solemn declaration against the heartless indifference of our own Government officials, the humble worker, and the well-being of his family. We submit in the name of the Atlanta Federation of Trades, of which these organizations are a part, that due and proper consideration has not been paid to the modest request of these men by Government officials, but, to the contrary, whose attitude clearly shows that they are not in harmony with the brand of democracy that stands for "equal rights for all and privileges to none." We submit that these men and their families have been cruelly neglected and that they have been made to suffer undue privations by reason of the lack of proper attention having been accorded their original request by said officials. We submit that these men did not leave their employment with laughter and light hearts, nor yet was there ever in their minds or hearts bitter feelings toward any. Theirs was a case of presenting to the country their original request and to express their disapproval of the law's delay through the indifference of those in authority to the voice of the oppressed.

We submit further that we are not unmindful of the seriousness of the situation and all the distressing events that will follow in the Southeast if continued; the thought but adds a great weight of woe to our already heavy spirit and makes the crime of official indifference to the interest of the people the greater.

Sixth. (a) That we, the Atlanta Federation of Trades, not only commend the course pursued by these organizations, but approve the action and motive underlying it, and we pledge it our wholehearted, undivided, and unyielding support.

(b) We go further than that. We agree, as this instrument attests, to the extreme of appealing directly to the President of the United States for a manifestation of concern in the lives and welfare of these men and their hearthstones that has not been forthcoming from that branch of our Government to which they are immediately related in their accustomed avocation.

Seventh. (a) We believe that it is within the precincts and power of yourself, as President of the United States, to bring about a redress of the wrongs to which these honest and purposeful workers have been and are being subjected. We are mindful that Congress can enact legislation which we believe will bring about a new status and a new day and a new hope for the working masses, for the producing class of this great Republic's citizenship, such legislation to be more explicit as that which is now pending, and which has publicly received the sanction and commendation of the said railroad brotherhood and organized labor generally.

(b) We desire, therefore, to go on record as adding ours to the request of the general ranks of the workers of our country that such legislation, laws calculated to bring labor into a higher estate in our country, and other laws, by the operation of which the cost of living can be brought to a point of reduction that will in a measure meet the income of the masses of the people. We respectfully ask that such legislation be speedily enacted.

(c) We make this appeal in the firm conviction that it is in behalf of the only means by which our country may be spared calamitous consequences of prolonged delay.

Trusting you will give this memorial prompt and considerate attention, we beg to remain,

Very respectfully,

LOUIE P. MARQUARDT,
Recording Secretary.

POSTAL EMPLOYEES' WAGES.

LINCOLN, NEBR., August 9.

To the EDITOR OF THE STAR:

We noticed an article in Friday's Star headed, "Lincoln post-office employees have not asked for higher wages." By way of opening, we want to brand this statement as an absolute mistake. If anyone desires to create the impression that the employees of this office are satisfied with the existing conditions, he is wrong. We want to say that the postal employees here have asked higher wages. The article referred to also states that the postal employees have been granted a 25 per cent raise. This is also not true. They were given a temporary fiscal year raise of $200. A magnificent sum to combat the present high cost of living. This is the only raise the postal employees have had since 1910.

At that time it was considered that post-office clerks were worth $800 per year to start and an increase of $100 per year until $1,200 per year was reached, provided they stood in with the postmaster and were recommended for each raise. As a relief, during the present hard times they were given a temporary raise of $200 per year, or an average of only 20 per cent. Has living advanced 20 per cent? No need to answer. Employees start in the service now at a salary of $83.33 per month. To earn this they must work on the average of one-half of their time at night. They are presented with a map and a scheme book and told to learn what railway post office or line every post office in the State is on. This they are compelled to do at home on their own time. He must know all junction points. Before he can work mail he must know the running time and meeting points of every mail train in the State, both night and day. After he has learned Nebraska, he must then learn Colorado, Kansas, Iowa, Wyoming, South Dakota, etc. As an illustration of the way a letter is dispatched, let us take a letter mailed in Lincoln and addressed to Central City. In the forenoon it is put up in a package and labeled to "Lincoln and Billings 39." After 10.40 a. m. it is labeled to "Omaha and Grand Island 27" and sent to Valparaiso over an express train to catch its proper train. After 2 p. m. it is labeled to "Omaha and Ogden 13" and sent to Omaha to catch the Union Pacific train there. After 5.30 it is given to "Lincoln and Billings 43." After midnight it goes by way of Omaha again until early morning, when it is sent out over the Northwestern from here labeled "Missouri Valley and Lincoln 24," and after 7.15 a. m. it again goes to 39. This is only one town out of 1,084 in the State of Nebraska. Think of learning them all so you know them instantly in that way. And then think that the janitor who sweeps the floor commands higher pay to start with than the man who is up against this kind of a proposition. Now, just a word as to the rotten conditions existing in the mail service. The public is not aware of the kind of service they are getting. For instance, one of our clerks has the label from a package of letters which shows they were mailed in New York on July 15. They reached Omaha on July 31. On August 2 they reached Lincoln, and on August 4 they were delivered. That's service (?). Only 22 days to come from New York! Time enough to have gone to Europe first. The other day the janitor handed us a package of letters which he happened to find in the wastebasket. The date on the label showed it had been there only four days. Quick work. We have known circular mail to lie around the post office for over 72 hours before it was worked. Business men, take a tip from us: If you want your circulars to reach destination in Nebraska next week be sure they are in the office this week. We do not mean to say these delays are perpetual, but they are getting mighty frequent. We have been told by the all-night men that they handle C. O. D. parcels late in the morning that were mailed early the evening before. This is almost an everyday occurrence. You people over the city who bring your parcel-post packages. A couple of special-delivery boys have been put in charge of the mail trucks. We have only half enough men in the office who can work mail. The rest are new fellows who come, stay a few days, and leave in disgust. If the business men knew the treatment they were getting they would "make Rome howl." The service is rotten to the very core, and until the wage standard is raised so a man can decently support his family it will continue to get worse. It must be attractive enough so men will come into the service and take a real interest in the work. Think of a concern only giving its employees a raise of 20 per cent in the last eight or nine years. And yet Postmaster General Burleson turned over to the United States Treasury last year the sum of $17,000,000 in profits realized from postal revenue.

We have petitioned our Congressmen, as they are the only ones who can remedy matters. It is up to them alone to decide. If the public wants their mail handled as it should be, let them write their Representatives in Washington at once to grant wages to the postal workers that will enable them to clothe their wives and little ones so they are not ashamed to be seen on the streets. Then, and then only, will men who will produce results come into the service. Fifty per cent raise is not too much. Figure how much living cost has advanced. Imagine yourself on our salaries. Help us to get results that will benefit you as well as us. When that time comes the public will again have real service.

SIX POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. C. FRANK REAVIS,
OF NEBRASKA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, August 26, 1919.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks I append a public letter written by six postal employees of Lincoln, Nebr. The situation as revealed by this letter is shocking to the sense of justice and fair play that is inherent in the American people. No more loyal, patriotic, and industrious people live in this Nation of ours than are the postal employees, nor is there any class of labor so inadequately paid as they. I am very glad, indeed, to be permitted to place before the House and the country this dispassionate and truthful statement of a wrong done by the country to a class of men who ask nothing but justice but who have so far received little consideration:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM C. LANKFORD,
OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, August 19, 1919.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, I find it necessary to vote to override the President's veto on this measure to repeal the daylight-saving law.

The people of my district have been very much inconvenienced by the so-called daylight-saving idea.

We were in the central time zone and were transferred to the eastern time zone and advanced one hour, and then under the so-called daylight-saving scheme we were advanced another hour.

So now noon comes at 10 o'clock in the morning and 9 o'clock in the evening comes before dark. Many of the good people of my district like to retire by 9 o'clock, but they do not like to go to bed before dark.

It is all wrong. We now have seven times. We have sun time, the old central time, eastern time, advanced time, incorrect time, no time, and a bad time.

If a man says he will call at your office at 2 o'clock, you do not know whether he means at 12 o'clock, 1 o'clock, 2 o'clock, 3 o'clock, or 4 o'clock. All depends on the time you have in mind and the time the other fellow has in mind. Every day mistakes are made because of this tangled-up time proposition.

A man the other day in my district and county at Ambrose, Ga., said that he got out of bed in the morning at 8 o'clock, caught a train at 7.45 o'clock, rode 14 miles to Douglas, Ga., reaching Douglas at 7.30 o'clock, ate breakfast at 7.15 o'clock, made some purchases and caught a train back home at 7 o'clock, and got back home at 7.30 o'clock. According to our different times he was gone from home an hour and a half and got back home 30 minutes before he started.

This shows how uncertain and unsatisfactory our time is under this new order of things.

Time is one of the most certain things in the world.

"Time and tide wait for no man."

And yet our present time is worse than confusion confounded. It makes everything out of joint.

Our standard time should be, as nearly as practical, the same as sun time.

My people want our old time, and I hope that we will be able to give it to them and to the Nation.

Mondell Soldier Settlement Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK W. MONDELL,

OF WYOMING,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, August 20, 1919.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I submit for printing in the RECORD a recent editorial from the New York Times, under the caption "Homesteads for veterans." This sane and sound editorial from a conservative eastern newspaper presents clearly some of the arguments in favor of the pending bill for soldier settlements.

The editorial in question is as follows:

HOMESTEADS FOR VETERANS.

In a report upon the national soldiers' settlement act, the title of the bill introduced by Representative MONDELL to establish returning soldiers and sailors upon the land, Chairman SINNOTT, of the Committee on Public Lands, says that "there is one thing on which all are agreed, something should be done for the soldier." It is a noteworthy circumstance that a Kentucky soldier, KING SWOPE, was recently elected to Congress in the eighth district because he advocated six months' pay for the soldier and sailor who served in the war. The district had never before, it is said, gone Republican. The disquieting thing about this overturn is that the veteran SWOPE would never have been elected if he had not demanded a draft on the public Treasury of six months' pay for 4,800,000 soldiers and sailors. A distinction could not, or would not, be made between the American who was lucky enough to serve with the colors in France and the American who was undergoing training at home; and the presumption is that every soldier and sailor—that is to say, all of the rank and file, officers and privates and marines and seamen—would receive for six months the same pay they drew while the war lasted. An enormous sum would be taken from the Treasury, and little good the soldier would derive from an award the use of which would be fleeting.

Now, it is obvious that such legislation by Congress would be the signal for one long, drawn-out raid upon the Treasury, lasting until and after the surviving veterans of the host of 4,800,000 had passed from the scene. The pension list of the Civil War would doubtless be exceeded by billions of dollars. It was to avert such a burden from the back of the taxpayer that Congress opened to the American soldier serving in the Great War the opportunity of insuring himself at a very moderate cost. Of that opportunity he can still avail himself, and yet there are all kinds of proposals to do something additional for the soldier, in many cases without much regard for his welfare permanently. When States make provision for their own soldiers, as Massachusetts has done, by providing a bonus of $100 for each of its veterans—$20,000,000 for a total of 200,000—it is an affair of the people of that State, but when it comes to Federal aid it is an affair of the whole people, and public sentiment will require that something worth while be done for the soldiers and sailors.

One very objectionable scheme is a system of loans to them for the purpose of buying homes anywhere on the installment plan, to cost the Nation a minimum of $16,000,000,000 and a maximum of $40,000,000,000. It has been well said that this "would result in the wildest orgy of land speculation the world has ever witnessed."

Many States will be disposed to make gifts of money to their soldiers, but if the Nation—that is to say, Congress—is to do something for their benefit, it should be on a plan that will not only make them independent of further aid during their lives but increase the prosperity of the whole country, and that is the purpose of the utilitarian Mondell bill, which is thoroughly practicable. Briefly, it designs to place the soldier on land reclaimed by his own efforts, for which he is to receive liberal compensation. He will pay for the land on easy terms during a period of years. He is also to have credit for all the tools, machinery, and stock he needs to develop his farm and make it profitable. It is Secretary Lane's plan, thought out wisely to the last detail. He has consulted men in all walks of life and occupations—engineers, agriculturists, stockmen, sociologists, bankers, and business men, as well as the soldiers themselves, governors, and Members of Congress.

The American Legion, which represents 4,800,000 soldiers and sailors, any of whom may acquire homesteads and the means to maintain them, is a unit for Secretary Lane's proposals as embodied in the Mondell bill. It provides an appropriation of $500,000,000, but not a dollar of the sum is to be expended without the supervision of Congress. The Secretary of the Interior will be the general manager and director of operations. The Committee on Appropriations may be likened to a board of directors and all the Members of Congress to stockholders. Governors and commissions in the various States are to cooperate. Thus there need be no blundering in the execution. It is provided by section 9 of the bill that States supplying 25 per cent of the capital required by settlement within their borders may assume the entire administration of the work, except that the Reclamation Service will prepare the land for their soldiers, giving them employment meanwhile at current wages, so that they can save the moderate sum which they are to put into the homesteads themselves. Nearly 90,000 soldiers have already made formal application for land under the terms of the Mondell bill, and this number will surely be increased as the plan comes to be generally understood. The aim is to establish on the land every soldier and sailor who feels the call to it and elects to become a farmer or stockman.

It must always be borne in mind that every soldier and sailor may take out or continue the insurance offered by the Government, and clearly enough the majority of veterans will go back to their old occupations by choice, and will need no assistance from State or Nation or have any desire to solicit or accept it. There will remain, nevertheless, large numbers of veterans who must have aid to become independent. The Mondell bill, the national soldier settlement act, affords the model method, and it is evident that the crops and live stock raised by the homesteaders would add measurably to the wealth of the country and reduce the cost of living. States may do what they please to help or reward their soldiers and sailors, but the Nation can not do better for them than to establish them on the land and give them an opportunity to become self-supporting and independent.

I also present for printing in the RECORD an editorial by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, which appeared in the May, 1919, issue of the American Federationist. The editorial referred to presents some exceedingly strong arguments for the soldier settlement legislation from historical, governmental, and economic viewpoints.

The editorial in question is as follows:

OPEN THE LAND.

During Jacques Turgot's day in France no peasant owned any part of the French soil on which he lived and worked. When Count Turgot suggested to the King that French lands be bought at a fair price from 25,000 noblemen and sold to the peasants he was bitterly denounced as a traitor to his class. In 1776 he was deposed by the King. It was only a short time thereafter that the lands of France were divided among the peasants, while many of those noblemen were on their way to the guillotine, and others were forced into exile.

When Henry Clay suggested that the Government should settle the slave question by buying the slaves for twelve hundred million dollars he was savagely attacked and denounced as a traitor to the South. A little later slaves were freed and the South was made to pay for its folly.

A tidal wave of restless humanity is sweeping across the world. A social calamity threatens the peoples of Europe. Our land is not altogether free from the sparks of the fires of human dissension, strife, and turmoil, which are threatening the very foundations of some of the European nations. It would be amusing, were it not tragic, to watch our learned and good men in Congress in their alertness for political advantage and their utter disregard and failure of foresight in dealing promptly and efficiently with the many vital problems now pressing for solution.

The soldiers, sailors, and workers of all lands, including our own, are thinking in terms of land. The great statesmen of the world and the peace plenipotentiaries in Paris have been diligently at work for some time past seeking an understanding and agreement regarding divisions of land and the payment of war reparation by the grants of land. In this division of lands shall we repeat the errors of the past?

A little over a hundred years ago, when generals like Marlborough, Wellington, and others returned victoriously from the battle field, they received immense grants of money and seats for themselves and their descendants in the House of Lords. However, when the veterans who did the fighting and won the battles returned, they were rewarded, if at all, by a permit to beg, and threaten to be hanged if they attempted to beg without having received a permit to do so.

In 1359, when England annexed the larger part of France, the victorious soldiers were rewarded for their valorous deed by being exiled to and disbanded in the peaceful and prosperous province of Brittany, with permission to plunder at their will and leisure its rich and unoffending people.

How are we to manifest our gratitude and appreciation to our returning soldiers and sailors and to our industrial warriors who made possible the greatest political and military achievement ever recorded in the annals of mankind? Are we, too, to reward our victorious soldiers and sailors and workers by granting them permission to plunder and to beg? Has this great war been fought and won for the exaltation of those in possession of the wealth of the Nation or for the general welfare of all the peoples and the realization of a just and fair and democratic arrangement in all our relations and possessions?

There is one way of meeting the situation. We have as yet an incomplete and not fully developed country. It will take hundreds of years to develop our lands entirely. There are millions of acres of land in the United States that can be saved from worthlessness and brought into value and made a permanent part of the United States by drainage and by reclamation through irrigation. There is no sound reason why Congress should not extend the same principle to the lands of the South and the lands of the North as to the lands of the West.

It is our responsibility—the responsibility of our Government—to provide the returning soldier and sailor as well as the wage earner, with an opportunity to possess and develop our unused lands.

Secretary Lane's proposed land settlement bill not merely provides homes and liberal conditions for the men who are looking for them, but it serves the further purpose of developing our country while providing for and paying the labor to develop it.

Road building, river improvement, irrigation, planning, recovery of waste lands, acquisition of deserted property—all this and more have been embodied in the comprehensive bill urged by Secretary Lane and thus far disregarded by Congress. He is asking for an appropriation of $100,000,000 for construction—a modest sum in face of the billions that have been voted for destruction.

It is the land question more than any other which first started the rumblings of unrest and discontent in Russia. It is upon the land question that many nations of the past met their Waterloo. The greatest service we can render ourselves and our Government is to encourage by substantial means the natural promptings of our people to acquire title to a home and a stake in our land—land capable of early production and which does not require a generation to develop.

Let us assure our soldiers and sailors and industrial warriors of the fullest possible opportunity to make an honest living, so there will be no need for begging as in the ages past. Let us encourage those broken in health to look forward to the curative power of life in the open. Now that there is no further need for digging trenches abroad, Congress should provide the opportunity and means for digging and developing the unused fields at home.

SAMUEL GOMPERS.

High Cost of Living and Perils.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES J. THOMPSON,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, August 22, 1919.

Mr. THOMPSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I visited Trinity Church last night in this city, where there has been organized a public forum to discuss the high cost of living, which now seems uppermost in the minds of the people. I listened to vain and vague discussions that led nowhere and promised no results. Upon this question we are getting nowhere. The high cost of living was a campaign cry in 1912 on behalf of our friends the Democrats; and now, after six years of socialistic Democracy and misrule, with its long train of bureaus and bureaucrats and commissions galore, and trainloads of high-classed and high-salaried men who will be sent away from Washington as soon as the next Republican President is inaugurated, in 1921, old Gen. High Cost seems to be in supreme command of the country.

We are getting nowhere in our discussions. The President, with all the beauty and glory of his brilliant rhetoric, comes before this body and asks for more power and millions of money to be used by armies of Government employees at high salaries and to employ brilliant and high-priced attorneys to bring more lawsuits and give more lawyers employment. I am not in favor of giving the President any more power or another dollar. He and his bureaus and departments have already too much power and are costing this Government too much money.

Men at the forum at Trinity Church last night and men in the Halls of this Congress to-day talk very much alike. Most people solve the problem in the light of their pet animosities. In the whirl of charge and countercharge it seems that no one escapes. Wholesalers, retailers, manufacturers, bankers, employees, labor unions, all have to take their turn on the firing line. All are equally busy in attack and defense, and, as has been well said, "The only relative silent class is that of men who work on small salaries, who have no weapons of combinations, no kind of control over the size of their incomes, and who are called on to pay not only the increased cost of living but the enhanced wages that are exacted by their more fortunate and organized comrades." The profiteer is, of course, abhorred of God and man. Since I have been in this Congress I have heard the distinguished ex-Speaker repeatedly declare upon this floor that he was in favor of jailing all profiteers, and in the exuberance of his passion I believe he also exclaimed that he was in favor of hanging them higher than Haman.

While perhaps many of us are not so radical as he, yet I think we are all agreed in an abhorrence of the profiteer. Indeed, our resentment is so keen that we usually overlook the formalities of definition. For what is a profiteer? Let me quote, if you please, from the utterances of a distinguished journal, which recently said:

"Doubtless we can all name some profiteers according to our favorite hostilities—packers, leather makers, and so forth. But what constitutes a profiteer? In what way is his action distinctively different from that of other men? How shall we know him when we see him? What sort of indictment shall we draw against him?

"A profiteer is presumably one who avails himself of a national need, of a national crisis, in order to enrich himself. But in that event who among us shall escape, except the salaried and unorganized class? And they, too, would be profiteers if they were able. We have not yet heard of anyone, high or low, who has shown any disinclination to sell his goods in the highest market or to buy them in the lowest. It does not matter whether those goods are labor or sides of bacon, whether they are large in quantity or small. And we may say that if we should hear of such persons in any considerable numbers we shall at once order our ascension robes, no matter what their price. We are, every one of us, in the profiteering game, if it comes to that, except those who can not get into it, and they wish heartily that they could."

We, as Congressmen, know and realize that everybody is clamoring at our doors for more wages, more pay, more money. The poor postal clerks and postal carriers, employees of the Government but not in a position to organize like organized labor; labor on the floor of this House, with its minimum wage bill just passed; the soldiers' pension bill carrying sixty-five millions to justly and righteously take care of those brave men, who in the dark days of 1860 and 1861 bared their breasts to the iron hail of battle that the Union might be saved; and many other organizations; but if a single Member of Congress should rise upon the floor of this House and ask that his wages to conform to the present high cost of living be raised from $7,500 to $10,000 the country would drop dead from heart failure. But should Congress demand higher pay it would be in the same situation as the manufacturer who demands a higher price. The workman who avails himself of the situation might be deemed a profiteer, for he is in the same situation as the manufacturer who demands a higher price or the Member of Congress who might demand a higher salary. Each is a vague and economic law as old as trade itself. Each, of course, blames the other for his own exaction, and it may be said that the exaction of each neutralizes the exaction of the other. And what are you going to do about it? For answer permit me to quote liberally from a recent article on this subject from the pen of a distinguished journalist on the Pacific coast. He said:

"A technical diagnosis of the disease in the face of the irreconcilable opinions of innumerable experts would be futile. Congressmen and the like are the only people who know instantly and infallibly what to do in the face of every human emergency, and it will be noted that their activities usually take the form of demagogy with its many evil heads of denunciation, appeals, investigations, and commissions. They may all be classified under the colloquial and convenient term of 'bunk.' We have seen this same flurry before, although not on so large a scale. We have witnessed the almost incredible sillinesses of our so-called leaders again and again. We 'dissolved' the Oil and Tobacco Trusts. We waged legal war upon organization after organization, and no one was a bit the better for it except the lawyer, and no one a bit the worse for it except the public.

"The Federal Trade Commission raged up and down the land busily doing nothing except raise hatreds. Are we to have another dose of the same futilities for lack of a leader to tell the truth? Doubtless there are some prices that could be lowered by direct Executive order, but it would be well to ask ourselves the end of that particular road. Are we to do business henceforth on a basis of Executive orders? When the Government guaranteed the price of wheat at $2.26 we might have foreseen the increased acreage that would be devoted to wheat and the decrease in the supply of meat, butter, and eggs. We might have foreseen that prices must soar, since nearly everything has a wheat basis. Of course we foresaw nothing. We never do. It may be there is now a great deal of hoarding. Probably there is. But we shall gain nothing by violently looting the hoards. What about the morning after?

"Now, as to the packers. At present there is a human cry concerning them. A magazine called the Argonaut has this to say: 'Do we really believe that the packers, sinful though they may be, have the power to lower prices?' A simple and indisputable calculation will show that if the packers were to sell at actual cost the decrease in the price of a pound of meat would be imperceptible—a fraction of a cent. And here we may note the curious fact that the packers are being attacked for paying too low a price to the cattle raisers—that is to say, they are giving us our meat too cheaply. Obviously we can not have it both ways. If we merely want to destroy some one, by all means go after the packers, but let us avoid the curious delusion that in that way we can lower the cost of living.

"The remedy is largely in the hands of the public, but it will not be found in hysterical legislation nor by empowering a half dozen new commissions to hoist the black flag. The world has been destroying its wealth for the last five years. During the war we had a spasm of what we call economy. We conserved, or thought we did. The moment the war was over we began to buy with prodigal haste, and the manufacturers who have lessened their production were caught napping.

"There was an unexpected scarcity, and those who had any commodities to sell were quick to take advantage of the sudden demand. Labor did the same. We all did the same. We have not heard of any workman who demanded a reduction of his pay on the ground that it was excessive. We have not heard of any packer who accepted the lower rather than the higher bid for his sides of bacon. The workmen who go on strike for higher wages—that is to say, who hoard their commodity for a higher price—are doing precisely the same as the packer who hoards his sides of bacon. It is an ugly spectacle; but, then, all competition is ugly.

"There are some things that we must buy, no matter how high the price, or else die; but there are large numbers of other things that we need not buy at all. For the matter of that, we need not buy meat, and we might even be better off without it. The woman who pays $120 for a suit that cost $60 a few years ago is not the victim of the profiteer. She is a victim of her own vanity. Probably she could buy a suit for a very small amount if she would alter her standard. The high cost of living is largely due to our stupid resolve to go on living as we lived before the war. It can not be done. But the worst of all remedies, the most inane, is an appeal to the Government.

"If there is no help for the people except from Congress, then, indeed, the people are in a perilous plight."

We need less legislation, less lawsuits, less investigations by committees on the high cost of living, less arraignment of class against class. My constructive suggestion would be that the President of the United States proclaim Labor Day as a nation-wide reduction day and start a nation-wide agitation among the people for economy and retrenchment on subsequent reduction days among the merchants, manufacturers, and labor unions for wise and honest reductions and retrenchments. The country and the world are in the midst of great reforms and the flames of revolution are threatening everywhere around and about us, and America is not yet fully aroused to the gravity of the situation.

The Teachers' Retirement Bill for the District of Columbia.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES P. WOODS,

OF VIRGINIA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, August 26, 1919.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the need for this legislation seems so apparent and the sentiment in its favor, as developed in the hearings before the committee, seems so overwhelming that I considered argument in its favor unnecessary. Only its importance and far-reaching effect constrain me to seemingly trespass upon your time.

In my judgment, no measure of more vital importance has come before this session. In the main, the other measures we have been considering—some of them of great importance—are in comparison but expedients of the hour, while this proposed legislation, when we consider that it will serve as an example for all of the States to follow, and they will follow it, as mine has done in principle, will touch every hearthstone in all the land, not only for this generation but for all those that shall come hereafter. These other measures which we have been considering, such as the Army, Navy, and Agricultural bills, deal at least largely with things merely material, while this measure reaches the development of the highest faculty of the highest creature of God's creation. It touches the manhood and womanhood of our future citizenship.

I regret that some opposition seems to have developed. The taxpayers and people of the District who, under the prevailing half-and-half plan, pay as a minimum one-half of the amount provided, not contributed by the teachers themselves, have, through the only representatives allowed them, spoken unanimously in favor of the measure. Notwithstanding they are footing one-half the bill, their views as expressed go unheeded apparently by the opponents of the measure. I do not claim that their views should be controlling, but I do claim they are entitled to our serious consideration.

But aside from mere local considerations, this bill in its exemplary feature will serve in some measure as a model bill for the various States, and the time should come and will soon come when all the States will adopt the principle.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has very pertinently opposed the measure on the ground of his opposition to civil pensions generally. I express no judgment as to the soundness of his position. I may, however, say in passing that his position is against the trend of our modern industrial life in that respect. In his own State, in the city of Memphis, there is a large structural steel-fabricating plant which has for a number of years successfully and satisfactorily operated under the plan of a pension system for its faithful but worn-out or unfortunate employees. To abandon it would be a step backward.

But assuming, for the sake of argument, that the gentleman is correct in his position as a general proposition, there are exceptions to all rules. The work of the teacher should not be placed in the same class with that of the clerical worker, the artisan, or the manual laborer, however important may be their service. There is just as much difference between the work of these two respective classes and their results as there is between the delicate mind, which by the deft hand of training and education may be fashioned into a demon or an angel, and the cold inanimate metal upon which the artisan rings his hammer.

The one is dealing for the most part with things inanimate that will at most soon pass away. The other is giving to our children education, permitting them to take with them that which will be at home their friend, abroad their introduction, in solitude their solace, and in society their ornament; that which will chasten vice, guide their virtue, and give a grace and government to their genius. The teachers of this land are engaged in the work of strengthening our children's minds with early application, informing their infancy of the great principles of human action, and in sending them forth to good citizenship in the world, too vigilant to be deceived by its calms and too vigorous to be shaken by its whirlwinds. I repeat, the character and the far-reaching effects of their work upon our citizenship for the generations to come entitle our teachers to a place of importance in a unique class, and the fact that they are retired with a pension, so called, will serve as no criterion for the like retirement of other civil employees or public servants.

But, Mr. Speaker, I maintain with confidence further that this proposal is not a pension in the ordinary acceptation of the word. The teachers of this District are demanding of you no gift. Mark you, this request is being made by those in charge of our schools and having at heart their best interests. They are not coming on their knees asking you gentlemen opposing this bill to measure out to them from penurious hands a reward for long, continuous, and faithful service; but the school authorities, who have at heart only the welfare of the schools and the pupils in attendance, are asking that this Congress, legislating for this the Capital of the Nation, do everything possible to give to the work of the teacher the highest efficiency, and upon that ground, and that ground alone, I am willing to rest the claims of this measure.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] hugs as a priceless incentive to human endeavor "the fear of old age." Indeed that fear has driven many of our teachers, devoted though they were to this most important work, into more lucrative vocations. In order to increase to its highest point the teacher's efficiency, we should remove from her vision the specter, ever rising before her, of that day to inevitably come, when "Age and Want, that ill-matched pair," will descend upon her and demand their reckoning.

We recognize the principle in our retirement provisions for our college professors in our larger institutions from motives of securing more efficiency, and I appeal to you gentlemen of the House, by the passage of this bill applicable here at the Nation's capital and to serve as a model for all of the States, to set in motion an influence that will write over the arches of every school building throughout the land, from the log cabin on the mountain side to the stately structure that is the pride of our larger cities, so that every teacher entering may read, "She who enters here may leave financial care behind." When this is done, and not until then, will our teachers be able to give their best years and their best service in this great, far-reaching cause, and then, and not until then, will our public schools be what they ought to be.

Let the Responsibility Rest Where It Justly Belongs: Upon the Republican Party.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, August 22, 1919.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the fact that the House of Representatives gave up its contemplated recess at the urgent insistence of the President, who requested prompt and adequate action to be taken to stop profiteering and reduce the high cost of living, it is a well-known fact that with the exception of the one day upon which the President addressed Congress, the House under Republican control, between adjournment on Saturday, August 2, 1919, and Monday morning, August 18, 1919, was not able to muster a quorum. Should not the responsibility rest upon the Republican majority?

What the President requested Congress to do was to stop profiteering, through the passage of adequate legislation. He did not request Congress to stop any particular class of profiteering, but to stop all profiteering, so as to reduce the high cost of living to the lowest maximum. Because the control of all legislation is now in the hands of a Republican majority in both the House and Senate, this responsibility naturally rests upon the Republican Party.

It is a well-known fact that there has been greater profiteering in rentals of dwellings than in foods, feeds, or fuel. To give a personal illustration: As I have five children, and neither hotels nor apartments will take children, I am forced to rent a residence. Filling numerous appointments daily with the various departments makes it absolutely necessary that I maintain an automobile. Beginning September 1, 1919, I am forced to pay $62 per month more for a residence and garage than I have paid during the year preceding September 1. Within five blocks of the Capitol, on East Capitol Street, a real estate man has just paid $13,000 for a residence to occupy himself, out of $20,000 profits he admits he made during the war by renting houses and subletting the rooms. Continuation of the Saulsbury law will grant little relief, because in numerous cases the owners of the property are getting only nominal rent, while the great profits taken in are made by the subletters.

Yet the bill reported to the House by the Agriculture Committee, and just passed, contained no provision whatever to stop profiteering on rentals or in any way to relieve this particular item largely responsible for the high cost of living. Who is responsible? Let us see, and then let the country place the responsibility where it should justly rest.

The House Committee on Agriculture, framing and reporting this bill to the House and having charge of its passage, was composed of the following Members, 7 Democrats and 14 Republicans, to wit:

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

REPUBLICANS.	DEMOCRATS.
Gilbert N. Haugen, Iowa, chairman.	Gordon Lee, Georgia.
James C. McLaughlin, Michigan.	Ezekiel S. Candler, Mississippi.
Sydney Anderson, Minnesota.	J. Thomas Heflin, Alabama.

When during the debate of this bill under the five-minute rule for amendments the amendment was considered to prevent further profiteering in rents for dwelling and dwelling rooms, with only 123 Members present and voting, the amendment was passed by a vote of 76 to 47; and after a tellers' vote was demanded by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], the Republican chairman of the committee, in an effort to defeat this worthy amendment, and every available Republican to be found was summoned by the teller bell, the amendment was again passed by a vote of 79 to 63 (p. 4207 RECORD). And when on final passage of the bill in the House a separate vote was demanded on this amendment and the Speaker announced that the "Noes seemed to have it," which would have defeated the amendment, I requested that the vote be taken by the yeas and nays, which would place the responsibility of defeating this amendment by a record vote upon each Member who voted against it, and by arising 60 Members could have forced the yeas and nays, and the Republican chairman and the Republican steering committee made no effort whatever to force a record vote, and only eight Members arose, which was not a sufficient number to require a record vote. It then became apparent that the only way to pass this salutary amendment was for the House to adjourn until Saturday, in order to give the Members absent from the Hall at the time this amendment was presented and argued a chance to learn its import and importance and for the proponents of the amendment to be prepared to force a record vote the next day; hence I made a motion to adjourn, but there was such an indifference manifested my motion was overwhelmingly voted down, and the amendment was defeated without a record vote being taken of 77 to 132, and the bill as passed makes no provision whatever to stop profiteering in rents. Now, who is responsible? Each Member may answer to his own constituents, but the people of the United States are going to hold the Republican Party responsible for this failure.

Dangers of the High Cost of Living.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. J. WILL TAYLOR,
OF TENNESSEE.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, August 22, 1919.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the "high cost of living" problem is the most serious menace confronting this Nation to-day, and upon its prompt solution depend the peace, happiness, and prosperity of our great country. High authorities are wasting precious time discussing a new Utopian discovery in alleged government, commonly denominated a "league of nations," with its Fiume, Shantung, and other foreign diplomatic difficulties, industriously splitting hairs and attempting to draw lines of distinction and demarcation between tweedledee and tweedledum, while the old ship of state, laden with the hopes and aspirations of a hundred million American souls, is rapidly drifting toward the barren rocks of Bolshevism, anarchy, despair, and disaster.

"Having eyes, they see not, and having ears, they hear not," the awful misery and plaint of the people. "Straining at a gnat" thousands of miles away, they swallow camel after camel at home.

With patriotic pride, we are in the habit of declaring that the American soil will not germinate the seeds of Bolshevism, and that there is room in the American atmosphere for but one flag—Old Glory. This is indeed a beautiful sentiment and worthy of every true American citizen, but it is an iridescent and delusive one. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, let us not deceive ourselves. Human nature is the same the world over. The American people would not submit to tyranny and oppression in governmental affairs in the early history of this country; and be not deceived, they will not submit to industrial, commercial, and economic tyranny and oppression now. They are patient and long-suffering, I grant you, but there are times when "patience ceases to be a virtue." Let me admonish you, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, that the proverbial "worm will ultimately turn." High-handed graft and criminal unbridled profiteering in the essentials of life have produced a condition of misery and discontent in this country unparalleled, a condition which will rapidly develop into a panic, followed by grim-visaged revolution, if something is not immediately done to check it and correct it.

CONDITIONS UNJUSTIFIABLE.

During the last two years we have seen the prices of foodstuffs double, treble, and in many instances quadruple. This carnival of high prices has continued unrestricted and unrestrained until one class of our citizenship seems disposed to look upon all other classes as objects for legitimate prey and exploitation. As we behold and contemplate this gigantic panorama of profiteering steadily growing in volume and momentum until it has already assumed grotesque and egregious proportions, we wonder where it will finally end. Mr. Speaker, we frequently hear the statement made in attempted justification of this appalling situation that it is a "condition and not a theory" that confronts us; that the present high prices are due to the cost of production, the scarcity of foodstuffs, and so forth.

Of course, this might be true in a few isolated instances, but a very limited personal investigation will convince anyone of the utter falsity and absurdity of this argument. Why, Mr. Speaker, we are daily hearing of individual cases of "high-price" robbery that make the record even of the James brothers pale into utter insignificance. We have seen the price of shoes mount the commercial zodiac like a meteor, and still an investigation in Boston a few days ago revealed the brazen fact that shoes which it cost $5.50 to manufacture were actually being retailed within 100 yards of the factory that made them at $12—a profit of 120 per cent, if you please. While in my district during the recent recess a constituent of mine told me that a few days before he called a groceryman on the telephone and asked him what he was paying for potatoes. The groceryman replied that he was paying $1 per bushel. My informant said that a few hours later he called at the store of the same groceryman and asked him how he was selling potatoes, and the merchant replied, "Fifty cents a gallon." To use a provincialism common in this country, "Can you beat that?" Four hundred per cent profit! Now, what possible excuse or extenuation can there be for such dastardly, downright highwayry as this?

And still this deplorable condition prevails throughout the length and breadth of this Nation—from the rockbound coast of Maine to the Golden Gate of California. This condition is nothing more or less than a disease, a suppurating cancer gnawing at the vitals of the very body of the Nation, and the sooner the surgeon's knife is applied, and applied vigorously, the better.

Mr. Speaker, I have never believed in the doctrine of Government ownership, and I am still unwilling to subscribe thereto, because, in my opinion, it smacks too much of socialism, paternalism, and kindred governmental diseases. However, I do believe in Government regulation. The Government must protect the weak against the aggressions of the strong and vicious if it is long to endure. It must safeguard and secure even its humblest citizens from those intolerable conditions which, if continued, will Russianize and Mexicanize this fair Republic.

IMPORTANCE OF CONTENTMENT.

The progress and prosperity of a nation depend, in a very large measure, upon the contentment of its citizens. No nation can prosper or advance if its people are unhappy and discontented. Up until a few months ago the American people were the most happy and contented people on earth, and the American Republic was the most progressive and prosperous Nation in the whole world. Our wage earners were being well paid for their labor, and with a full dinner pail and money sufficient to provide the comforts and necessaries of life their families were happy and contented. Capital was receiving a fair return on the investment, and peace, prosperity, and good will prevailed throughout every nook and corner of our great country. Strife, jealousy, and discord, except in remote and isolated instances, were unknown. Capital respected labor and labor accorded to capital its full meed of support and confidence.

THE WAR RESPONSIBLE ORIGINALLY.

The war came on. It became necessary, practically overnight, to raise a vast Army in this country to meet and master that great foe of civilization, the German Kaiser; and in order to perform this great task vast sums of money were expended. Bonds up into the billions were issued by the Government and put upon the market, and money was spent with a lavish hand. The largest Army ever marshaled by Uncle Sam had to be sustained on foreign soil, and our allies, less fortunate than we, had to be fed and clothed. Millions of our boys from the factory and the farm, from every avenue of industry, and from every walk of life, true to the traditions of their fathers and in typical American fashion, responded to the call to the colors and marched forth to the united strains of Yankee Doodle and Dixie to fight, and, if need be, die for the eternal right. As a result of this great draft on our man power and resources our production was necessarily materially reduced. It is a well-known rule of supply and demand that the scarcer the article the higher the price thereof. Money was the most plentiful as well as the cheapest thing we had, and its purchasing power automatically declined as the price of commodities advanced.

WAR PROFITEERING.

Mr. Speaker, there were, perhaps, a few soulless individuals and corporations in this country who took advantage of the war's horrors and difficulties to amass large fortunes. While the average American citizen was making every possible sacrifice to back up the Government in the tremendous task which the war imposed these financial ghouls, with fiendish glee, coined fortunes out of the misery of the people. They were not patriots. They were not even fit to be called American citizens. In the final analysis they were simply traitors and criminals. Judas Iscariot and Benedict Arnold are a credit to these men, who were so sordid and mercenary that they were willing to coin their country's honor and misfortune into filthy lucre.

WAR PATRIOTISM.

Mr. Speaker, never in the history of the world did a people exhibit greater loyalty and patriotism than that shown by our people during this great struggle. In addition to sending their loved ones—the flower of the Republic—to the front to meet the treacherous and blood-thirsty Hun upon a foreign battle field, they denied themselves the customary luxuries and comforts of life, bought war securities far beyond their present means, frequently pledging their future resources, and made every possible sacrifice in the interest of their country and its flag. They willingly, ungrudingly, yea, ungrumblingly, underwent these bitter hardships that civilization, democracy, and our sacred American institutions might triumph. But now that the war has ended and there is no further cause or excuse for extravagant prices they want to return to normal conditions again.

PROFITEER IS A MISNOMER.

As suggested by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] from the great European war just ended has evolved a new order; new conditions have resulted, and along with them new-fangled phrases and designations have been invented. Our forefathers, true to a rugged honesty that brooked no fear, spake "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," without cant, varnish, or persiflage. Instead of referring to a spade as "an oblong instrument of manual husbandry," they called it a spade. Unfortunately, in my opinion, it has been the tendency of their descendants to practice policy and indulge in euphony, which often amounts to hypocrisy, at the expense of reality and truth.

Our forefathers, true to their Anglo-Saxon instincts and vernacular, called a liar a liar, but a few years ago such a creature was referred to as a juggler of the king's English or prevaricator, but more recently he has been spoken of as a camouflager. Our forefathers denounced a man or set of men, either large manufacturers or crossroads merchants, who imposed exorbitant prices on the public as robbers, pure and simple; now they are politely and euphoniously referred to as profiteers. We are entirely too prone to get away from the tenets, habits, and landmarks of our fathers. Of course, we have witnessed great strides in science and invention in the last few years; in fact, we have been utterly astounded by the achievements of the recent past. We have seen the forked stick vanish before the now ordinary turning plow and tractor. We have seen the slow, rattling stagecoach supplanted by the high-powered auto, the fast-flying aeroplane, and the rapid-transit express train, which outspeed the very wind itself. We have witnessed the coming of the telegraph, the telephone, the moving-picture wonder, the talking machine, and all those other marvels of human genius and ingenuity. But, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, has it ever occurred to you that during all this process of development which has staggered man's mental comprehension there has been little or no change in human character and habit. Human nature, like the eternal hills, remains the same, unchanged and unchangeable! "Can the leopard change its spots or the Ethiopian his skin" has reechoed down the corridors of time and stands forth to-day, as when originally propounded 40 centuries ago, a perpetual reminder of man's impotence and God's infinity. As for me I prefer the manners and customs of our fathers. I believe a liar should be called a liar and a thief a thief, and ought to be so branded in the interest of public morals and good society. The man or set of men, the individual or organization that will set a price on an article of food or wearing apparel out of proportion to its cost of production is not a profiteer but a common, ordinary robber, and deserves to be branded and punished as such. When unfortunate men, women, and little children are actually suffering in this great Government—this boasted "land of the free and home of the brave"—on account of the lack of the necessaries of life which they can not obtain on account of unreasonable price it is no time to cavil or indulge in sugar-coated phraseology. Something must be done, and quickly done, to relieve a situation which threatens the very foundation of our industrial, commercial, and economic superstructure.

MANY REMEDIES ADVANCED.

Mr. Speaker, the disease of "high prices" has been diagnosed by various authorities, and a multiplicity of remedies have been suggested and recommended. Some alleged experts charge the cause to a lack of production of life's necessaries. If this diagnosis is correct, the remedy is easy. Some say it is due to overexportation of foodstuffs to European countries. I am inclined to believe that this is the chief cause, and I think that steps should be immediately taken to correct this situation. My God, have we not already done enough for Europe? If the sacrifice of 100,000 brave American lives, the presence and maintenance of more than a quarter of a million permanently maimed and disabled American boys, and a national debt of twenty-seven billions is not a sufficient test and testimony of our interest in Europe, pray tell me what will be sufficient? I pray God that we may get away from the intrigues and entangling alliances of European nations and give some attention to America and American problems. The old proverb, "Charity begins at home," applies just now with compelling force. Feed America first and feed her well, and Europe afterwards, if necessary, should be the American slogan.

INEFFICIENCY OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the inefficiency of the Department of Justice is largely responsible for the evil of high prices. It was in anticipation of this very situation that the act of August, 1917, was passed. This statute prohibits the hoarding and profiteering of foodstuffs and provides very drastic punishment for its infractions. What efforts to enforce this law have been made by the Attorney General's office? Echo only answers. Instead of the Government enforcing this law, we find it the chief violator. Behold the Secretary of War entering into a compact with the packers and big canneries of the country whereby the Government agreed to withhold surplus foodstuffs from the markets rather than demoralize the markets to the prejudice of the high prices fixed by these gigantic corporations. "O consistency, thou art a jewel!"

LABOR SITUATION.

Mr. Speaker, we are threatened with a great labor upheaval in this country, and in my opinion this likewise is no idle matter. The average laboring man absolutely can not provide the necessaries, to say nothing of the comforts, of life for his family under the present system of high prices, and the best citizen will mutiny rather than see his offspring suffer. The labor question and the high cost of living problem are twin sisters. The solution of the one is the satisfaction of the other.

Therefore let us pass this bill and such other legislation as may provide the necessary machinery for the Department of Justice to stamp out this nefarious profiteering in foods and merchandise and place the responsibility squarely up to the Attorney General's office, where it rightfully belongs.

Amendments to the Food-Control Act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDMUND PLATT,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, August 22, 1919.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, there has been a good deal of politics injected into this discussion of the bill to amend the food-control act, but I do not intend to take part in it further than to say that the Attorney General could have done a good deal under the law as it has stood since enactment if he had been alive to the situation. I believe, nevertheless, that the amendment he has suggested, putting in a specific penalty for violation of section 4, which is now only partly covered by the penalties in sections 8 and 9, will strengthen the law. The prevention of willful waste, whether by wholesaler or retailer, seems to me important, and I am not at all sure that the rich farmers of the West—the men who want us to amend the Federal farm-loan act so that they can borrow as much as $25,000 on their farms—ought to be exempted. Every product will sell if prices are right, and every increase of price tends to cut off, and generally does cut off, some of the demand. Unquestionably some dealers keep up prices and take chances of having some of their stuff spoil rather than putting prices down where everything is sure to sell. Now, this amendment will put an extra risk on that by subjecting the dealer, whether wholesaler or retailer, to the liability of a fine if he willfully allows anything to spoil.

I do not think it would have been wise to keep up the cumbersome licensing system which was in effect during the war, and hence I do not think it quite fair to criticize the President for abandoning that system by proclamation last February. With the licensing system, retailers as well as wholesalers could be controlled, but without it the act is not so easy of enforcement, and hence the necessity of the amendments now before us, which should be adopted by a large majority, and I have no doubt will be. I personally take an added interest in this amendment, because I believe I was the first to call attention to the advisability of adding a penalty to section 4 in a brief speech made in the House on Saturday, the 9th. I sent a copy of that speech, with a letter calling attention to it, to the Attorney General, and his recommendation followed a few days later.

I may say again that I do not place much confidence in the various bills to regulate or to limit the time of cold storage. Limits of time imposed by legislatures which had not sufficient knowledge of the conditions of the cold-storage business, or of the periods and peaks of production and of demand, have done harm rather than good. If the law puts a penalty on deterioration and on waste the dealers will take good care not to hold foods too long and will make prices low enough so that everything will sell. The law of supply and demand will then take care of the matter.

When Congress has passed this bill it will have complied with the principal recommendation made by the President in his message of August 8, and I am of the opinion that the House should then take the short recess postponed at the President's request. By so doing we would facilitate the preparation of the necessary railroad and merchant marine bills, on which committees of this House are at work, and also the ratification of the treaty of peace by the Senate, which the President deems so necessary to the complete restoration of normal trade. The important business for the next few weeks will be in the Senate, and the Senate will have no time to take care of the comparatively unimportant bills which will be sent over from the House if we remain continuously in session.

Reckless Extravagance, Wanton Waste, Neglect of Duty, and Incompetency of the Present Democratic Administration are Largely Responsible for the Present High Cost of Living.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. ROBSION,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, August 27, 1919.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am in favor of this bill. High cost of living is the livest question before the American people to-day. It is the question uppermost in the minds of the consumer, the producer, the rich man, the poor man, the voters, and those of us who are charged with the responsibilities of government. Threatened strikes, the demand for higher wages, the nationalization of railroads revolve about and around this important question. The high cost of living condition in the country is seized upon by the disloyal elements of the country, such as the Bolsheviki, I. W. W., and extreme socialists, as an excuse to urge the overthrow of the existing political, industrial, and social institutions of the Republic. Every thoughtful and patriotic citizen is deeply concerned in finding the cause of this condition and more deeply concerned in finding the remedy.

THE DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION LARGELY TO BLAME.

Something like a month ago President Wilson, in letters to some of the leaders in Congress, stated that he desired Congress to remain in session so that he might submit to the Congress a solution for this problem.

Two weeks ago to-day he appeared before the House and Senate and delivered his message in person. From the statements made to us by both the Republicans and Democrats since that time, we are convinced that the President's message was a great disappointment to a majority of the Members of Congress. The President stated that he desired Congress to amend and extend some of the war-time measures to curb the food hoarders and profiteers, and he made the further remarkable statement that we could not hope for much relief from the high cost of living until the Senate should ratify the league of nations and the peace treaty, and undertook to convince the Congress that the failure of the Senate to indorse the league of nations was largely responsible for the high cost of living.

When the President made this statement I was convinced, and I believe that a large majority of Congress was convinced, that the President was undertaking to play politics in this message, and his chief thought was not to relieve the high cost of living, but to use this club to force the Senate and the American people to accept the league of nations, the document that was prepared by Gen. Smuts, of the English Army. We all know that the so-called league of nations has nothing to do with the high cost of living, unless the agreements entered into by the President with the foreign countries to furnish them food has stripped this country of food supplies and thereby increased the prices of food and clothing in this country. The fact is that the average price of commodities and living expenses is not as high to-day as it was a year ago, and there was no league of nations in existence a year ago. The President feels that there is no chance to get this league through, as prepared by Gen. Smuts, of the English Army, on its merits, and he has seized upon the high cost of living issue to force the league of nations upon the American people, but he will find that the American people can not be deceived in this way.

This is not the first time that the President has attempted to play politics with the important questions of the Nation. The chief plank in the Democratic platform of 1912 pledged the Democratic Party to reduce the cost of living. This was the battle cry of the President and the Democratic orators as they went from one end of the country to the other. Mr. Wilson says, "Elect me and the Democratic Congress and we will give you relief." He stated that the Payne tariff law was the cause of the high cost of living. The Democrats had control of the House and Senate from March 4, 1911, to March 4, 1919, a period of eight years. The Democrats have also had the President from March 4, 1913, to the present time. The cost of living has gone up month by month and year by year, mounting higher and higher from the time that Mr. Wilson assumed office, and in that time the Democratic administration has passed no law and taken no effective steps to reduce the high cost of living; but Mr. Wilson comes before a Republican Congress in August, 1919, and very gravely tells the Senate and House the way to reduce the high cost of living is to ratify the league of nations according to the notion of England and other foreign Governments. He is obsessed with the idea of the league of nations. This league of nations will relieve famine, the plagues, droughts, cut down food prices, and perform other wonders. Yes; he tells us that if we ratify the league of nations and give a general warranty deed to Japan for the Shantung steal, and to Italy, England, and France all of the territory that they have taken by force in this war and thereby agree to forever defend that territory so taken and to forever protect these nations with our money and our boys, and bind ourselves to mix up in every brawl and quarrel of the autocratic and despotic Governments of Europe and Asia, and keep a great army of American boys scattered throughout the earth to defend these countries in all of their selfish and jealous controversies, and become the town marshal and the collecting agency for Europe and Asia, that this will reduce the high cost of living.

We do not believe this; neither do we believe that the President believes it any more than he believed in 1916, when he fooled the American people and was elected President on the false slogan "He kept us out of war." The President is simply making a grand-stand play to put life into his so-called league of nations and to cover up the sins of omission and commission of the Democratic Party.

I further charge, with all of the earnestness at my command, that President Wilson and his party, so far as the Government has power to regulate the high cost of living, are responsible for the rule of profiteering and food hoarding that has been going on and the wholesale robbery of the American people by the profiteers.

MR. WILSON AND HIS PARTY HAVE PROTECTED THE PROFITEER AND THE FOOD TRUSTS.

President Wilson and his party went into power in 1912 with the express understanding with the voters of the country that he and his party would reduce the cost of living. They claim that the Republican tariff law produced trusts and great aggregations of capital and in this way the American people were robbed by high prices. Mr. Wilson and his Democratic Congress repealed the Republican tariff law and substituted the Underwood tariff law, but the cost of living has increased. The average prices of the necessaries of life have increased from 100 to 1,000 per cent under the Democratic Underwood tariff law and under Mr. Wilson's administration.

Several years ago a Republican Congress passed a bill that is known as the Sherman antitrust law. Under the Republican administration trusts and combinations of capital to control prices were vigorously prosecuted and convictions obtained. In August, 1917, Congress passed a very severe law against profiteering and food hoarding. Now, what has been done by Mr. Wilson and his Department of Justice to prosecute the food trusts, the profiteers, and food hoarders? Nothing was done until a few days ago. It is shown that the big food trusts have been making 300 to 400 per cent net profit annually. Meat and lard went up from 10 and 15 cents per pound to 50 and 60 cents per pound; groceries, clothing, and other commodities jumped from 100 to 500 per cent through these big food trusts and combinations under the Wilson administration. The Federal Trade Commission brought all of these facts to light, but the Department of Justice under this administration took no steps to prosecute these big, rich criminals and bring relief to the people until a few days ago. What caused Mr. Wilson and his Department of Justice to wake up in August, 1919? It was the action of the Republican Congress.

THE WAR DEPARTMENT PROTECTS THE FOOD TRUSTS.

At this special session of Congress the Republicans appointed a special investigating committee of war expenditures. This committee had officers of the War Department and other persons sworn, and it brought to light the fact that at the time that the armistice was signed, November 11, 1918, we had contracted for food and other supplies for an army of 5,000,000 men. After the armistice was signed the Army was demobilized rapidly, so that there soon accumulated a great surplus of Army foods, consisting of ham, bacon, lard, butter, sugar, eggs, fowls, canned goods, clothing, and other supplies. This ran into the millions of dollars. When this quantity of food accumulated, the question came up as to what disposition should be made of it. Some of the officers of the War Department insisted that it should be sold to the American people. The big canners and food trusts of the country objected to putting this enormous quantity of surplus Army food on the American market. They claimed that this would reduce prices—a thing the American people were entitled to—and would hurt their business, and therefore the leaders in the War Department entered into a written understanding with the food trusts to keep all of this surplus meat, lard, sugar, fowl, canned goods, and other supplies away from the American people. They stated to the big food trusts that they could rest easy, that this food would not be put on the American market. The reason given was that it would reduce prices of foodstuffs and might hurt the big food trusts in the sale of the food supplies that they had on hand. I am stating now what was shown in the sworn evidence before this investigating committee. This surplus food was stored away and piled up and kept so that great quantities of it spoiled. At the Army supply base of food supplies there was enough of this foodstuff spoiled to fill up a swamp near Baltimore, and, as the evidence shows, the swamp was filled up with this surplus Army food that had been kept on hand under this agreement with the big food trusts and allowed to spoil. No free people have ever been given worse treatment than this. The American people's money paid for this Army food, and when this surplus accumulated it ought to have been sold to the American people at cost and not hoarded up to protect the food trusts.

When this State of facts developed the Republicans in the Senate and House introduced and passed a joint resolution to compel the Secretary of War to sell to the American people about $125,000,000 worth of this surplus Army food, and this is the sale of Army food that is now familiar to all of the people in all sections of the country; and for this the American people can thank no one but the Republican investigating committee and a Republican Congress. When this exposure was made Mr. Wilson announced that he would appear before Congress and address Congress on the high cost of living. It was up to him to divert the attention of the American people from the outrageous conduct of the War Department and at the same time to boost the league of nations, and soon the Department of Justice got busy prosecuting profiteers and food hoarders. A profiteer and food hoarder is an enemy to this country. In plain language, he ought to be called a robber and hog. Every one of them ought to be in jail. While I am convinced that the Government has all of the power necessary to stop the profiteering and food hoarding, yet in order that Mr. Wilson and his Attorney General may have no excuse, I am going to vote and to help to pass this bill now under consideration. Since the Attorney General has waked up it has been proved to us that the Sherman antitrust law passed by a Republican Congress years ago and the profiteering and food hoarders' law passed by Congress in 1917 are all sufficient to meet the situation. It simply requires action on the part of the Department of Justice.

WASTE AND EXTRAVAGANCE.

Another great cause for the high cost of living is the willful waste and wanton extravagance on the part of this Democratic administration. No one complains because of the money necessarily spent in the prosecution of the war and for the pay and the protection of the soldiers and their families, but we all have cause for complaint on account of the billions that were wasted. The Government called upon the American people to save and the people responded wholeheartedly and patriotically to this call, but while the people were saving the Government was wasting not millions but billions. Contractors and other persons doing Government work and furnishing the Government supplies became millionaires almost in a night.

Hundreds of millions were spent for aeroplanes that proved to be practically worthless and many of which were later on burned as junk in France; likewise great quantities of automobiles and other supplies were junked and burned. Enormous and unreasonable prices were paid for land, buildings, and other supplies. More than a hundred thousand useless clerks and civil officers were added to the pay roll, costing millions every month. The President himself on his peace-mission jaunt with an army of hangers-on spent millions of dollars, and I am advised that this peace-mission trip cost the United States Government more money than all of the Presidents have received from Washington down to the present time, including all of the peace missions in all of the former wars of this country. The President and his crowd lived like kings and emperors. In order to camouflage all of this reckless waste of the people's money a great deal of fuss was made in the Democratic newspapers about the two or three sheep that the President was keeping in the White House Grounds to show that the President was leading the simple life, when, as a matter of fact, it would take all of the sheep in the great State of Kentucky—meat, hide, wool, tallow, and all—to pay for these trips to Paris.

While the President was in Europe he sent word to a Democratic Congress to vote a hundred million dollars to feed the Bolsheviki over there, and as he claimed to stop the spread of Bolshevism. A Democratic Congress and administration took this hundred million dollars from the American people and bought our necessaries of life and shipped them across the sea. All of this waste and extravagance has piled up the debts and taxes of this country. The American people in order to pay these taxes had to increase the prices of their products and up went the high cost of living.

INFLATED CURRENCY AND EXPORTED FOOD SUPPLIES.

Another great cause of the high cost of living is the inflated currency of this country, and the large exportations of food and clothing and other necessaries from this country to Europe and Asia.

We had loaned to the Allies before the war closed billions of dollars, and we have loaned other billions since the armistice was signed. A few days ago we loaned France another hundred and fifty million dollars, and we are doing the same thing to England and the other countries. Much of this money is borrowed with the idea, no doubt, that it will never be repaid, and I am inclined to think that there is much of it that we will never see again. These foreign nations take our own money and buy up the necessaries of life from this country and send them to Europe and Asia. We have been stripping our own country of food supplies and have nothing but the paper or promise of these nations in their place.

These foreign countries can borrow so easily here and get our food supplies so easily that there is very little inducement for them to return to the pursuits of peaceful industry. The most of them are maintaining large armies and are engaged more or less in helping to promote more than 20 wars now in Europe. While all of us would like to do all that we can for Europe, "we must feed America first." Just as long as we finance Europe disorders will continue. Let them go to work and produce for themselves and let us limit our exports that our own people may not suffer for food and clothing. "He that provideth not for his own household hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel."

The Federal reserve banks of this country, under their construction of the law, have been issuing billions of paper money. It does not have either gold or silver to back it. As we increase the volume of money we decrease its purchasing power and cheapen it. In other words, we are adding to the volume of money in the country and stripping the country of its food products and sending them to Europe. There can be but one result, and that is the high prices for food and clothing in this country, and unless we put on the brakes there will be a crash such as this country has never seen.

Complaint is made in some quarters because of the high wages paid to workmen. We must not forget that the man who gets $5 per day now is not as well off as when he received $2 per day before the World War. Unless we put some limitations upon the issue of paper money and quit stripping our country of the necessaries of life, wages must continue to rise. This orgy of wild speculation is the fault of the present Democratic administration.

BIG ARMY AND NAVY.

Another cause of the high cost of living is the attitude of the present administration toward the Army and the Navy. Mr. Wilson has mixed us up with practically every country of the world. He has agreed that we keep an army in Europe for the next 15 years, and keep a large army in other places. Secretary of War Baker is asking Congress for an army of a million two hundred and fifty thousand men, made up of Regulars and reserves. This will cost the American people more than $1,000,000,000 per year. The Secretary of the Navy wants a large increase for the Navy, and is wanting more than a billion dollars per year. Our annual interest payments will be more than one billion and a quarter, and under this Democratic administration it will take something like seven billion to meet the expenses of the Government this year. When we remember that under the Republican administration the total expenses of the Government, including the Army and the Navy, rarely reached as much as one billion per year, we can realize how heavy the taxes are now, and these taxes must be paid by the producers of the country in a large measure, and the producers in turn must add this to the articles produced, and up goes the high cost of living, and it is largely chargeable to the present Democratic administration.

Before the war we were content with an army of something like a hundred thousand men. If there is any virtue in Mr. Wilson's league of nations in bringing about universal and lasting peace, why does his Secretary of War ask for an army ten times as large, and why does his Secretary of the Navy demand such an increased navy? The Secretary of War demands a universal military training law be passed requiring all of the boys of certain ages of this country to enter the Army and remain therein for a certain length of time. I want to see the American soldiers brought home, the Army reduced, so that these boys will no longer be consumers, but will become producers, and this will help to reduce the high cost of living.

ECONOMY AND INDUSTRY.

Our President and the administration have been spending a great deal of time meddling in the affairs of the people of other countries. We trust that the time will soon come when our President and his administration will devote their time and energies to the welfare of the Republic and join hands with the Republican Congress to do what may be done in relieving the people of this country from the high cost of living and enter upon the work of reconstruction with an eye single to the welfare of the American people. The Republican Congress has already cut down the Army, the Navy, the waste of the Railroad Administration, and saved the country more than a billion dollars. It has restored the wires to their owners, repealed the daylight-saving law, provided the War Risk Bureau with means to take care of the soldiers and their families, and passed the vocational-training law for disabled soldiers and sailors and much other constructive and beneficial legislation. Many other important measures are being carefully prepared for the benefit of the country and the soldiers, and will in due course be taken up and passed by the Republican Congress. It takes time to straighten the tangled condition in which the Republicans found the business and affairs of the country. In the meantime we should all be earnest in our efforts to help build up the country and to emphasize the importance of industry and economy in the daily life of all of our people. This is the best country on which the sun shines. We have more energy, courage, brains, patriotism, and resources than any other country in the world. Let us have faith in our own country and stand firm for American principles and American ideals, and in due course order and peace and prosperity will prevail.

Exemption of Farmers From Operation of Food-Control Act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY T. RAINEY,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, August 22, 1919.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, associations of farmers ought to be exempted from the operation of this act. I expect to vote against any amendment to the bill which will subject them to the penalties provided by this bill. The bill as presented to the House by the committee very properly gives the right to farmers' organizations to bargain collectively in their attempts to dispose of the crops on their farms. It also gives to farmers the right to collective bargaining in making their purchases. Farmers occupy a position in these matters different from distributing agencies. Farmers are skilled laborers, and they are the highest skilled laborers in the world. They are compelled to meet all the vicissitudes of the weather, floods, droughts, heat, and cold, and they take chances in every one of these matters. They are also compelled to contend with grasshoppers, chinch bugs, the gipsy moth, the boll weevil, and other insects, and they take chances in every one of these particulars. No other skilled laborers take any chances at all. If the compensation received by other skilled laborers is not considered by them sufficient, they strike and quit work until they obtain the compensation to which they consider themselves entitled.

The farmer's labor for an entire season in any one or all of his fields may be destroyed by any one of the elements to which I have called attention, but the farmer never strikes; he takes his chances, he submits to his losses, but he keeps on working. There seems to be an epidemic of strikes in the country at the present time. If the farmers of the country were addicted to strikes and should quit work they could still live in comparative comfort but the cities would be destroyed in a few days of time. Our cities are dependent absolutely upon the farms. A strike of farmers would bring economic ruin to cities much more complete than the tie-up of our transportation systems could bring. I contend that farmers' cooperative organizations are by this bill properly exempted from Federal antitrust legislation. An attempt to legislate farmers will simply result in less production on our farms and higher prices for consumers.

Farmers are not profiteers. They have never been profiteers, and they never will be profiteers. We have at least 20,000 war-made millionaires, but not one of them is a farmer. Comparatively few farmers make enough money to become income-tax payers. More will pay this year, however, than ever paid before. The income-tax statistics now being compiled will show that farmers are not and have not been profiteers. They are subject, however, to all the demands and the burdens profiteers place upon them. Some recent statistics collected by the Agricultural Department show that an acre of wheat will not buy this year any more of the things the farmer is compelled to buy than it would buy before the war. The same thing is true with every other crop the farmer raises, as is very conclusively shown by these statistics.

Farmers have been compelled always to sell at prices absolutely fixed by others. Of course, the farmer has the right to collective bargaining and he ought to exercise it in order that the present expensive system of distribution of farm products may be properly regulated and in order that he may receive the wage for his work he is entitled to receive, and he receives his wages for his skilled labor in the price he obtains for the foodstuffs he produces. He ought also to have the right of collective bargaining in the matter of the purchase of supplies, and this bill very properly recognizes that right and protects him in the exercise of it.

The price he is compelled to pay for his supplies is fixed first by the element of collective bargaining which labor units are permitted to exercise when they fix the price they shall receive for their labor and the hours they can be compelled to work. The element of collective bargaining the farmers are compelled to meet in their purchases consists also of the price fixing indulged in by the manufacturers of farm machinery, and all of these manufacturers in some mysterious way always sell at the same price. Much of the farmer's machinery is now manufactured by one or two great trusts, formed by a consolidation of various companies, and the element of competition has in this way been entirely eliminated.

If other skilled laborers are permitted by the law to organize and to bargain collectively in the matter of a price for their labor, why should not farmers, the highest skilled laborers of all, be permitted the right to collective bargaining when they sell their labor? And they are selling their labor when they sell the produce they raise on their farms. For the first time in the history of the country farmers are beginning to organize. Heretofore they have had nothing whatever to say about the price they have been permitted to receive for their produce. That price has always been absolutely fixed by others, and every article of foodstuffs farmers produce has reached the ultimate consumer, and still reaches the ultimate consumer, at a price at least twice as large as the price the farmer receives for it. Somewhere between the farmer, who produces, and the ultimate consumer are the profiteers—the food profiteers—who ought to be reached by this bill. The recent vote on the daylight-saving bill indicates most clearly that legislation against the farmer is not possible at the present time.

We are confronted with most serious problems as a Nation. Railroad employees are demanding that we turn over to them the most complete and the most expensive transportation system in the world—$20,000,000,000 worth of property—and that we compensate the present railroad owners in some way that will be satisfactory to them; and the railroad employees demand that the profits of these great carrying systems of ours be turned over to them; and even this does not mean the end of their demand for wage increases.

If the amount of the profits is not sufficient to meet the demand of the employees, they expect still to be paid out of the National Treasury. If the designs upon the railroads succeed, we can expect the next demand to be the turning over of all our great and highly developed industries to the men who work in them. If the Plumb plan of railroad ownership succeeds, as a matter of course it will follow that the industries must be turned over to the men who work in them. Next will come the assault on land ownership and the demand for the nationalization of land. We will then have firmly established, if this proposition prevails—and it will if the other two propositions succeed—the Russian Soviet system in this country, with its nationalization of women and all its abominable cruelties. The situation is acute. The time has come for farmers not only to protect themselves but to protect the institutions which have made this Nation great.

The armies which have won all of our wars have been armies composed largely of farmers. The army which assembled on the summit of Bunker Hill and repulsed long, red lines of the enemy, while the flames of burning Charleston lighted up the scene, was an army of farmers. The army which spent that long, terrible winter with Washington at Valley Forge was an army of farmers. The armies which compelled the surrender at Saratoga and at Yorktown were armies of farmers. The army which followed Scott in his ever-victorious march from the Texas boundary to the castle of Chepultapec was an army of farmers. The armies of the North and the armies of the South which met in awful battle 60 years ago were armies composed largely of farmers. A careful analysis of the forces which went to France and of all the forces which were trained in our military camps during the great World War will show that three-fourths of them at least were farmers or came from the rural sections of the country, and the great World War could not have been won without the service rendered by the boys from our farms in the camps and on the battle fields of France, and the war, of course, could not have been won in the absence of the tremendous production made possible on our farms by the farmers who remained at home.

Farmers can render still greater service for their country by organizing at the present time in patriotic cooperative farmers' organizations. This bill gives them that right. I expect to vote against any amendment which attempts to submit farmers' organizations to the penalties of this measure.

On H. R. 8624.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OSCAR E. KELLER,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, August 29, 1919.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I believe the House should proceed with the passage of this bill, and I am ready to vote for it so as not to hamper the Department of Justice in its prosecution of profiteers and food hoarders. But there are one or two points I wish to call to your attention while on the subject. The enactment of legislation such as this and the activities of the Department of Justice in driving food onto the market will undoubtedly serve as a check on the constantly increasing prices, either stabilizing them or possibly effecting a decline in some instances. Their work may prove very effective at the present time, but we must also concern ourselves about the coming winter. A certain proportion of the stocks now held in storage were placed there for the purpose of tiding us over the nonproductive period. By forcing all this food onto the market at the present time, allowing it to be purchased by foreign countries and shipped out of the country, we are creating a shortage that will be infinitely more acute four or five months from now and which will cause prices to rise to unprecedented heights. The only remedy for this dangerous condition confronting us is an embargo on exports of all foodstuffs except our surplus, and the fixing of prices thereon, as proposed in House joint resolution 180, which I introduced a few days ago.

I do not believe the President alone should be held responsible for the enforcement of this legislation. By creating a commission composed of Members of the House and Senate, the Cabinet, and the President it will distribute the responsibility and will eliminate to a great extent the element of politics that is bound to creep in.

By fixing the prices on the necessities of life the producer will be given his fair return as well as insuring the consumer against excessive prices. It will eventually drive the profiteer out of business. Wages will immediately be stabilized, and the manufacturer will be placed in a position to know where he is at. The result will be a return to normal and a renewal of the confidence of the entire Nation.

When Millions of Hard-Working Americans Are Receiving Less Than $100 Per Month, It Is Little Less Than Treason for the Four Great Brotherhoods to Threaten to Assassinate the Industrial Life of This Nation by a Nation-wide Strike, When They Are Now Making Enormous Wages.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, August 30, 1919.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on August 19, 1919, I inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (p. 3994) the following letter from Mr. R. L. O'Donnel, general manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad, relative to the maximum wages paid engineers and conductors for July, 1919, to wit:

UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION,
PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD, EASTERN LINES,
OFFICE OF GENERAL MANAGER,
Philadelphia, August 16, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives,
Committee on Education, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with your request of the 14th instant, we show below the highest maximum wages paid to any freight engineer, passenger engineer, passenger conductor, and freight conductor during the month of July, 1919, in the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad, eastern lines:

Freight engineer	$392.35
Passenger engineer	376.85
Passenger conductor	313.90
Freight conductor	308.55

Yours, very truly, R. L. O'DONNEL,
General Manager.

Also, Mr. Speaker, some time ago I asserted that during 1917 passenger conductors received an average salary of from $135 to $165 per month, and that since the increases demanded by them during the war had been granted by the Director General such passenger conductors have been paid an average salary of $180 per month. I also asserted that both conductors and engineers received overtime, which ran their average monthly income up to quite a large sum above their basic salaries fixed by the Director General.

In many newspapers since then, Mr. Speaker, paid mouthpieces for the railroad brotherhoods have denied the facts set forth in the letter of the general manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad and have also denied that overtime to any extent was paid.

It is therefore with a great deal of satisfaction that I now publish the following letter from Hon. Walker D. Hines, United States Director General of Railroads, substantiating the said facts given by General Manager O'Donnel and also substantiating the assertions made by me heretofore, to wit:

UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION,
WALKER D. HINES, DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS,
Washington, August 23, 1919.

Hon. THOS. L. BLANTON,
United States House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have noted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for August 19 your remarks giving the highest maximum wages paid any freight engineer, passenger engineer, passenger conductor, and freight conductor on the eastern lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad in July, 1919.

I find the figures given by you to be correct, but I think you should know the circumstances under which these wages were paid. I inclose herewith a memorandum giving just how the wages received by each of the men mentioned were built up, how many days they worked, and how many days they have been in the service in order to reach the wages given. You will notice that in order to return the amounts given two of these men worked 31 days, one of them worked 29 days, and the fourth worked 26 days; only one of them gets Sundays off. You will also note that each of these men worked overtime—one of them 7.4 hours overtime, the second 121 hours overtime, the third 144.8 hours overtime, and the fourth 159.9 hours overtime, and with one exception the overtime made up a very large proportion of the total wages received. To show that these earnings are not typical, I quote herewith a table showing the average of rates in effect in 1917 and the average of rates in effect following the increase in pay given to this class of employees in April of 1919:

Service.	Occupations.	1917	Now ordered.
Passenger	Conductors	[1] $135.00 to $165.00	[1] $180.00
Do	Engineers	[2] 4.47	[2] 5.79
Freight	Conductors	[2] 4.09	[2] 5.40
Do	Engineers	[2] 5.33	[2] 6.64

[1] Average per month. [2] Per day.

NOTE.—Because of the wide variety of rates it is impossible to do other than show the increases on the average, ignoring both maximum and minimum rates.

In view of the wide comment caused by the earnings which you quoted, I hope you may have the facts presented in this letter also inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Sincerely, yours, WALKER D. HINES.

STATEMENT FROM HON. WALKER D. HINES, DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS, ACCOMPANYING THE FOREGOING LETTER.

AUGUST 22, 1919.

W. S. Laurie, passenger engineer, West Jersey & Seashore Railroad. Entered service as engine cleaner in July, 1894; made fireman in 1895; promoted to engineman June, 1903. Paid $376.83 in July 1919.

58 trips, at $5.68 a trip	$329.44
27 back overs, at $0.16	4.32
22.6 back overs, at $0.71	16.05
166 miles back overs, at $0.0568	9.43
4.2 miles terminal, at $0.0568	.24
2 days, at $6.05	12.10
7.4 hours overtime, at $0.71	5.25
Total	376.83

Runs passenger train from Hillside Station, Philadelphia, to Cape May and return. Paid a minimum day in each direction, distance of 94 miles each way. Worked every day in the month.

R. C. Christy, passenger conductor, Renova, Pa., Pennsylvania Railroad. Entered service in 1890 as passenger brakeman; promoted to conductor in May, 1896:

Made 5,579.6 miles, at $0.04 a mile	$223.18
121 hours overtime, at $0.75	90.75
Total	313.93

Runs passenger train in short-turn run. Worked 26 days in July and laid off one day. Does not work on Sundays. Paid on average of 4 hours 35 minutes overtime per day.

M. McGowan, freight engineer, West Jersey & Seashore Railroad. Entered service as truck watchman April 22, 1884; made fireman in June, 1890; promoted to engineer in July, 1900.

3,198 miles, at $0.0716	$228.98
563.1 miles, at $0.0568	31.98
144.8 hours overtime, at $0.895	131.39
Total	392.35

Runs between Camden and Atlantic City. Laid off two days during month. Averages 123 miles per day.

John FitzGibbon, freight conductor, Allegheny Division. Entered service January, 1887, as freight brakeman; promoted to freight conductor March 26, 1891, and then he went from freight conductor to engineer of steam shovel in April, 1902; freight conductor again in December, 1902:

32 trips, 3,200 miles, at $5.92	$189.44
159.9 hours overtime, at $0.74 an hour	118.33
1.2 hours switching service at end of run	.80
Total	308.57

Runs local between Oil City and Brockton. Made one additional trip in July, account doubling one day. Normally makes 31 trips per month.

It will be noted, Mr. Speaker, that when Director Hines gives the basic salary received by passenger engineers and freight conductors and engineers both in 1917 and now, he does not include their possible earnings for overtime. It will be also noted that in July, 1919, on the Pennsylvania Railroad, eastern lines, in the instances cited by Director Hines, Passenger Conductor R. C. Christy collected for 121 hours overtime at 75 cents per hour for the one month of July; also that Freight Engineer McGowan collected for 563.1 additional mileage at $5.68 per hundred, and also collected for 144.8 hours overtime at 89½ cents per hour, all during that one month of July, making his income for that one month $392.35, as his basic salary was $228.98; also that Freight Conductor John FitzGibbon collected a basic salary of $189.44, also for 159.9 hours overtime at 74 cents per hour, amounting to $118.33, and also for 1.2 hours switching service at the end of a run, making his income for that month of July, 1919, amount to $308.57. You will also note that for this month of July, 1919, Passenger Engineer W. S. Laurie collected a total of $376.83 for one month, and that Passenger Conductor Christy collected $313.93 for this one month of July.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have just received the following letter from Mr. C. W. Galloway, general manager of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, giving us the maximum salaries paid to engineers and conductors for July, 1919, by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, to wit:

(Baltimore & Ohio Railroad (Eastern Lines), Coal & Coke Railroad, Morgantown & Kingwood Railroad, Western Maryland Railroad, Cumberland Valley Railroad, Cumberland & Pennsylvania Railroad, C. W. Galloway, Federal manager.)

BALTIMORE, MD., August 28, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In answer to yours of August 14, addressed to the general manager of Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, I give below, as requested, the highest maximum wages paid to each freight engineer, passenger engineer, freight conductor, and passenger conductor for month of July in the Baltimore & Ohio service:

Passenger engineer	$349.85
Passenger conductor	345.60
Freight engineer	334.60
Freight conductor	305.05

Yours, very truly,

C. W. GALLOWAY.

Again I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the duties of a passenger conductor are neither dangerous nor arduous. He rides in a comfortable coach, protected from inclement weather, eats his meals in palatial dining cars at reduced rates, has porters to wait on him, and auditors to take up the tickets for him; and yet Passenger Conductor R. C. Christy, of Renova, Pa., received $313.93 for the month of July, 1919, from the Pennsylvania Railroad, or rather from the people of the United States, and a passenger conductor on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad received $345.60 for the month of July, 1919.

And it is these men, who receive salaries as high as the governor of Texas and colonels in the United States Army, and more than circuit judges in the State of Texas, who try men for their lives, receive, who are threatening to tie up the railroads of the United States so tight they can not run and ruin the industrial life of this Nation, causing millions of innocent women and little children to suffer cold and hunger this winter, unless their brigandage demands for higher wages are granted by their Government, a Republic, if you please, of 110,000,000 Americans.

Do not forget that Mr. Jewell, their spokesman from the American Federation of Labor, threatened positively that unless granted they would tie up all the railroads so tight that they could not run, and from his association with the war labor lords of Europe, Mr. Samuel Gompers cabled the same message, that the brotherhoods, backed by the American Federation of Labor, would compel Congress and the Government to grant the increases demanded and the adoption of the pernicious, plundering Plumb plan of theft and robbery at the expense of the people.

The President is not going to stand for any more such foolishness. Congress is not going to stand for any more holdups. And last, but not least, the 110,000,000 Americans of this land are getting damned tired of being robbed, and you are going to hear from them if any treason by force is attempted.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. H. GARLAND DUPRÉ,

OF LOUISIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, September 2, 1919.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an address delivered on yesterday by my colleague, Mr. O'CONNOR, before the eleventh convention of the National Federation of Postal Employees in this city.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. JAMES O'CONNOR.

I am glad of the opportunity offered me to address a representative body of the great wage-earning class of the United States of America, for as clerical employees of the United States Government in the administration of the great postal system of the country you are more intimately associated with, connected with, and identified with the toilers of the land than any other organization or association in existence. I am proud of the honor bestowed upon me in according me the privilege of addressing, on this great day in our calendar, one of the clerical forces of the great working world—a body of men and women who gave so many dauntless young Americans to the Army and Navy of the United States of America, an avalanche that overwhelmed the conquering legions of the German Empire and that drove them to headlong defeat at unforgetable Chateau-Thierry, and never to be forgotten Argonne Woods. To the wage earners of the land, I speak through you—speak, exhort, or pray, as you will.

As a representative and patriotic assembly, this mighty organization stands second to none in the world. The blood of its kinsmen in Flanders field, in northern France, the great work of its kinswomen, the Red Cross and kindred organizations at home and abroad, and its own unselfish and unfaltering devotion to the Stars and Stripes by day and night, attest its patriotism.

As a result of incomparable service, diligence to duty, fidelity to the obligations, well indeed might the words that are chiseled out on the granite façade of a noble structure, imperial and splendid in design, and wonderful in its impressiveness, one of the architectural wonders of this Capital of the United States, the city magnificent of the world, be addressed to you:

Messenger of sympathy and love; servant of parted friends; consoler of the lonely; bond of the scattered family; enlarger of the common life; carrier of news and knowledge; instrument of trade and industry; promoter of mutual acquaintance, of peace, and of good will among men and nations.

Having been in my earliest years and young manhood a working boy and then a clerk prior to my entry into the ranks of a noble profession, and before I had begun the practice of the law, I feel that I am at home here among my own, that I am of them and for them, and for that reason I will address you with the ease of a brother and not the exactness, the fear, and the apprehension of a stranger. I feel that I ought to express the few ideas that I have and which if translated into action by you may produce enduring results. I do not, because you have so highly honored me, lay the flattering unction to my soul, that I am any more than an ordinary mortal, who has given the cause of the wage earner some study, who has endeavored to dream out some plan by which to better conditions, to plan out a relief from the difficulties that beset his path, and to efface from his mind, to drive from his vision, the horrid specter of misery in his old age, and to lay the terror that has haunted his very soul in his declining years, and clings to him with ghostlike arms even when he is within the shadow of the grave.

It is said that when Newton was complimented by the great and the salt of the earth, upon his sublimely wonderful astronomical discoveries, he merely remarked in a simplicity that made him almost as great as the laws and planetary movements and stars that he discovered in the gorgeous, winding, milky way, that shines solemnly, serenely, calmly, luminously from the millions of miles high up in the heavens, and where other suns and other worlds revolve in their courses, carrying out the mysterious and unknown purpose of the universe, and acting in accordance with that Divine command issued in the beginning when the Lord first said, "Let there be light, and there was light."

I am only a poor mortal strolling along the shore of the ocean of life and seeing now and then a shell more beautiful than the others that have attracted the gaze of my fellow wanderers. As one of the millions and millions of fellow wanderers, may I not exhibit these shells of truth that I have picked up along that great endless shore, a part of which is allotted to us to wander over on our journeys of life, and as a sincere friend and honest counselor warn, through you, all wage earners against the dangers of a strike. They are inexcusable wastes, frightfully expensive, dissipating your strength, destructive to your energy, exhausting upon your remainders, which may be placed aside for a rainy day, and utterly lacking in diplomacy, strategy, and tactics, inasmuch as they arouse the hostility of innocent third persons who would otherwise sympathize with the wage earner in his reasonable and just demand. I unhesitatingly and without reluctance offer this advice through you, not only because it is good advice but for the reason that we have an available remedy, a mighty and more efficacious remedy, a remedy that has all of the destructiveness of dynamite to our foes, and the force, the power that can elevate ourselves and our standard bearers into the seats of those we will have leveled, and who were once known, as those who sat with the mighty, the controlling influence in the affairs of the country. I mean the ballot, great splendid instrumentality of the free man, for maintaining his rights and attaining his hopes and aspirations, at once the symbol and the sword of liberty and freedom.

Remember that eternal vigilance is the price, the cost of liberty, and just as the sunflower turns and bends on its stem ever to face the sun in its apparent path through the heavens, from the moment of its glorious rise, gilding the mountain tops with its gorgeous golden ray, until its sad and solemn disappearance into the western sky mournfully whispering the death of day, must we ever turn our ear and receptively incline it to the trumpet of history that announces in all its pages in all of its long annals "eternal vigilance is the price of freedom and liberty." Avail yourselves unceasingly, unremittingly, without trepidation, without anxiety or hurry of the great constitutional right; yes, a prerogative higher and above any constitutional gift, for it is inherent in the very idea of the Government, the right to vote. Avail yourselves of the right to assemble peaceably and petition for a redress of grievances, which carries with it the right to memorialize and petition Congress on any matter affecting the general welfare and to have bills representing and expressing the wisdom and judgment of the wage earners, in convention assembled, introduced and a recorded vote forced upon them.

Wage earners will through these means see who are their friends and who are not their friends in the Nation's Congress, and they, the people, for the wage earners are the people, can defeat and relegate to private life any foe that may cross their paths, whether he be a candidate for the Presidency of the United States, the Senate, the House, governor of a State, or mayor of a city. No, my friends, never lose sight of this great force for right. Through it we can make every polling place a battle field and every ballot a bullet, and it is a wise, just, politic, patriotic, incontrovertibly sacred use of a constitutional right. It is the only means by which the general welfare may be attained and the blessing of liberty to ourselves and to posterity be secured. "They have rights that dare maintain them." Exercise your rights at the polls not only to vindicate humanity's great trust but to destroy the enemies that have denied you your just demands. Not only peaceably assemble and petition Congress for a redress of grievances, but go to the two great political conventions through your proper officers and demand a recognition of your rights in their platforms, and if that recognition be refused by either one of the two parties in convention assembled, either Democrat or Republican, beat, destroy, obliterate the hostile party and hurl its presidential candidate and standard bearer to an ignominious defeat.

Do not, I pray you as an earnest advocate and a sincere friend, do not form a third party. It will tend to divide you, and as your enemy's strength is multiplied as yours is divided the resulting weakness to your position would be as certain and inevitable as it is mathematical. You can not fractionize a unit without weakening each of the fractions as compared with the strength of the original unit. See to it that our political battles from the national standpoint are fought out between two parties only and no more. Then your vote can determine the contest as you would have it determined, and just as certainly as does the night follow the day this means that with unanimity of action and a concert of purpose you can control the Government, and through that control determine and regulate its policies, foreign and internal, and compel the Cæsars of big business and the Catalines of wealth, the captains of industry, and the kings of finance, the autocrats of commerce to use their great natural and acquired powers in a way that will make for the general good. Then any arbitrary action upon their part will be viewed by the wage earning, Government controlling class, as a violation of the trusteeship, requiring a revocation of the trust, and penalties that may take them from among the mighty on the high places and place them among the lowly in a very obscure and lonely environment or situation.

In this connection, my friends, I can not do better than invite your attention to an interview with Cardinal Gibbons, one of the great instructive minds and conservative forces and benevolent and pious dispositions in the world to-day, one who in his eightieth year looks with confidence and serenity to a great future for himself in a land that is fairer than this, in the great home of the Father whom he has served so faithfully and so well—a great American prelate and churchman who has served his God, his country, and the world, who loves and who will go out to that other life with the hope of better days for his country and a sad and affectionate farewell to all of his countrymen and countrywomen. Listen to this grand old man, who speaks to us in all of his wisdom in the Times-Picayune, published in the city of New Orleans, a city well beloved by that venerable figure, whose mild eye and gentle voice have endeared him to the hearts of millions in all parts of the world. As well as I can remember, here are his words, substantially:

"Our political rights are secure, and no more may be desired in that direction than a proper exercise of those rights. This is necessary not alone in the interest of the wage earners and those without fortune, but in the interest and for the protection of those with large fortunes, and who if unchecked may become a danger and a menace to themselves and capital and labor. By the exercise of the ballot we can procure that government which Lincoln had in mind when he spoke of a government for the people, of the people, and by the people."

My countrymen, that is the government we want—a government that can thunder into the ear of the greatest that he is not beyond its power, and can whisper into the ear of the least and lowliest among us that he is not beyond its care—a government that will exact from the men who have been favored by nature and by art with the power to acquire dominion over wealth and authority and vast enterprise the full meaning and the entire responsibility that lies within the splendid maxim, "Noblesse oblige" (rank imposes obligation). Exercise again, I say, my fellows and wage earners of the land, the right to vote. Neglect not the ballot. It is the palladium of your liberties—

> The rainbow to the storms of life,
> The evening beams that smile the clouds away.

Use the ballot and vindicate the principle of human existence—that every child born into the world has the right to grow up decently and to obtain the same education, though he be born in a hut, as the child of the palace, born with a silver spoon in his mouth and rocked in a golden cradle. Great Nature did not intend that there should be any difference among its children. It is man-made law and man's "inhumanity to man" that have made the change. Mankind can not and will not stagger along much longer on these uneven and unequal roads. We are going to place truth on the throne. We are going to place wrong on the scaffold. Exercise your rights, I reiterate, and right will then be enthroned and take the place of might. That is the way, and the only way, by which to solve, adjust every problem that demands and presses for solution to-day. The just demands of the wage earner to live honestly and decently in the land of his birth must be gratified. He must be given an opportunity to educate his children, to make them splendid American men and women, the pride and glory of the land, that will then be accurately known as the land of the free and the home of the brave—free politically, free religiously, free industrially, and free commercially—the patriot's dream come true of the bondman coming to a land flowing with milk and honey. Strike for your homes, your hearthstones, your altars, with the mightiest weapon ever placed in the hands of a freeman—the ballot! Strike again and again with that symbol of liberty and all questions will be settled right.

However the battle is ended, though proudly the victor comes,
With fluttering flags and prancing nags and the echoing roll of drums,
Still truth proclaims this motto on letters of living light,
No question is ever settled until it is settled right.

Oh, man bowed down by labor; oh, woman, young yet old;
Oh, hearts oppressed in the toilers' breast and crushed by the power of gold,
Keep up your weary battle against triumphant might—
No question was ever settled until it was settled right.

Inadequate Pay in Postal Service.

REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD J. KING,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, September 2, 1919.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to introduce in the RECORD four letters and three specimen questionnaires showing the inadequacy of the pay in the Postal Service. The letters and questionnaires are as follows:

OAK PARK, ILL., August 2½, 1919.

Hon. E. J. KING,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed find questionnaire, which is self-explanatory. In addition I will state that I was appointed as a substitute railway postal clerk in March, 1911, and served as such, at a salary of $800 per annum, until July 12, 1912, when I was appointed as a regular clerk. I continued to serve in a class C railway post office until March, 1917, at which time I was receiving a salary of $1,300 per annum.

March 12, 1917, I received notice from my chief clerk that my assignment on the Chicago & Omaha railway post office would cease on that date, and ordering me to report March 15 for duty in the Northwestern terminal in Chicago, Ill. Obedience of this order necessitated my moving to Chicago, which I did at a cost of $380. This amount covered all expenses incurred in moving, including hotel bill for my wife and myself until May 1, 1917, the flat which I had leased not being vacant until that time.

I reported for duty at the Chicago terminal as ordered and worked there until April 1, 1917, when I was again assigned to duty on the road and worked there until June 28, 1917, when I was again assigned permanently in the terminal, beginning work at 10.30 p. m. June 30, 1917. In this connection I will make an explanation as to classes of railway post offices.

The railway post office on which I had been running was a class C railway post office, maximum salary at that time being $1,500 per annum, my salary being $1,300 per annum. The terminal to which I was assigned was a class A railway post office, maximum being $1,200 per annum. My promotion to $1,400 per annum came due July 1, 1917, but by reason of being assigned to a class A railway post office, when said promotion came due I did not receive it, losing out by the narrow margin of 1 hour and 30 minutes.

In addition to this expense and loss of my promotion I will state that my wife underwent a surgical operation late in 1915 which cost me $400, and since that time she has been in very poor health. You can readily see that the salary I was receiving at that time was insufficient to meet my actual living expenses, to say nothing of a $400 doctor bill, $380 expense of moving, and $100 loss of promotion; the last two amounts could probably be entered as "economy in the Postal Service."

In April, 1918, I was appointed to the Chicago & Evansville railway post office, and am still working on that line. July 1, 1919, all postal clerks received an increase of $200 per annum, which meant an increase of $200 to all clerks who had reached the maximum grade. To clerks who had not reached the maximum grade it meant an increase of only $100, which I will explain.

In 1912 Congress passed what was known as the reclassification act. The provisions of this act gave all postal clerks a promotion carrying an increase of $100 per annum—provided their services merited such promotion—until they had reached the maximum grade in the railway post office to which they were assigned. The bill allowing the $200 increase above mentioned also contained a provision suspending the reclassification act of 1912, thus depriving lower-grade clerks of the $100 promotion which they had earned, and in the name of right and justice they should have received. For the present fiscal year all postal clerks were advanced one grade, or $100 per annum, and the reclassification act was restored.

The reclassification act requires that clerks perform one year of satisfactory service in their grade before being promoted to the next higher grade, so you will readily see that no benefit can be derived from the restoration of the reclassification act until after July 1, 1920.

Summing it all up, clerks in the maximum grades have received an advance of $200 and clerks in the lower grades have received an advance of $100 in the last four years, which amounts to an increase of approximately 12½ per cent to meet an increase of 100 per cent in cost of all living expenses, as given by Government statistics. An article appearing in the Chicago Tribune August 23, 1919, states that the wage scale of 58 trades and occupations in the District of Columbia had increased 71 per cent from May 13, 1913, to August 9, 1919.

I have no children, and you will note that I have stated that my salary should be $3,000 per annum, which I figure as follows:

Government experts have stated that an ordinary family should have $2,500 per annum in order to live according to the American standard of living. I have spent over eight years in the Postal Service and have never saved a dollar nor squandered one. Accepting $2,500 as the standard and allowing $200 per annum for emergencies, such as sickness, loss of time, and a little recreation, I could save $300 per annum. I am 43 years of age, and at the end of 15 years I will be 58 years old and will have saved $4,500, with which I might buy a very modest home. At the end of the next 15 years I would be 73 years old and have another $4,500.

Thirty-eight years' service under the physical and mental strain which postal clerks must undergo would render me unfit for further duty, and I would be relegated to the scrap heap. The allotted time of man is three score years and ten, but if by reason of strength I might live four score, I would have the income from $4,500, which if invested at 6 per cent would give me an annual income of $270 to keep me the last seven years of my life. Just about that time I would be ready to "wrap the drapery of my couch around me and lie down to pleasant dreams." Then I could go before the final judgment seat with the glorious consciousness that I had done my full duty as an American citizen by having spent 38 years as a faithful and underpaid servant of the greatest country on the globe.

The prompt and efficient handling of all classes of United States mail is of vital importance to the business world, and is one of the most important branches of the Federal service. The men who handle this mail are trained experts in their line and must have more than average intelligence and physical endurance. Young men possessing these qualifications no longer come into the Postal Service because the salaries and possibilities of promotion offered by commercial lines are much more attractive than those offered by the Government. What kind of Postal Service will we have 10 years hence if conditions are not improved?

In view of the facts above stated, I earnestly request that you give your undivided support to the following bills:

Zihlman bill, H. R. 8537, and the Lehlbach bill, H. R. 3149.

Very respectfully,

ALBERT A. SUTTON,
412 North Taylor Avenue, Oak Park, Ill.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA,
TERMINAL R. P. O., August 24, 1919.

Hon. E. J. KING, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I do not wish to take up your time with details concerning my difficulties since entering the Railway Mail Service; however, I wish to say that I am supporting a family of four children, and in order to keep these little tots from want I have borne personal hardships almost unbelievable.

At the present time my hours of employment at the terminal are from 3.20 p. m. to 11.40 p. m., and in order to meet expenses I am doing outside work from 8.30 a. m. to 2.30 p. m. These long hours of daily toil are commencing to undermine my health and I have no time at all to spend with my family. I am always fatigued and labor with great difficulties to meet my examination requirements.

Besides, Mr. KING, in submitting my figures to you on inclosed form, I also wish to call your attention to the fact that I am still indebted to the amount of $88.50 doctor's bill at Des Moines, Iowa, and still owe $60, with interest, for money borrowed at Des Moines to move my household goods to Council Bluffs, Iowa, when transferred a year ago last March. The figures I give you on inclosed form are based upon strict economy, and all that I ask is a wage to meet all ordinary expenses and permit me to spend a few hours of rest and recreation with my family. I shall be pleased to furnish you with detailed information if you so desire.

Very respectfully,

A. TINFEL.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, August 23, 1919.

Hon. E. J. KING, M. C.

SIR: I entered the Railway Mail Service in 1913; served as substitute until December 1, 1917, when I was forced to resign because of the fact that I was assigned to run going through Kansas, being away from home 28 hours, spending $1.25, getting back 30 cents. However, because the country was entering war I remained in the Railway Mail Service as a noncertified clerk, stationed in the Council Bluffs Terminal until the 1st of September, 1918, at which time I reentered the Railway Mail Service, was regularly assigned to Council Bluffs Terminal, and at which place I now am working from 3.20 p. m. to 11.40 p. m, which enables me to work four or five hours a day at other employment which is required to support my family, but impairing my efficiency in the Railway Mail Service.

Although entering the service in 1913 and serving all but eight months of that time as regularly assigned clerk, and that eight months required to perform the same distribution as I am now, I still receive the entrance salary of $1,100 per annum, although I have never had a great number of minus points charged to my record. Any high-school boy receives the same salary at his first day's service, although I have a working knowledge of about four States.

Respectfully, yours,

E. E. BUTLER.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE,
OFFICE OF CHIEF CLERK,
Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 23, 1919.

Hon. E. J. KING, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am submitting herewith a questionnaire that was handed to me, which I have properly filled out to the best of knowledge with records obtainable, and I trust the same will receive your immediate attention, and that you will kindly do what you can in bringing about some immediate relief regarding a substantial salary increase for postal clerks.

In connection with same I would like to state in brief my experience since appointed in the Railway Mail Service. You will please note that I have served over five years, dating from my appointment in June, 1914. During this period I have been subject to the same study requirements as all clerks are and have been required to perform the same duties also, but up to July 1, 1919, I have always been drawing the entrance salary which is being paid to new substitutes and uncertified men and boys of 16 years of age, that come and go continually, who have no knowledge of distribution or other duties required of Railway Postal Clerks, a great deal of which can not be obtained without actual experience.

I have taken 30 examinations on the schemes of distribution and train connections of five different States and the postal laws and regulations governing the Railway Mail Service, and have always passed with marks to be proud of; therefore I believe a clerk of my experience is worth more to the Post Office Department than one without it.

If you remember, an act was passed by Congress March 3, 1917, providing for the regular appointment of substitutes after serving 313 days, which went into effect July 1, 1917. Now, substitutes entering the service are protected by that law, so they won't be compelled to serve in grade 1 for five or six years. This law also provided that credit should be given for service performed prior to the approval of same.

The general sentiment is that this law was not administered as Congress meant it should be. So that left us as grade 1 unassigned clerks July 1, 1917, merely another name for a substitute. I state "us," because mine is not an isolated case. There at least eight clerks in the same assignment in which I am who can practically duplicate my experience as regards time in the service, and there are many others all over this part of the United States, mostly in terminal railway post officers, as such clerks were forcer to take terminal appointments.

I therefore ask you, in behalf of other clerks as well as myself, to help promote legislation along lines which will give all clerks with experiences similar to that which I have mentioned, full credit, both in grades and in back pay, for time in which they have served the United States Government in the capacity of railway postal clerks, which would put us in at least grade 4, in place of grade 2, to which we were promoted July 1, 1919.

There is a bill before the House, known as H. R. 8537, introduced by Mr. ZIHLMAN, of Maryland, which provides for a reasonable increase in salary of postal workers, and I will therefore take the pleasure to ask your support of this bill or a similar one.

We are a class of experienced, well-trained men, who have no thought of bringing on a strike or otherwise trying to gain any selfish demands by force, but we are surely very much underpaid, and are actually in need of immediate relief this fall.

If I have not made this statement as clear and precise as you would like, I would be glad to furnish you with any information I can dealing with facts regarding the present conditions in the Railway Mail Service of to-day.

Hoping that this will meet with your honest approval,

I am, yours, respectfully,

RICHARD C. SUTTON.

SPEECH

OF

HON. PERCY E. QUIN.

OF MISSISSIPPI.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 9, 1919.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5227) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I have enjoyed the discussion here, but I am sorry, indeed, that the printed hearings are not before the House so that every Member might apprise himself of what was stated by the Secretary of War, the Chief of Staff, and the chiefs of the different bureaus.

Every man here knows my position as a member of this committee. I never have approved of a big Army in peace times. At the last session of Congress, when the gentleman from California was pleading for 509,000 men and 29,000 officers, I took the stand that 175,000 enlisted men was all that this country ought to have in the professional Army. Members seem to say that this means a different proposition. If you will read the hearings, every single one of them has set out the entire organization—engineers, the aircraft boards, all the organizations—509,000 enlisted men and 28,654 officers. You need not fool yourselves about it, and when the motion is made I am going to vote for the smallest army you can put on the country. Another thing, some eloquent gentlemen, the able gentleman from Virginia on our committee, said that some soldiers might not be paid. He need not worry himself about their not being paid. I would vote the last dollar out of the Treasury to pay our brave boys in the service. You have across the water and in this country something like 1,400,000 men.

The members of the Military Committee who talked with the President in Paris are authority for the statement that no soldiers will be left in Europe.

According to what is testified, if the gentlemen have been properly informed by the President of the United States, not a soldier would be left across the sea. The evidence before this committee shows every one of them can be back here, including the army of occupation, by the last of September. If you have them all back in the United States, why, then, have these 400,000 men and also carry the burden of officers on the taxpayers of this country? If the President told the gentlemen that, and I know he did, because they would not misstate the fact, he means to take every one of these soldiers from Coblenz and the occupied territory of Germany, and I hope to God he gets them back here at once.

Some have complained that the War Department is not doing its duty in getting them back. We must not say that when we know that the War Department, in fact, has brought soldiers back as rapidly as any sane man under the circumstances believes it could bring them. They brought back 343,000 soldiers last month. They have taken all these ships, some of the Holland ships, and have engaged them in that work, together with all these little ships in the service of the Navy, in bringing our soldiers back. They will get the soldiers back, and let us cut the number down in this appropriation to as small as is compatible with safety for the country. When the proposition comes up for the average number to be 300,000, I shall vote for it, because if they can have all of them back from Europe by the last of September, then up to the end of the next fiscal year, the last day of June, 1920, that will be a big average—300,000—together with the proper quota of officers. Of course, the last month there may not be over 100,000. We have, under this very appropriation, put in 106,000 men, under the national-defense act, to go into the National Guard. And, by the way, there ought to be a strong National Guard in every State of this Union, because the National Guard is for the purpose of protecting the States, keeping down crime, keeping down insurrection, and keeping down those who may rise up to override the law and destroy human life and property. For that reason I hope this Congress will back up to the minute and on the item for the National Guard the provision under the national-defense act of 1916, which gives to every State in this Union a guaranty of its safety, in a force that can be brought into action to repel crime, without going out and getting an army from the National Government to go into a State.

Our attention has been called to what has been accomplished in Europe. That is all very true. Great things have been accomplished by the American Government and the Army in France and elsewhere. I had the honor of seeing some of the work of the soldiers. I know no man can talk too much about the heroism and bravery of those boys all the way from Chateau-Thierry clear up to the Argonne and Mont Faucon, but the time has come now when we are at the peace table; the time has come when I want to see something accomplished for the United States of America. I think the time has come when we should sweep a little bit around our own door. You have these bomb throwers coming right under the shadow of this Capitol and throwing bombs at the home of the Attorney General and other high officials of the Government. You have this organization, you have an element endeavoring to disrupt society, you have permeating throughout the United States some elements who want to overthrow organized government, and we should endeavor to have those things gotten rid of and accomplish what ought to be done for the best interests of the United States right at our own door.

Who is doing anything to reduce the prices? The cost of living is too high for the poor people to be able to get enough to eat and wear. Take the price of shoes, so devilish high that you have to pay $12 or $14 a pair for them. Who is talking about that? I have not heard any statesman rise up here on either side and talk about that. Who is talking about holding down the expenses of the Government? I must say that I heard a little talk in the committee room when we were considering this bill, the first I had heard in five or six years, unless I heard somebody, like myself, up here talking on this floor. [Laughter.] For they call us demagogues when we are trying to hold down expense, and here is a good opportunity to take out your knives and go after it on this military bill. Now is the time for all you people to act who want to hold down the expenses, and you can do it with your votes.

And the way to do it is to cut down this military appropriation bill after the war is over. These gentlemen who are in charge of the bureaus of the War Department are endeavoring to hold together a great organization that will continue a burden of $1,000,000,000 a year and more and you sit down and say, "I think we might not have the money to pay some soldier." Of course, if you are going to give them $800,000,000 or $1,000,000,000, all these high sums, we are going to have soldiers on the pay roll. If you do not put in some kind of a law and say they shall be demobilized—and the American Army can be demobilized when the President says so, and I am in favor of letting him have a say, and we can by this appropriation bill hasten that day. The American Congress holds the purse strings and it is time to act. Let us consider what we are going to vote on, and if you people propose to vote to keep 225,000 soldiers in Europe, Asia, and Africa you will have a chance to do that in the future. The question at stake now is what you are going to do about this appropriation that is before the House. They wanted about $1,200,000,000, and now this committee has brought it down to $800,000,000, and I want to say let us cut it down from that so it will be within all bounds of reason——

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I can not yield; I have such a limited time. Another proposition that strikes me is that if anyone is thinking about mandatories and does not know where they are going to have any soldiers, I say let them read the hearings. One gentleman in a high place stated there would be 225,000 soldiers kept over there. He did not say how long. Of course, he does not know how long.

The gentleman from California said that there would be a lot of them kept over there for 10 years under the treaty he read. How would men vote on a proposition in the future? We are now considering a concrete proposition in which every man in the United States is interested. They all want their boys back home. [Applause.] I do not care how patriotic a man is, he says, "I want my boy back home as soon as he can be brought there." They are willing to do their duty, and they feel like they have already fulfilled their contract. All of us know some soldiers are bound to be kept over in Germany until the President finally determines what he will do and what his obligations are to the peace conference. Every one of us knows what that is. I think we ought not to have any but a small number of soldiers of the Regular Army left over there now. Somebody must be kept there, and these gentlemen up here testify that 225,000 soldiers are going to be kept there. I am against that proposition. How do you stand on it? Then, if they are going to keep 225,000 there, do you believe, if they have an army of 400,000 they are going to take them away any earlier?

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I can not yield. Do you believe you are going to get 225,000 soldiers out of Europe by voting for 400,000 or 500,000 here now? You can not fool the folks back home. There is no use talking about it. You can say, "I am for getting the army back," but, by the Eternal, if you vote to put 400,000 men in, and all of these officers, you are voting to keep those boys in Europe, and the folks back home are going to know about it. You had just as well see now that if you want the American Army demobilized and sent back to their families, to the farms, to the workshops—sent back to the useful occupations and gainful pursuits—you have a chance to do it by a vote on this very bill. When these hearings come up in printed form, which the chairman said would be here, you can see as plain as the eye can read that the War Department and these bureaus intend to keep up a 509,000 organization, and 24,000 of those in the air department alone, and the officers over them. Now, do you want to go before the country and say, with that kind of evidence before you, "I thought I was voting to get the boys back home as fast as I could"? When you cast that vote you are going to vote for all these boys to be kept in the camps just as long as possible. For my own part, I am voting to get them out of there and build up this National Guard and have the small army which is necessary to protect this Nation, and then we are safe. I thank you, gentlemen. [Applause.]

Increased Compensation For Postal Employees.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
OF MASSACHUSETTS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, September 4, 1919.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, it is very apparent that the amount designated in this resolution as increase of pay for employees of the Postal Service is not sufficient to meet the increased cost of living to these employees and their families. It is easily demonstrated that the value of the dollar in purchasing power has depreciated much more than this proportionate increase.

I have always considered that the country has been fortunate in the class of men willing to accept postal positions at the rates of salaries paid by the Government. My correspondence shows that many men are disposed to leave the service for more remunerative positions to the detriment of public business. They can not be blamed for this stand with prices for the necessities of life as high as they are to-day. I have had considerable experience with the various kinds of postal employees and have always found them to be men of character, the best of habits, and regularity in work.

We have not shown our appreciation of their faithfulness sufficiently in the way of remuneration. In a subject as far-reaching as salaries of this kind there must necessarily be some scientific study of the matter, and it is therefore proper that the commission authorized by Congress should be given the opportunity to thoroughly investigate the question. It is clearly understood that the rate suggested in House joint resolution 151 is only temporary and that the minimum increase following the report of the commission would be higher than this amount.

The postal employees are naturally disappointed that the amount is not larger. In behalf of the men in my district, I would say that I hope the study of the conditions by the commission will lead it to report an increase more in proportion to the value of the men's service and the proportionate rise in their living expenses at the present time. I am most heartily in favor of a greater advancement of pay than the present resolution calls for.

I am very glad to add extracts from various statements submitted to me by postal organizations and employees in my district:

POSTAL CLERKS' PETITIONS.

It is with a feeling of deep solicitude that I write to you in behalf of the clerks of this office. The subject of this letter is of paramount importance to the postal employee, who through the trend of circumstances has been brought face to face with the bleak realism of the high cost of living. While to many of us the salary and prices of five years or more ago would be welcomed with joyous hearts, we know that it is improbable that such a state of affairs will again exist for a long time. Therefore our only salvation is in an increase in salary to meet the advanced cost of all the absolute necessities of life. In taking this matter up with you we are aware that we are dealing with one who has always been the friend of the postal employee and who is no doubt working always for our interest without solicitation on our part.

From reports issued by the United States Department of Labor you are aware of the decrease of the purchasing power of the dollar and the increase in the commodities of life. The postal employee should receive a salary that would allow him to live according to the American standard, that would permit him to own a home and rear a family. If the future of the country is to be maintained on a high basis, it is through the agency of educational advantages, which will not be open to the families of the postal employee without proper income.

RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS.

At a mass meeting of more than 350 postal employees in this section in the chamber of commerce room a week ago it was realized that no immediate relief can be expected from the postal commission appointed by Congress to consider salaries. With cost of living mounting daily, and the utterly inadequate salary of postal employees, will you kindly endeavor to help secure an immediate substantial increase for all postal employees, retroactive from July 1, 1919?

LETTER CARRIERS.

The present salary does not allow a reasonable living for a family of four in comparison to the cost of living in this city. What are the post-office employees to do? The logical answer seems to be "get into a more remunerative employment," but, alas, most postal employees have remained in the service so long that they are unfitted for other employment; and even if the present employees were to seek other means of a livelihood, their places would have to be filled by others, and the same situation would still exist or the efficiency of the service would be greatly lowered. Perhaps the so-called inefficiency we hear about can be traced to this very reason, because it is a well-known fact that men are leaving the service continually on account of low wages, and the service is no longer attractive to young men for the same reason.

As the proposed $150 increase does not cover the cost of living to-day, we request you to use your influence to secure a more favorable increase. According to the report issued by the Department of Labor for July, 1919, since 1907 (when our salaries were adjusted) the cost of $1 worth of foodstuffs has risen to $2.33 and the cost of $1 worth of clothing has risen to $2.26. With the proposed $150 increase, the value of our $1 has risen to $1.375.

We, the undersigned employees of the ———, Mass., post office, desire to protest through you against the exceedingly small increase in wages afforded by the measure reported by the House Post Office Committee. * * * A new standard of living is here, and we must abide by it when paying out the money we earn. There is absolutely no just reason why our positions should not be made to fit the new standard. If the cost of living should be reduced we are willing to go back to the old standard, but feel we should be given enough to live on while passing through this stage.

THIRD AND FOURTH CLASS POSTMASTERS.

In behalf of the third and fourth class postmasters of the State of Massachusetts I do request that you will specifically include the third and fourth class postmasters in the Senate joint resolution 84, to provide additional compensation for employees of the Postal Service. These postmasters are now the greatest sufferers of any class in the Postal Service.

As an illustration, my office is one of the larger fourth-class offices. My compensation, including the money-order fees and an allowance for separation of mail for an inland office amounts to $1,100. From this I have to pay for rent, fuel, clerk hire, and lights $424 a year, leaving for my work the sum of $676 for the year.

The third and fourth class postmasters will appreciate it if you will use your influence with the Post Office Committee to get third and fourth class postmasters included and the resolution favorably acted upon.

These extracts plainly illustrate the situation in which the postal employees find themselves at the present time. These men are deserving of every consideration possible consistent with the remuneration paid men of equal knowledge and skill in other branches of employment. Individually and collectively they are too valuable as employees of the Government to have them consider securing other situations, and they should receive such salaries as will permit them to live properly in their respective spheres.

National Federation of Post Office Clerks.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLIFFORD IRELAND,
OF ILLINOIS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, September 6, 1919.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an address delivered by Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN, a Representative in Congress from the State of Illinois, before the National Federation of Postal Clerks on Labor Day.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. MARTIN B. MADDEN, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF ILLINOIS.

I am very glad to be here and to say a few words to you. I have been identified with the activities of the Post Office Department for some time, until I feel now as if I was a postal clerk. The only difference between me and the rest of the postal clerks is that while I seem to be getting a big salary I do not get anything; I give all mine away; and while the other fellows seem to be getting small salaries, they have difficulty in living. I realize that.

We want to recall the fact that about 2 years ago this country went into war, and prior to the entrance of the United States into war the entire cost of operating the United States Government for the first 143 years until the day that war was declared amounted to $25,000,000,000. Since that time, on the 6th of April, 1917, when war was declared, we have appropriated for the war and all other activities of the Government $51,500,000,000, considerably more than twice as much as it cost for the first 143 years. We had 4,600,000 men in the actual military service of the country. In all the countries that were engaged in the war there were over 200,000,000 people engaged in producing war materials, and this 200,000,000 people were taken out of other kinds of production. Fifty-six million men were in the active army from the beginning of the war to the close, and this 56,000,000 men were destroying the things that the other 144,000,000 men and women created. The result of this condition is that there is a world shortage of everything.

In addition to being a world shortage of production in agriculture and other products, the finances of all the countries of the world have become very much mixed up. We owed at the beginning of the war $965,000,000 interest-bearing debt, and our interest obligations annually only amounted to $22,000,000. The cost of maintaining the American Government before the war was about $1,500,000,000 a year. The total bonded debt of the United States when we complete the payment of all the war obligations will be about $34,000,000,000 against $965,000,000 before the war. The annual interest obligations against the Government of the United States will amount to about $1,500,000,000 a year from now on. That is as much or more than it cost to run the entire Government before we entered the war. The obligations upon the backs of the taxpayers are greater than they ever were before and the cost of living has increased almost twice since the war began, so we realize how difficult it is for all of us to meet the obligations that are imposed upon us with the income that is placed at our disposal. We have a more difficult task to perform now to adjust the questions that are before us than the task of winning the war was, and the task that is before us to-day is one which calls for the best thought of every man, woman, and child in America. We have to learn how to economize. We were perfectly willing to make any kind of a sacrifice to win the war. We won it, and many of the families throughout the United States made wonderful sacrifices in blood and treasure. Upon all alike the responsibilities have come. These responsibilities have laid their hands heavily upon every household. Our responsibilities are not yet over. We are sitting on a tinder box; it is liable to explode at any time if we are not conservative in our judgments. We need the stabilizing force of every man and every woman in America to bring us back to normal conditions. Normal conditions are bound to come, but they can not come in a single day.

I was reading the history of past wars yesterday for a while when I had nothing better to do, and I find that the conditions which prevail throughout the United States and the world to-day are not as bad as they were immediately after the Civil War. The thing that cost then, in 1864, the equivalent of $390, costs only $241 to-day. So that our conditions are not as bad as they may seem to be, yet they are bad enough.

Of course, I know that every man in the Postal Service—and every woman—feels as if they should be given considerable more compensation than they now receive, and that is true of every activity in the United States, whether it is in private life or in public employment. The Government of the United States should be a model employer. There can be no doubt about that. Unfortunately, the Government moves slowly; it is not always possible to get action as promptly as we would like to get it. You must realize that the men who come here to speak for you and for the other 110,000,000 people in the United States come from the Atlantic seaboard and the Pacific coast, from Hudson Bay down to the Everglades of Florida, and that the conditions in the various sections of the country differ materially, and that men's views differ with the surrounding environment; and in order to bring any legislation into a concrete form missionary work is necessary to be done in Congress, not necessarily by the men who are appealing for the legislation, so much as by those who are speaking here officially among their associates.

For example, it is an easy matter for the men in the Postal Service to say they want an increase of 50 per cent in their compensations, but it would not be such an easy matter to get the legislation to grant it to them. You all recall very well that it took about four years of the hardest kind of work to change the classification from the 1907 act to the one that is now law; and if you were able to see behind the scenes of the committee meetings of the House and Senate the strenuous efforts that had to be made by the friends of the Postal Service in order to accomplish even what was accomplished, you would be more astonished to think that it was accomplished than to wonder why it was not accomplished sooner and better. For, after all, every man in Congress is not a believer in high wages. We have men who come from certain sections of the country who do not believe that a postal clerk or a carrier should receive more compensation than the village minister. That is the argument. They believe that the postal clerk ought not to get more than the bank cashier of the village, and they use the argument, and they have votes and they are here, and they continue to come here and stay, and they come from sections of the country where they can not be disturbed. They come just as long as they live, and when they die their sons begin to come, and when they die their sons come. [Laughter.] And so it is. It has been going on from the beginning of the Government to the present day. We who come from great industrial centers, and understand the difficulties of living and the hardships that must be undergone by those who are employed in this great service, have difficulty in making these other men understand the situation.

When I tell the men from the country crossroads who serve in Congress that I come from a great city of 3,000,000 people, with a great post office having $30,000,000 annual revenue, with a surplus turned into the Treasury of the United States from that single office of perhaps $20,000,000, and wonder why it is that we can not get the consideration to which our men and women are entitled, they say: "You would not have any of this revenue if it was not for the rural patron. He is the man that sends the letters that make the revenue." And they do not understand the great problems that confront you and confront those who live in these great centers.

Now, I know that the conditions are such throughout the country that you are not able to live as you should live on the compensation you receive. Nobody knows that better than I do; nobody knows better than I do that we can not give you all you ought to have. The President of the United States has fixed a limit beyond which he as the Chief Executive of the Nation will not go, and for the Postal Committee of the House of Representatives to report a bill in conflict with the views expressed by the President would mean a veto, and the question arises whether it is better for you men and women in this great service to get a part of what you ought to have rather than to get nothing at all. You must remember this, that if the Congress was not in session, it would not be called into meeting until next December. If next December came before Congress convened, there would be no likelihood of any consideration being given to any increase in compensation for the fiscal year now existing. And originally I introduced a resolution when this agitation first began—yes, before the agitation began—and I have been the champion, in a sense, of justice for the men engaged in the service, because I regard it as the greatest service in the world, to say nothing of the greatest service in America. I regard the men and women who are engaged in this service as more patriotic than the men and women engaged in any other branch of the Government service. I regard them as specially trained for a special class of work that reaches every home, and I regard the technical knowledge which they acquire as a result of their long experience in this service as of some consequence to the Government, and so regarding it, I have always believed that they ought to be properly compensated.

Now the question arises, What is proper compensation and who is to determine what it is? Shall the local union of a postal clerks' gathering decide what the compensation is to be? Or shall they, in cooperation with the Postmaster General and his assistants, sit down and consider the propriety of the question and the interests involved? Or shall the men in the service and the women, too, submit the facts in the case to the Congress of the United States and permit them in their turn to sit down in the quiet of their rooms and study out the question along lines that will be just to all?

We must remember that in the consideration of all these problems it is not only the side of the employees that must be taken into account, but the revenue of the department as well; and while the Post Office Department is not organized for profit—or ought not to be—it has been run for profit under the present Postmaster General for some period. I have always said to him that it would be infinitely better to give the men and women in the service such increases of compensation from time to time as would absorb the profits and let them understand that they are partners in the enterprise. [Applause.] It may be popular in the public eye for the man at the head of a great department to be able to say in his annual report, "I have a surplus," but the Government is not organized to make surpluses; the Government is run for the accommodation of the people; and if we hope for the hearty cooperation of those who are engaged in the active work of making the Post Office Department a success, of course we have got to make them understand that we are interested in their welfare.

I realize that the men in the Postal Service—at least in the greater centers—are compelled to work at night, when everybody else is asleep; that 70 per cent of the men engaged in the service in the great centers work nights; and you can not make these men who are not from the great centers realize this. And so we have missionary work to do every day.

I introduced a resolution giving the Postmaster General discretion to pay 35 per cent increase in postal compensation wherever emergencies might exist. Of course, nobody knew better than I did that the men would not want that resolution; they would not want to convey upon the Postmaster General the discretion which the resolution seemingly gave; but I had my own views as to why I introduced it. I wanted to get the attitude of the Postmaster General; I could not get it in any other way; and so introducing the resolution, I had it referred to him for an opinion as to whether any emergencies did exist, and if he were given the authority whether he would act under that authority and to what extent. And we got the reply from the Postmaster General that I expected to get, that emergencies did exist in a few places in the United States, and that as to those places he would exercise the discretion if it was given to him; but I have not any idea that he would have paid 35 per cent increase. He had the right to pay within the 35 per cent, and he might have said that 5 per cent would do. Nobody knew.

Now, the next thing to do to follow that up was to introduce an amendment to that resolution by taking away the discretion and fixing a flat sum to be paid, and that is what we did, and we fixed that flat sum at $150 a year per man for every man in the service, including the grades of supervisory officials, and we increased the compensation to be paid to temporary and auxiliary clerks and substitutes and carriers of like class from 40 to 60 cents an hour, and that bill has been reported to the House, not by a unanimous vote in the Post Office Committee, not by any means, but reported to the House and will be called up for consideration and passage within the next 10 or 12 days. I know that it is not what you look for. I know you wanted more, but it amounts to $40,000,000 for the current fiscal year additional to what you are now getting; and remember that you would not be getting the $150 if Congress was not in special session, and I do not know whether you will get it even when we pass it, because I do not know what the attitude of the President will be, but we are going to pass it, and we are going to give him a chance to sign it or to say he will not do it.

Now, we have a Postal Commission. I am a member of that commission. We have sent out questionnaires to every branch of the Postal Service. We are endeavoring to get all the information we can upon which to base definite and just conclusions, and we hope to be able to report by the 1st of December, or very soon thereafter, and we trust that when we do report we will be able to so arrange the different activities of the Post Office Department and so classify them as to do justice to every man in the service, and every woman. I do not know and nobody can tell what the final, definite, fixed compensation will be for the various classes of the Postal Service, but in the meantime I beg of you men and women here to-day, no matter whether you are satisfied or not, to cooperate with us—for we are your friends; we want to do you justice—to cooperate with us, to say to the people of America, to those that you come in contact with every day: "The Government has great problems to deal with," and as patriotic Americans you are willing to help solve those problems.

The cost of living is not always going to be as high as it is. It can not be. It is bound to come down, but I do not think it is going to come down as soon as a lot of people think, and I am not here to-day to tell you a lot of glittering generalities and to appeal to your sentiment or to secure applause. I am here as one American talking to a lot of other Americans, asking them to be Americans and join in the movement for America. [Applause.]

This country's problems can only be stabilized in that way. Labor and capital and Congress and the President and the Cabinet and the postal clerks and everybody must join hands to do the same thing if we are going to win. There are 21 wars already raging over on the other side, although the war is said to be over. Peace has been declared, but still there are 21 wars going on, and we do not want any war here. We want peace. We want harmony. We want cooperation. We want to do you justice; we want you to do us justice. I am not coming here to apologize for what we have done or what we propose to do; I am here to say to you that this is the best we can do, and it is not easy at that. We want you to accept it in the same spirit that we offer it to you, and say, "We will join you; we will join hands with you, and we will help the Government to succeed in all its enterprises." And you can hope then for us to join hands with you when we have time to consider the question, to look into the facts, and to settle the problems definitely and conclusively, when this great commission that is now at work has been able to gather the facts from every section of the country to decide the problems in which you are all vitally interested.

I want you to be happy. I want you to have the best kind of an American living, and I know you can not have it without the best kind of an American wage. I want you to have comfort in your homes, happiness at your fireside. I want you to stand as you have always stood in the eyes of the American people as the most patriotic element in the make-up of our citizenship. I want you to maintain the record of constancy as loyal, devoted employees of the Government, for that is worth something. You have always had the confidence of the American people above any other Government employees. You are entitled to it. You deserve it. You come into contact with every family in the land; you bring the message of hope, of joy, of sorrow from the long weary miles that stand between us and our loved ones. You are, for example, on the battle line hoping to hear from your mother; the instrumentality through which that letter goes is the postal man. The clerk, of course, is not as spectacular a figure, in the eyes of the public, as the carrier is; but we who understand the situation realize that the clerk is the man who works in the silent hours of the night when we are all asleep [applause] and while some men may come here and tell you that you ought to have 35 or 40 or 50 per cent increase in your compensation, I am not here to tell you that. I am here to tell you what we can do. I know what we can do. I know the legislative situation; and if you think that all anybody needs to do is to introduce a resolution to have the legislation spring forth you are very much mistaken, for it needs missionary work, as your friend Flaherty knows—he is here every day. You have got to realize that they have hurdles to jump, and sometimes these hurdles are so high that lame men like I can not jump them, but I put my arms around the neck of the recalcitrants, and I try to persuade them that they ought to join us—and we had to do that in this case.

Do you know what 40 per cent increase would mean? Do you know what 30 per cent increase would mean? It would mean $100,000,000 deficiency in the Postal Service for 1920; and you know when you stop to consider the thing deliberately and look at all sides of the question that the President of the United States is not going to permit the Congress of the United States to create $100,000,000 deficiency and charge it up to his administration as inefficient management. He has given his dictum as to how far he will go in railroad problems, and anything that reaches beyond the statement he made—in your case—will not be ratified by him; and my judgment is that your best conclusion should be to cooperate and trust to your friends to do what they ought to do when they have all the facts before them and when this commission is able to make its report, as it will be able to do in November. We are going to begin our work of consideration of the question next Monday in New York. We are going from there to Boston, and from there we will go to Chicago and then to St. Paul and Cincinnati and to Atlanta, to Memphis, and to Kansas City, and we are going to invite the men from all branches of the Postal Service to meet us at these points. We will give them an opportunity to tell their story. They will be telling the story to willing ears, to sympathetic men; but, in the meantime, take my advice, the advice of a friend, and advise all your fellows everywhere throughout the United States to come up with a smiling face, no matter how you may feel about it, and join in the present movement to get what you can until the final conclusion can be reached legitimately.

I thank you very much. [Applause and cheers.]

President HYATT. I think that is a demonstration that shows how we feel about Congressman MADDEN. I do not think it is necessary to extend the formal thanks of the organization beyond that.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. AUGUSTINE LONERGAN, OF CONNECTICUT,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, September 4, 1919,

On a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 151) to provide additional compensation for employees of the Postal Service where extraordinary and unusual conditions prevail.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, the proposed measure should pass with little debate and without a dissenting voice, not because the bill completely covers the situation, for it does not, but because it is a step in the right direction. Furthermore, it gives immediate help, and thus temporarily is of advantage pending a more thorough consideration during the regular session of Congress in December.

I think it is generally agreed that the postal employees of the United States are among the hard workers employed by the Government. Their tasks are exacting and at the same time are filled with responsibility. They serve the public, who are entitled to the best. The public are desirous that the employees should be properly paid, and when we take steps to see that this is accomplished we are merely acting in accordance with the views of those who commissioned us to come to Congress.

During the Sixty-fifth Congress the energies of the United States were directed to winning the war. During the present reconstruction Congress the problem of reducing the high cost of living stands out as one of the great questions of the day. Everything, even party lines, sinks into insignificance beside it. There is no home into which the problem has not entered. The Post Office appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, provides in a small way for increases to certain postal employees, but not enough to meet conditions as they exist. So the present measure has been brought forward to-day to be made law without delay. Eventually the high cost of living will come down, at least part of the way down, so the experts assure us. Meantime it remains up, and we are but recognizing the faithful services of the postal employees when we pass this temporary legislation.

The letter carriers, the postal clerks, the railway-mail clerks, and others in the service have been ready, in fair weather and foul, to endure hardships to serve the public. During the war thousands of their numbers served directly with the colors, many making the supreme sacrifice. Others, too old to serve with the active forces, entered the military postal service or became affiliated with camp welfare organizations. They have been intensely loyal. They do not threaten or they do not demand. They petition only for what any just legislator is bound to give them.

I would urge, if this were not a temporary measure, that the bill carry higher amounts, but as we have been assured that the Special Committee on the Reclassification of Government Employees will in December bring in a thorough and scientific grading of all employees of the Federal Government, with equitable and just salary recommendations, it seems the best thing to do is pass the measure and await the culmination of the committee's work. There is no doubt but that its recommendations will take into consideration the faithful services of the postal employees and reward them accordingly.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ISAAC SIEGEL,
OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, August 22, 1919.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, on August 6, two days before the President addressed Congress, I introduced a bill which provides for marked cost price on each article or attaching a tag showing the cost price.

This bill has raised considerable discussion throughout the country, and I am of the opinion that real relief can not be obtained in any other way.

The Dry Goods Economist, one of our leading newspapers, on August 16 published the following leading editorial:

DRASTIC PLAN FOR GOVERNMENTAL PRICE REGULATION.

Bills and resolutions aimed in one way or another to help in solving the problem created by the continual increase in the price of commodities have fallen thick and fast within the walls of the National Capitol within the last week or two. Such is the number of these that the mere enumeration of them would take up considerable space.

There is one proposed measure, however—introduced by Representative SIEGEL, of New York—which calls for special consideration on the part of manufacturers and distributors alike, the more so as it is in line with a recommendation contained in the address to Congress delivered by President Wilson on Friday of last week.

The President, as many of our readers doubtless will have noted, said in this connection:

"I would also recommend that it be required that all goods destined for interstate commerce should in every case where their form or package makes it possible be plainly marked with the price at which they left the hands of the producer."

The President went on to say that "such a requirement would bear a close analogy to certain provisions of the pure-food act, by which it is required that certain detailed information be given on the labels of packages of food and drugs."

The Siegel bill is entitled "A bill requiring all persons transacting business to obtain a license and to prevent profiteering."

Such license is to be obtained from the collector of internal revenue of the district wherein the person transacts business. In making application for such license he is required to state under oath the kind of business he transacts and to give such other information as the collector shall require. The fee for the granting of the license is to be $10.

The bill then goes on to provide that "any person now or hereafter engaged in business in the United States to whom a permit or license shall have been issued, who shall expose or offer for sale or cause to be exposed or offered for sale to the public any article of goods, wares, or merchandise without having plainly stamped or printed thereon or attached thereto a card showing the true, actual cost price thereof, such person shall be guilty of profiteering," and shall be "fined in a sum not exceeding $5,000 and may be imprisoned for not more than two years, or both."

In the case of partnerships, corporations, etc., violating the above provisions each of the partners or directors is to be liable to the penalty or penalties provided.

It is further to be noted that the bill provides that the language "true, actual cost price shall not be construed to include any drayage, freight, or carriage charges paid by the purchaser or any discount allowed on bills paid before maturity."

This proposed legislation recalls that the Arizona Council of Defense in the early fall of last year issued an order that all dealers within the State mark on their goods the cost price. At that time, it will also be remembered, the statement went forth in the daily press of the country that a regulation of similar tenor had been issued by the War Industries Board. That Federal body, however, was composed chiefly of experienced business men, and when one of its officials was interviewed by the Economist on the subject he not only denied the issuance of such an order but said the board had never had any intention of issuing it. In other words, the War Industries Board, even in the most critical time of our participation in the world conflict, regarded as unwise such regulations as is now contemplated in this Siegel bill.

Such a measure would create a serious situation. It is noteworthy that the President, in his recommendation to Congress, above quoted, expressly mentions goods destined for interstate commerce. And, moreover, the Siegel bill was referred by the House to its Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Now, if the proposed legislation is applicable only to goods shipped from one State to another it is clear that one of the various ways in which it promises to work unfairly is in the case of the retailer located on the border of a State. Such a merchant naturally has a great deal of interstate business, while the one located in or near the center of a State of the average size does the bulk of his business within the confines of his own Commonwealth.

Another feature of the bill that is open to serious criticism is the one in regard to the carriage charges. The noninclusion of these in the "cost price" would cause the so-called cost as marked on the goods to look very much lower in proportion to the selling price to a consumer on the Pacific coast (or otherwise at a great distance from the point of shipment) than would the cost price as made known to a consumer in New York, for instance, or in some other center so close to the source of supply that the transportation cost would be a mere bagatelle.

This provision for noninclusion of carriage cost in the cost price is, moreover, contrary to the practice now generally in force—and recommended by the Economist many years ago—of regarding inward transportation charges as a part of the cost of the goods and chargeable, therefore, not to expense account but to merchandise account.

As to the general intent of the bill it may well be asked, How would it be possible for a store to explain to each customer the necessarily wide difference between cost price and selling price? The extent of the difference is, in a degree, governed by the merchant himself; the customers, however, demand a certain type of service from the store, and that service must be paid for by the store in wages or in some other form. The expense of doing business forms the biggest part of the difference between cost and selling price. But the average customer would think the reverse was the case, and, viewing the biggest part as clear profit, would at once brand retailers as "a bunch of profiteers."

Furthermore, the store handling largely merchandise of a novelty character, in the selling price of which the element of risk is an important factor, would be at a disadvantage as compared with the store dealing largely in staples. It would be impossible to explain to the public, for example, the mark up that is essential on garments in order to guard against the posibility of a steep reduction because of a sudden change in style, unseasonable weather, or other unfavorable development, which might almost in a moment greatly reduce the desirability of the goods to the consumer.

It is well known, too, that a store does not, and can not, mark all of its goods, even in the same department, with the same margin of profit. For one reason or another, goods bearing the same selling price would (if the bill were enacted and the law enforced) show to customers a different cost price. Would not customers snap up the goods which showed them the high cost price—and hence, implied the highest value for them—thus leaving on hand the goods whose sale is essential to giving the merchant the average profit and thereby enabling him to duly cover his expenses?

As regards the President's recommendation above quoted, merchants and manufacturers of dry goods, and especially of novelty merchandise, will have great difficulty in seeing any analogy between the marking of cost price on the lines of merchandidse they carry and provisions of the pure food act. That law applies to merchandise of the most staple character, depending for its value to the consumer on its intrinsic merit, while into the desirability of merchandise handled by dry goods and department stores a number of other factors enter.

The Dry Goods Economist is just as much opposed to profiteering as it is posible for anyone to be. Any effort to discourage it which promises to be effectual and just to all concerned we will cordially welcome. We note with interest in this connection the progress toward enactment by the British Government of a bill providing for prosecution of persons guilty of profiteering. We believe, however, that the Siegel bill in its present form will not only fail of its purpose, but will carry in its train a multitude of new difficulties whose extent can be appreciated only by those acquainted with the economics of merchandising in general and of retailing in particular.

I insert it in full because of its opposition to the bill and because full discussion of its merits and demerits is what I want.

I have read many of the letters which have been sent to the Interstate Commerce Committee in opposition to my bill, and many of them assumed that the average retail customer is densely ignorant and would not allow the retailer to make a fair profit.

I am advised by many of the business men that since the introduction of the bill customers are commencing to ask questions as to what the article cost price is, and that they are not buying merchandise blindly, as before.

If the introduction of my bill and the agitation which has already followed has awakened the customer to the fact that he should know something of what the retailer's cost is, then education of the public has begun and prices will have to go down to reason.

That there is necessity for this is seen by the report which appeared in the New York Globe during this week and which explains itself:

WAGES RISE, BUT FALL FAR BEHIND COST OF LIVING—FACTORY WORKERS FIND PAY ENVELOPES FATTER, BUT LOSS OF PURCHASING POWER OF DOLLAR LEAVES THEM WORSE OFF THAN BEFORE THE WAR.

That the rapid increase in earnings of New York factory workers in the last 5 years has not kept pace with the faster rising cost of living is shown in the latest statistics compiled by the State Industrial Commission.

While average weekly earnings increased 77 per cent from June, 1914, to June, 1919, retail food prices alone jumped 86 per cent.

Statistics gleaned from the factory pay rolls of New York show that in New York City average weekly earnings of all employees in office and shop increased from $12.85 in 1914 to $22.93 in 1919, while outside the greater city the increase was from $12.40 to $22.96, the average being $12.70 to $22.51.

The upward movement started about June, 1915, and in one year the gain was nearly 20 per cent. From June, 1916, to June, 1917, the increase was about 30 per cent, and the greatest gain was from June, 1917, to June, 1918, about 30 per cent. The increase the past year was only 10 per cent. The following table gives the average weekly earnings in representative New York State factories from 1914 to 1919:

Increases in wage rates since May of this year are reported in a variety of manufacturing industries. Firms producing cement, brick, silverware, furniture, leather and fur goods, paper products, sugar and other foods, and textile and clothing manufacturers are among those noting an increase. Figures compiled by the State industrial commission include the following:

What index numbers are and how to use them: An index number is one of a series of numbers that expresses a value in terms of another number, arbitrarily chosen to represent 100. For example, if the cost of a quantity of food products was $250 in one month and $300 in the following month, and $250 was selected as the base, i. e., as 100, then $300 would be expressed as 120. If it be desired to compute the per cent of increase or decrease between two months, calculate the change between the index numbers representing those months.

The industrial commission's latest bulletin also has this to say of building activity:

"The total estimated cost of building work authorized in first and second class cities of the State in June is $34,192,341. This is greater than the similar amount for June of any of the past four years for which the commission has records. July, 1916, is the only month in which building work authorized was of greater estimated cost. This year's figures should be discounted because of the increased cost of materials and labor.

"The June building estimate is 45 per cent higher than the May estimate and is 383 per cent higher than June, 1918. Of the June total, $29,738,311 was for the five boroughs of New York City. In relative increase, Binghamton leads with a gain of 147 per cent over May and a gain of 955 per cent over last year. Rochester, Schenectady, and the Borough of Queens show a somewhat lower figure for June than for May, but all other cities or boroughs of New York City show increases. With the exception of Yonkers, all cities of the State show a gain of 70 per cent or more over last year.

"From these figures it is apparent that the revival in building work is gaining headway."

If the people in the respective communities will commence to learn the profit the seller is making, the sooner will everybody endeavor to see that fair prices prevail.

Higher Guaranteed Price for Low-Grade Wheat.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HALVOR STEENERSON,
OF MINNESOTA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, September 6, 1919.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an article from the Warroad Pioneer on the subject of wheat.

The article is as follows:

[From the Warroad (Minn.) Pioneer.]

HIGHER GUARANTEED PRICE FOR LOW-GRADE WHEAT.

"Julius Barnes, head of the United States Grain Corporation, has announced a change in the guaranteed price on the lower grades of wheat, which will mean a great many million dollars to the farmers of the Northwest.

"The present spread in prices is 32 cents between No. 1 and No. 5 wheat. The new order reduces this spread to 14 cents, the new arrangement being No. 2 at 3 cents less than No. 1; No. 3 at 6 cents less than No. 1; No. 4 at 10 cents less than No. 1; No. 5 at 14 cents less than No. 1.

"The change resulted from a hearing in New York last week, called by Congressmen representing the wheat growers of the Northwest, and attended by the three North Dakota Congressmen, STEENERSON, VOLSTEAD, and ANDERSON of Minnesota, and RIDDICK, of Montana, and by numerous State officials, representatives of farmers' organizations, and grain experts from the Northwest.

"Another interesting result of this hearing is that the much-discussed question of whether poor wheat will make as much flour as good wheat per bushel seems to have been answered, and the figures secured showing the exact difference, as far as the experts are able to figure it out, have been agreed on.

"In giving the figures we shall omit the fractions of pounds and of cents, which are confusing to the average reader, and give it in even figures, which are close enough for all practical purposes.

"Sixty pounds of wheat weighing between 51 and 52 pounds to the measured bushel will yield 64 per cent flour and 35 per cent feed, 1 per cent being lost in the milling. The value of the finished product will be $2.22 in flour and 50 cents in feed. Total, $2.72.

"Sixty pounds of wheat weighing between 52 and 53 pounds to the bushel measure will yield 65 per cent of flour and 34 per cent of feed; flour value, $2.24; feed value, 49 cents. Total, $2.73.

"Sixty pounds of wheat weighing 53 to 54 pounds to the bushel will yield 66 per cent flour and 33 per cent feed, valued at $2.29 for the flour and 47 cents for the feed. Total, $2.76.

"Sixty pounds of wheat weighing 54 to 55 pounds to the bushel yields 68 per cent flour and 31 per cent feed, valued at $2.33 for the flour and 44 cents for the feed. Total, $2.77.

"Sixty pounds of wheat weighing 55 to 56 pounds to the bushel yields 68 per cent flour and 31 per cent feed; the value of the flour being $2.34 and feed 44 cents. Total, $2.78.

"Sixty pounds of wheat weighing 56 to 57 pounds to the bushel yields 69 per cent flour and 30 per cent of feed, valued at $2 39 for the flour and 42 cents for the feed. Total, $2.81.

"Sixty pounds of wheat weighing 57 to 58 pounds to the bushel yields 70 per cent of flour and 29 per cent of feed, valued at $2.42 for flour and 41 cents for feed. Total, $2.83.

"Sixty pounds of wheat weighing 58 to 59 pounds to the bushel yields 71 per cent of flour and 28 per cent of feed, valued at $2.45 for flour and 40 cents for feed. Total, $2.85.

"Sixty pounds of wheat weighing 59 to 60 pounds to the bushel yields 71 per cent flour and 28 per cent feed, valued at $2.46 for flour and 40 cents for feed. Total, $2.86.

"The measure of value used is flour at the market price of $11.25 per barrel and feed at $48 per ton, which was the actual price at the time of the hearing.

"Another very interesting fact was brought out by Mr. STEENERSON in his closing argument in behalf of the wheat growers. He pointed out that in the past the northwestern wheat has commanded a premium of about 20 cents over soft wheat for the reason that it was generally so rich in gluten that it could be mixed with soft wheat, so as to make a high-grade patent flour from the mixture; that soft wheat alone contained so much starch that the loaf made from it was small and heavy and lacked palatability that makes the hard-wheat bread so valuable, and for this reason the light-weight hard wheat raised this year had an additional value for mixing purposes over and above its intrinsic value, especially because the winter wheat this year is unusually weak in gluten and needs this mixture more than in any ordinary year.

"The correctness of Mr. STEENERSON'S argument was admitted by the experts present and was further proven by the fact that the Government is offering to sell from its store of flour in New York, made from soft wheat, at $9.85 per barrel, with no takers, because the people demand flour made in whole or in part from the hard wheat of the Northwest.

"The Minnesota grain inspection, through Messrs. Jacobson, O'Niel, and Holmberg, produced more than a dozen samples of wheat weighing from 48 to 60 pounds test weight, with samples of flour made from each, showing that the lighter wheat made about as good bread as that made from No. 1.

"May we suggest that farmers interested in wheat save the above figures for future reference, as the percentage of flour and feed in a bushel of each grade of wheat being available, he can at any time figure out the difference between the selling price of his wheat and the cost of his flour and feed."

Compensation for Postal Employees.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. SUMMERS,
OF WASHINGTON,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, September 3, 1919.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, when the minimum-wage bill, which provides a living wage for every man and woman in the employ of the Federal Government, was under consideration by the Congress a few weeks ago I supported that bill with the understanding from the Republican leaders of the House that the postal employees were to be provided for at an early date. I shall now support this bill, though I regret that it does not carry a larger increase to all postal employees.

My observation is that postal clerks, letter carriers, rural delivery men, and other postal employees are unusually capable, conscientious, patriotic servants of the Government and of the people, who have a just pride in their service and who maintain a morale equaled by few organizations and excelled by none. Their mental and educational equipment is and must of necessity be far above the average. Their duties require close application and precision. The carriers in my city, and I presume conditions are no worse there than elsewhere, stagger under the enormous burden they must carry for blocks and blocks before their load begins to lighten.

The carrier, whether city or rural, must "carry on" through summer heat, through rain and sleet and slush. Whether the day be foul or fair and whether the roads be good or bad these faithful men bring to us day after day the messages of love and cheer, of joy and sadness, of professional and commercial success, and who has ever known a postman who was not willing to go farther than the law required to accommodate a patron? And whose spirits are not buoyed by the sight of "our faithful postman," unless perchance it is on the first day of the month?

Of our whole postal system it has been most truthfully and beautifully said that it is a—

Messenger of sympathy and love;
Servant of parted friends;
Consoler of the lonely;
Bond of the scattered family;
Enlarger of the common life;
Carrier of news and knowledge;
Instrument of trade and industry;
Promoter of mutual acquaintance,
Of peace and good will,
Among men and nations.

Mr. Speaker, I can not agree with Postmaster General Burleson that this increase should go only "to the chosen few," and that he should do the choosing. Neither can I agree with his first assistant, Mr. Koons, when he says, "To grant these unreasonable increases would place upon the public an unjust burden," nor when he says, "There is no exigency in the Postal Service which would justify the proposed increases in salaries, and therefore they do not have the approval of this department."

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, in my opinion "these unreasonable increases" to which Mr. Koons refers are only "unreasonable" because they are unreasonably small. I believe the stress of the times constitutes an exigency that justifies, and more than justifies, this increase of $150 in the salaries of all postal employees.

The 10 per cent increase to fourth-class postmasters is all too meager, but a half loaf is better than no bread at all, and we will serve our constituents better by passing this bill than to hold out for a larger increase and incur the displeasure of the Postmaster General and probably be confronted by a presidential veto.

I shall eagerly look forward to the report of the special investigating committee, which I trust and believe will do full and permanent justice to all within a short time.

Meanwhile I know this great army of 41,000 clerks, 35,000 carriers, and tens of thousands of assistants and officers of the fourth class will maintain the same high standard of efficiency and patriotic service that they have upheld in the past, and will join hands with all other loyal American citizens in stabilizing conditions and in helping us to determine a fair and just compensation for all.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN J. BABKA,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, September 3, 1919.

Mr. BABKA. Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret that the committee has seen fit to report this bill in its present form. I regret, too, the fact that they have deemed it necessary to present the bill under a suspension of the rules, thereby precluding all amendments and throttling the voice of the membership of this House. There is no question in my mind that if the Members were permitted to express their views and desires on this matter that full justice would be done the postal employees at this time rather than the time-worn promise that this increase is only temporary and that they can expect more when the matter is properly investigated by the commission. Investigated for what purpose? Is investigation necessary to convince any fair-minded man that it is utterly impossible for a man who has a family to support to exist on the paltry salary now being paid the postal employees? Is there any class of employees anywhere in this land whose qualifications are as high who receive so little in return? Any of these men could earn far more in other pursuits. Many of them have already resigned; others are doing so every day and accepting positions that pay them much more.

The result is that the service is being crippled and is in a very deplorable condition now, and will so continue unless Congress wakes up and gives these men adequate compensation so that the service can hold them. I am glad to add as a part of my remarks a resolution adopted by the Cleveland Federation of Labor, which is as follows:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, August 20, 1919.

Whereas during the past five years the cost of living has increased more than 80 per cent; and

Whereas letter carriers and other postal employees have only received a temporary increase of 25 per cent since 1907; and

Whereas the Postal Service is short handed and the present salary is too unattractive to hold the necessary number of efficient employees or to recruit new ones; and

Whereas Senator MOSES, of New Hampshire, has introduced a bill, known as Senate joint resolution No. 84, which provides for a 35 per cent raise over the present salary, to be paid to all postal employees on and after July 1, 1919, and up to July 1, 1920; and

Whereas while this joint resolution does not restore us to prewar conditions, which could only be accomplished by giving us a raise of at least 60 per cent over our present salary, still it would undoubtedly afford the postal employees relief: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Central Federation of Labor of Cleveland, Ohio, in regular meeting assembled, this 20th day of August, That we, on behalf of the postal employees, do indorse Senate joint resolution No. 84 and call upon the United States Senators from Ohio and the local Congressmen to give this bill their hearty support and do all in their power to have it reported out favorably by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads; and be it further

Resolved, That we instruct the secretary of the Cleveland Federation of Labor to mail copies of these resolutions to United States Senators HARDING and POMERENE and Congressmen EMERSON, MOONEY, and BABKA.

In voting for this measure I do so in a hope that the commission will speed up its work of investigation, and that the committee will at a very early date report a bill that will do justice to the postal employees.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. M. CLYDE KELLY,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, September 3, 1919.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I regret that this measure providing for a flat increase of $150 a year for postal employees is brought before the House under a rule which prevents amendment. The increase is inadequate in view of actual conditions, and I would like to have the opportunity of urging an increase more in keeping with the merits of these employees of the Government and the fight which they are compelled to make in the attempt to make both ends meet. I shall vote for this measure simply because it must be voted up or down exactly as it has been reported, and not because it meets my idea of justice for the workers who make the American Postal Service the greatest business institution in the world.

But, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the real issue in the Postal Service is not the question of wages. The real question is: "What are to be the relations between employer and employee when the Government is the employer?"

Even more important than the question of compensation is the right of postal employees to absolute security of employment as long as they render efficient service, instead of being at the mercy of officials who may act as judge, jury, and executioner. More important than wages is their right to collective action in conferring with officials through accredited representatives of their own choosing on matters that affect their interest and welfare.

I believe that both of these rights belong justly to those who serve the Government of the United States as their employer. I believe the granting of them will mean increased efficiency, because it will mean increased self-confidence and self-respect on the part of employees. It will act as a great encourager, for there is no tonic like the knowledge of the possession of the rights of manhood and womanhood.

To provide for the granting of these rights I have prepared and introduced House bill 5992, which is as follows:

A bill providing for a United States Civil Service Board of Adjustments to constitute a court of appeals for employees in the classified civil service of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be created a United States Civil Service Board of Adjustments of three members, to be appointed by the President, one holding office during the first term for two years, one holding office during the first term for three years, and one holding office during the first term for four years, the terms of office of all thereafter to be three years. The members shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum. One member to be appointed shall be representative of the employees, one shall be representative of the United States as an employer, and one shall be representative of the general public. They shall choose one member of the board as chairman.

SEC. 2. That personal grievances or controversies arising over interpretations of salary laws and all other disputes arising between officials or offices, bureaus, divisions, or departments and their employees shall be handled by committees of the employees up to and including the chief official of the office, bureau, division, or department concerned, when, if an agreement is not reached, the chairman of the committee of employees may refer the matter to the chief executive officer of the organization of employees having jurisdiction in the office, bureau, division, or department concerned, and if the contention of the employees' committee is approved by such executive officer, then the chief official of the office, bureau, or division concerned and the chief executive officer of the organization concerned shall refer the matter, with all supporting papers, to the United States Civil Service Board of Adjustments, which board shall promptly hear and decide the case, giving due notice to the chief official of the office, bureau, division, or department and to the chief executive officer of the organization concerned on the time set for hearing. The board shall have the power and authority to administer oaths, issue subpœnas, examine witnesses, and do such other administrative acts as are necessary to enable them to effectively perform the functions prescribed, including free and unrestricted access to all records of any office, bureau, division, or department of the Government service.

SEC. 3. That the board shall meet regularly, at stated times each month, and continue in session until all matters before it are considered.

SEC. 4. That, unless otherwise mutually agreed, all meetings of the board shall be held in the city of Washington: Provided, That the board shall have authority to empower one or more of its members to conduct hearings and pass upon controversies when properly submitted at any place designated by the board: Provided further, That such subdivision of the board will not be authorized to make final decision. All decisions shall be made and approved by the entire board, as herein provided.

SEC. 5. That should a vacancy occur in the board for any cause, such vacancy shall be immediately filled by the same appointive authority which made the original selection.

SEC. 6. That no matter will be considered by the United States Civil Service Board of Adjustments unless officially referred to it in the manner herein prescribed.

SEC. 7. That in hearings before the United States Civil Service Board of Adjustments in matters properly submitted for its consideration, the office, bureau, division, or department concerned shall be represented by such person or persons as may be designated by the chief official of said office, bureau, division, or department, and the employees shall be represented by such person or persons as may be designated by the chief executive officer of the organization concerned. No employee shall be subjected to any loss in compensation or position unless the charges preferred against him are sustained by the commission.

SEC. 8. That in each case an effort should be made to present a joint concrete statement of facts as to any controversies, but the board is fully authorized to require information in addition to the concrete statement of facts, and may call upon the chief official of the office, bureau, division, or department concerned, or the chief executive officer of the organization concerned, for additional evidence, either oral or written.

SEC. 9. That all decisions of the United States Civil Service Board of Adjustments shall be approved by a majority vote of all members of the board and shall be final.

SEC. 10. That the United States Civil Service Board of Adjustments shall keep a complete and accurate record of all matters submitted for its consideration and of all decisions made by the board, and shall make a report of its findings and submit recommendations relating to remedial legislation necessary to the welfare of the employees to the Congress of the United States on the first day of each regular session.

SEC. 11. That a report of all cases decided, including the decision, will be filed with the chief official of the office, bureau, division, or department concerned and with the chief executive officers of the organizations concerned.

SEC. 12. That a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 13. That this act shall become effective upon the date of its approval.

Mr. Speaker, here are the two proposals: First, to establish a court of appeals for employees, and, second, to secure official recognition of the organizations of these employees.

I do not believe that any person is good enough to be intrusted with autocratic power. No man should have absolute mastery over men placed under him by being able to act as complainant, judge, jury, and executioner, and yet that is exactly what we have at present. Employees of long service may be reduced in salary or rank, suspended from duty, or dismissed from the service without in reality having a chance to defend themselves.

In my own experience I have seen postal employees of many years' service dismissed on the most trivial grounds, which I am sure would not have stood for a moment if they had been reviewed by an impartial tribunal. The officials higher up accepted the report of an inspector and no explanation availed. As a matter of fact, these employees never had their day in court—they were adjudged guilty when the charges were made against them.

Men like these appeal to Members of Congress, but individual Members of Congress are not able to handle such cases with any very great degree of intimate knowledge of the inside working methods of these departments. They should not be compelled to do so, for there should be a board of adjustment such as provided in my bill for the settlement of these cases.

No department head should fear a review of his decision if he is fair and just. In fact, he should favor such a review, so that no dismissed employee could justly charge that he was not given a full and free hearing.

Under the present system the mere whim of an official may result in the dismissal of a trained postal employee, who is then bereft of any future opportunity of working at the trade he has learned through long and arduous effort. It works out in a system of blacklisting which is wide enough to prevent employment in this work in any part of the country.

I maintain that such a situation is intolerable and should be remedied at the earliest moment possible.

But I go still further than the desire to establish a court of appeals for individual cases. I would officially recognize the organizations of postal employees so that it would be decided once and for all that the 250,000 public servants who have built up the Postal Service are entitled to a voice in the management.

It seems to me a matter of simple justice that the accredited officials of postal organizations should have the right, in such capacity, to submit the views of the employees on matters closely affecting their welfare and interests. By such recognition, along the lines proposed in the bill I have introduced, only the cases clearly showing injustice would ever be brought to the court of appeals. The sense of fairness of any body of Americans, gathered in regular assembly, may be trusted to prevent the flooding of such a board of adjustment with trifling matters which have no real foundation for appeal.

The organizations of postal employees have justified their existence in the results already accomplished. Because they are employed by the Government for the performance of an absolutely essential service is no reason why the postal employees should be denied the fundamental rights of American citizens. But without organized effort and united action on their part they would have been permanently denied the right of petition to Congress, such denial having been ordered by two Presidents of the United States.

In spite of these orders the postal employees were organized and determined to make an effort to have them rescinded. The National Association of Post Office Clerks was organized in 1906 out of local associations which had been formed in seven cities—Chicago, San Francisco, Milwaukee, Louisville, Nashville, Salt Lake City, and Muskogee. The first of these local associations was that organized in the Chicago post office in 1898 for the purpose of protesting against the postmaster's arbitrary ruling that they must wear uniforms while on duty. This organization was successful in its purpose, and it merged with the others in the National Association of Post Office Clerks, which secured a charter in the American Federation of Labor.

In 1907 the organization urged a new classification law, which was passed by Congress. In 1912 they helped to secure the eight-hour law with the one-day-in-seven provision. It was in that year also that the Executive orders were rescinded by affirmation of Congress. In 1909 an attempt had been made but was unsuccessful. In 1911 bills were introduced in both Houses providing that civil service employees should have the right of petition. Hearings were held before the Reform in the Civil Service Committee. James A. Emory and other representatives of the Manufacturers' Association, then in the height of its power, violently protested against "unionizing the Postal Service." The committee refused to report out the measure and the Mulhall exposure in 1913 disclosed the fact that the Manufacturers' Association claimed this refusal as one of its "victories."

However, in spite of this defeat, the advocates of this provision continued their efforts and finally succeeded in placing it on the Post Office appropriation bill in January, 1912. It passed the House with but a single dissenting vote. This provision was as follows:

Provided, That membership in any society, organization, club, or other form of organization of postal employees not affiliated with outside organizations imposing an obligation or duty upon them to engage in any strike, or proposing to assist them in any strike against the United States, having for its objects, among other things, improvements in the condition of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor and leaves of absence, by any person or groups of persons in said Postal Service, or the presenting by any such persons or groups of persons of any grievance or grievances to the Congress or any Member thereof, shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such person or persons from said service. The right of persons employed in the civil service of the United States, either individually or collectively, to petition Congress or any Member thereof or to furnish information to either House of Congress or to any committee or member thereof shall not be denied nor interfered with.

There can be no question as to the justice of this provision of law. Every citizen of the United States has the right to petition Congress for the redress of grievances. The fact that a citizen is also a Government employee is not a reason for withholding that right; it is an added reason for seeing that he has it. Today no one would oppose this assurance that postal employees are still American citizens.

But the right of effective organization is still more important. No other class of Government employees needs organized effort more than the postal employees. They are largely dependent upon their jobs. After spending years in fitting themselves for their work they find that they are qualified for no other similar service. The years of study necessary to learn distribution schemes as post-office clerks, railway mail clerks, and letter carriers are of no value to employees except in the Postal Service itself. There is no competing service to use men of trained qualifications along these lines. Therefore the postal employee is a specialist, who is disasterously handicapped if thrown out of his position.

Now, men in this position are naturally conservative and little apt to fly off at a tangent. They will not ask impossible things, and they tend to bearing the ills they have rather than fly to others that they know not of. When the postal employees ask consideration for any measure you may rest assured that their claims are founded in justice. The 10 years of a stationary compensation scale—from 1907 to 1917—while living prices were soaring skyward, testifies eloquently to their moderation.

It is stated that recognition of their organizations means danger of a strike. That "strike" bogey is a ridiculous fabrication. The fact is that these postal organizations are the best insurance against a strike. Not a single strike or approach to it has ever occurred among organized postal workers. There have been two altercations between postal employees and officials in American history. One was the refusal of the railway mail clerks on a North Dakota run to take up extra runs without increased pay. This was in 1911, when the railway mail clerks there were not organized and could not give effective expression to their side of the question. This trouble was finally settled by putting the blame for unjust orders on the general superintendent of railway mail service.

The other strike, so called, occurred in 1915 in the Fairmont post office, when 25 clerks and carriers resigned because of the dismissal of three fellow employees. These men were unorganized and helpless. They used the last weapon and one which has never been ordered by one of the organizations—the strike. Once the postal employees are efficiently organized and their united efforts recognized as beneficial to themselves and the service, you will find that a safety valve has been established which will prevent the occurrence of even such local sporadic outbursts.

Mr. Speaker, American public sentiment, molded in the fire of the World War, has come to the decision that workers in any industry can not secure justice by acting as individuals. There can be no equality of contract between one man and a mighty corporation. The Paris peace conference was forced to recognize this world-wide fact by the incorporation of a section guaranteeing the right of employees to organize. The War Labor Board decreed collective bargaining as the most efficient method of securing results in a time of crisis.

The Chief of Ordnance shortly after the declaration of war against Germany issued the following order dealing with "Negotiations between employers and employees":

> The need of preserving and creating methods of joint negotiations between employers and groups of employees is especially great in the light of the critical points of controversy which may arise in a time like the present. Existing channels should be preserved and new ones opened, if required, to provide easier access for discussion between an employer and his employees on controversial points.

The report of the United States Department of Labor for 1917 contained this tremendously important statement:

> Whenever employers enter into negotiations with organized workers differences are almost always adjusted satisfactorily.

The spirit of democracy has touched industry, and forward-looking employers in private business are recognizing that the workers are partners in production and have a right to consideration in the management.

Shall the Post Office Department, the American Government, as the employer, continue to enforce the outworn status, that of arbitrary master and helpless servant, in these days of rejoicing over a victory which was to make democracy safe round the world?

I will not believe it. I have firm confidence that the American people will insist that postal employees and all other Government employees are more than mere cogs in the machine; that they are Americans who have every American right, and that includes the right to security of employment, based on efficiency, a fair trial on every charge of misconduct, and organization, recognized and encouraged, for the purpose of protection and the promotion of every worthy purpose.

Frank and fair recognition of these rights by Congress will help to eliminate fear and doubt and prejudice and inefficiency. In such a plan there is no tyranny, no force, no threat. Instead there is mutual understanding and cooperation. Employees banded together are strengthened, but they thrive only as they advance the interests of the service. When they understand that a square deal is assured them and that cooperation among themselves is encouraged instead of denounced, they will spread the advantages of mutual interest through every part of the great institution of which they are a part. Industry, appreciation, and good feeling are universally recognized attributes of efficiency. They will all be demonstrated when the Government of the United States, which should be the model employer of the world, extends its hand to its own employees and bids them unite their efforts for justice and the common good.

The After-the-European-War Readjustment of Economic Conditions and the High Cost of Living.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES F. CURRY,
OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, September 8, 1919.

[An article by Mr. CURRY, of California, published in Organized Labor at San Francisco, Calif., Sept. 1, 1919.]

The world is going through a mental, a moral, a political, a governmental, and an economic crisis.

The crisis is due to many causes and was considered to be acute before the outbreak of the European war in 1914.

The invention during the past 50 years of labor-saving machinery for the farm and the shop and the application to industry and commerce of steam and electricity ought to have made living conditions easier for all of the people, but the inventions came so rapidly that their benefits were not equitably distributed.

The patent laws and the corporation laws were enacted to benefit the poor man and the inventor, but they have been subverted from their original purpose and the rich harvest of their benefits have been the greatest factor in the organization of trusts and monopolies.

When cold storage was invented it was hailed as a boon to the consuming public, as it was stated that it would equalize downward the cost of perishable foodstuffs throughout the year. The result has been the exact opposite, and the cold-storage plants have enabled the packers and perishable-food manipulators to maintain exorbitantly high prices throughout the year.

Hon. E. C. HUTCHINSON, of New Jersey, has introduced a bill in Congress limiting the time perishable foodstuffs may be retained in cold storage to 10 consecutive months. I hope the committee will report the bill favorably with possibly a few minor amendments. If it should be reported favorably, it will, in all probability, be enacted into law. Congress has directed the War Department to sell its excess supply of canned meats and other foodstuffs.

Of course, the war is responsible for the unreasonable and inexcusable inflation of money and credit. Before the war, under the Federal reserve act, the Federal reserve banks carried $1,000,000,000 worth of trade acceptances based on the then value of raw, manufactured, and other products. That was a normal amount of trade acceptances in normal times at normal valuation. To-day the Federal reserve banks are carrying $5,500,000,000 worth of trade acceptances at inflated war-time prices. These should be and undoubtedly will be liquidated gradually, though as rapidly as possible to avoid financial trouble. In addition to the trade acceptances currency is issued at the ratio of $3 of currency for $1 of gold reserve. The Secretary of the Treasury should gradually reduce the currency inflation to a reasonable and healthy basis. Gold and silver are being retired from circulation. More than $100,000,000—silver dollars—have been melted and the bullion sent to India during the past two years. At present the American dollar has about one-half the purchasing power it had in 1914. Of course, the banks must, if possible, maintain the present high cost of commodities until the trade acceptances they hold are liquidated.

The lowering of the high cost of living is an absolute necessity. Mr. Lee, one of the four representatives of the railroad brotherhood, told a Senate committee the other day that increasing wages and salaries alone would not solve the high cost of living, and he is undoubtedly right, as the profiteers always anticipate a wage raise and increase the cost of living accordingly. Our system of distribution that permits profiteering must be changed. The farmer, the packer, the wholesaler, and the retailer charge the high cost of living to each other, to labor and to the war, and to freight rates. Increasing freight rates and fares certainly will not decrease the cost of living. Increasing the number of freight and refrigerator cars will help some. The cost of distribution of farm products in Washington, D. C., is from 100 per cent to 300 per cent more than the farmer receives for it. Beef ranges in price from 20 cents to 55 cents per pound retail, which is about 100 per cent profit. Onions sell for 20 cents per pound; the farmer gets 5 cents per pound. Potatoes range from $3.50 to $5 per bushel and the farmer receives from $1.50 to $2 per bushel for them, and the farmers receive from 50 to 75 per cent of the retail price of butter and eggs. Of course, the consumer must pay more for food and clothes than it costs to produce them, but the percentage of profit at the present time is unreasonably exorbitant.

Never before has there been such quantity of food products in granaries and cold storage in the United States as there is at the present time, and the prices are higher than they were at the close of the war. In Europe, outside of Russia and the Central Powers, the cost of food and clothing has materially decreased since November 11, 1918; and even in Germany the price of food has recently materially decreased.

Congressman MARTIN B. MADDEN, of Illinois, and Senator JAMES A. REED, of Missouri, are engaged in drafting an identical bill to be introduced in both Houses, placing an embargo upon the exportation of all foodstuffs until the American public shall have been supplied with American products at a reasonable price that shall be at least as low as they are sold for in Great Britain and France. A propaganda has already been started against the proposed bill, on the ground that it would starve Europe. Of course, it would not, but it would force prices down, and after America had been supplied at a fair profit the surplus could be shipped and sold abroad.

Conserving food was necessary during the war. But Hoover was hysterical. His system of food control resulted in decreasing the size of portions and increasing prices in hotels and restaurants and skyrocketing the cost of foodstuffs to the householder.

During the last session of Congress we appropriated $100,000,000 to feed the starving people of Europe. That amount was used to purchase American foodstuffs in France and England that the French and English Governments would not buy because they could purchase much cheaper from Argentina, Australia, and other countries that could not sell their products during the war. The American foodstuffs bought by Hoover in France and England were sold and distributed to some of the hungry in Europe, including Germans, which was justifiable under the circumstances, as was the fixing by the President of a minimum price of $2.26 per bushel on wheat. These were, however, made necessary by errors of judgment, and have resulted in wheat selling in Chicago this week for $3 per bushel while it was selling in Liverpool at $1.37.

The Government should keep its contract with the farmers, but the Federal Treasury and not the American consumer of bread should stand the loss of the billion dollars entailed by the guaranty. There is no reason except the guaranty to the farmers and profiteering by middlemen for bread to be sold at more than 5 cents a loaf, and it should be sold at that price, though it will cost the Government about $1,000,000,000. But the Government should never again guarantee prices on commodities.

Speculation in food should be stopped. Exchanges and boards of trade should be placed under Federal control. This can be done under the commerce clause of the Constitution, which says, "Congress shall have power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States." Under this section the Supreme Court has held that the authority of the Federal Government has almost absolute control over interstate and foreign commerce. The first great case brought under this provision was against the Northern Securities Co. 15 years ago by Senator KNOX, who was at that time the United States Attorney General. The Government won the case. The executive officers of the Government have ample authority under existing law to stop profiteering. Congress, however, will in the near future amplify and extend that authority.

Much of the high cost during the war and to the present time in our country was due to the taking of 5,000,000 men out of producing pursuits and placing them in the Army; to the almost total stoppage of peace-time manufacturing industry, and the usage of the plants for war purposes; and to the necessity of enormously increasing our farm products for export to and for use by the Allies, as well as by our own Army and Navy. If it had not been that the American women rose to the occasion and worked in office, field, and factory it could not have been done.

The readjustment of economic conditions from a war-time to a peace basis will affect adversely to a less extent our people than the people of any other nation in the world. This will be due, in part, to our wonderful wealth and resources that will make it less hard for the United States to carry, pay interest on, and liquidate its war debt than any other country. But the primary reason is the kind and character of our American citizenship. Our people are God-fearing, honest, intelligent, energetic, progressive, courageous, and patriotic, and know how to solve national and international problems of our own in the interest of our own people in a manner just to others as well as to ourselves, and still refuse to enter into entangling alliances with Europe that would pledge us to go to war in a quarrel between nations in which we have no personal interest or right to interfere and on the side that might be in the wrong. King Solomon was a wise man, and he said, "He that passeth by and meddleth with strife that belongeth not to him is like one who taketh a dog by the ears." It is easy to take hold of a dog by the ears, but it is hard to let go.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WELLS GOODYKOONTZ,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, September 4, 1919,

On House joint resolution 151, to provide additional compensation for employees of the Postal Service where extraordinary and unusual conditions prevail.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I came to Congress with the avowed intention of voting at every opportunity for economy and retrenchment, but I do not consider it economical to the Government or just to the employees in the Postal Service to hold them down to a wage that is being paid in an inflated currency that will purchase or pay for only one-third of the goods or rent that it would have purchased or paid for in 1896. I am firm in the conviction that the solution of the problem of high cost of living lies in the reduction of the volume of paper money issued by the regional reserve banks of the Government and now in circulation. Unless these Government banks stop their printing presses our money will be no better than was the old-time greenback or the Confederate money near the end of the Civil War.

The object of Congress in creating the reserve system was to make the currency elastic by allowing the volume of it to expand and contract according to the lawful requirements of trade and business. It was said that at certain periods, as, for instance, crop gathering and moving time, when lots of labor was required and much money needed with which to pay the laborers, that the reserve banks would issue additional currency to meet the abnormal demand, but that when the exigency had passed the currency would be called in and retired from circulation.

There is now a large inflation of the currency.

It has expanded but refuses to contract to normal.

Its elasticity is too much in the direction of increase rather than of decrease, with the result that the purchasing power of the dollar has been severely weakened, and this to the detriment of every wage earner and salaried man in the land. The remedy lies in the hands of the officials of the reserve banks now being operated under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury. For many years I have been president of a national bank, and I think I know what I am talking about.

I will cheerfully vote for this measure as an act of simple justice to the clerks, postmasters, carriers, and others, but I regret that the raises are not more substantial. I understand that the increases are intended to be effective as of July 1, 1919, and to cover the fiscal year, and that ad interim the commission now investigating the subject will report a bill fixing a fair and reasonable compensation for these employees.

I hope that the commission will be more liberal than the committee that has had the resolution under consideration and the rule provided that has precluded us from offering amendments on the floor of the House.

Increased Compensation of Postal Employees.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SCOTT FERRIS,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, September 3, 1919.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, there are 41,000 postal clerks and 35,000 rural carriers and tens of thousands of assistant clerks and postmasters of the fourth class who, under the present high cost of living, are entitled to an increased wage. They are not only entitled to it now but they have been entitled to it for a long time—they are not only asking for it now but they have been asking for it for a long time. Wages of employees in private employment have been increased over and over again. Still the salaries of the postal employees have been allowed to remain at a standstill.

Those with less forbearance than the rest have resigned and gone into other pursuits, thereby crippling the service and denying the Government the opportunity to have experienced and trained men and women to transact its business. Others anxious to serve their Government, anxious to do their full duty, anxious to remain at their posts, have been struggling and striving to get along, hoping that a tardy Congress would come to their aid and make conditions bearable for them.

The committee has reported this bill under a rule which stipulates against all amendments; in other words, we must take it as it is or lose it all. For me and for mine, I am sorry that we suffer such a handicap in doing the thing that ought to be done. For me and mine, I think the matter of the postal clerks' and carriers' salaries ought to be finally disposed of now. For me and mine, I believe these salaries ought to be increased, so there will be no more resignations, so that the people in the Government service may not have to suffer humiliation in an effort to get along on the meager salaries paid them by their Government.

This bill provides for a flat increase of $150 a year to each of these clerks and carriers, and allows a 10 per cent increase to all fourth-class postmasters. I feel perfectly sure this increase is totally inadequate for the fourth-class postmasters, and I feel sure that the flat increase of $150 to the other employees is not commensurate with the increased cost of living.

We are told that a commission is soon to report, and that we will then have light on this entire matter and be enabled to determine just what increases they are entitled to. That is all very well. I am in favor of such a course, with this exception: I am not in favor of having the postal employees wait and be inadequately paid pending the decision of a commission which must of necessity move with great deliberation.

The increase should be granted arbitrarily and readjustments immediately follow the report of the commission.

There are always those who oppose adequate salaries for faithful and efficient Government employees. I have never in the past adopted that view. I shall not adopt it now. I shall not adopt it in the future. I believe in adequate salaries and then exacting the highest efficiency from the employees. The public demands service, and it does not desire a great Government like this one to quibble, to haggle, and beat down the necessary, prudent, and adequate salaries of efficient and faithful employees, upon whom such important public service rests.

I am not content with what is being done here to-day. It should be more. The employees will not be content. They feel keenly the need of a larger increase. Let us, therefore, await with forbearance the report of the commission, but let us hasten the report in every conceivable way, to the end that these efficient postal employees may not be forced out of the service and have the Government lose the benefit of their years of experience and their real efficiency.

Increased Compensation for Postal Employees.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM W. HASTINGS,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, September 4, 1919.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, the postal employees of the Government are of the very highest type. They are trustworthy and efficient. They perform exceedingly important duties. They have not been sufficiently recognized in the way of increased compensation. I am heartily in favor of the joint resolution and am glad to give it my support. I favor a greater increase, but as this resolution has come up under a suspension of the rules, we must accept it unamended. I am sure that the increases will be welcomed by the postal employees as a partial recognition, at least, of their claims for more pay.

This measure increases the compensation of assistant postmasters at first and second class post offices, special clerks, clerks at first and second class post office, letter carriers in the City Delivery Service, rural carriers, carriers in the village delivery service, and postmasters of the third class, $150 per annum.

The compensation of fourth-class postmasters is increased 10 per cent of the amount that they now receive. I do not think this is enough, but under the rules of the House and the circumstances under which this joint resolution is now before us, no amendment is in order, and, therefore, I can not offer an amendment to increase the same. Many of them receive inadequate compensation. I favor a small flat compensation, with a percentage of cancellation above that amount, for fourth-class postmasters.

Because this resolution does partial justice, because it provides for some increase, and because it is made effective from July 1, 1919, I am glad to vote for the resolution authorizing this additional compensation, expressing the hope that the Senate will have an opportunity to amend the joint resolution and correct certain inequalities. In that event I shall be glad to vote to concur in making reasonable additional increases. The joint resolution is as follows:

That because of the unusual conditions which now exist, the compensation provided for in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920," approved February 28, 1919, for assistant postmasters at first and second class post offices, inspectors, supervisory officials, clerks at division headquarters, special clerks, clerks at first and second class post offices, and letter carriers in the city-delivery service, printers, mechanics, and skilled laborers, watchmen, messengers and laborers, railway postal clerks, rural letter carriers, carriers in the village-delivery service, and postmasters of the third class, shall be increased $150 per annum, except that no third-class postmasters shall receive more than $2,000 per annum, and that the compensation of fourth-class postmasters shall be increased 10 per cent of the amount now authorized by law, except that no fourth-class postmaster shall receive more than $1,000 per annum. That the above-mentioned increases shall be effective from July 1, 1919. And that substitute, temporary, and auxiliary clerks at first and second class post offices, and substitute, temporary, and auxiliary letter carriers in the city-delivery service shall be paid during the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, at the rate of 60 cents per hour for each hour of service performed.

SEC. 2. That in order to provide for the increased compensation herein authorized, so much as is necessary is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supplement the amounts authorized for such employees in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1919.

Increase of Pay for Postal Employees.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARK BURDICK,

OF RHODE ISLAND,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, September 4, 1919.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that this resolution comes before us to-day in such a way that we must either vote for this all too small increase of pay for the postal employees or vote against any increase. Under the peculiar procedure of the House we are not permitted to amend the resolution in any way.

I shall, therefore, vote for this resolution, but in doing so I feel that we are not doing what a majority of this House feels it should do for the employees of the Postal Service.

We all know that the employees of the Postal Service hold positions requiring unusual intelligence, great patience, strong perseverance, and uniformly good nature. We all know that their services are required day in and day out, in sunshine and in storm. We all know that they occupy positions of trust and of great responsibility in every community. We all know that they prove faithful.

The postal system of this country is one of the most vital functions of the Government and touches the life of every one of our citizens. The welfare and happiness of the Nation in all its phases is dependent upon it. It should not and must not be viewed as a money-making institution.

We all know that for a long time the conditions of these employees have been almost unbearable, that they are the most dissatisfied class of our public employees, and that were they not so strong in the justice of their cause and so confident of their ultimate vindication the service would have broken down entirely long before now.

And so in voting to-day for this small increase of pay I do so with the hope that it will serve as a strong intimation to the commission now engaged in a revision of the pay of the Post Office Department to the effect that Congress knows these employees are underpaid and is depending upon that commission to do speedy justice in fixing the new rates of pay.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HALVOR STEENERSON,
OF MINNESOTA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, September 8, 1919.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, in the 36 years that have elapsed since the enactment of the civil-service law it has been demonstrated that so long as the appointment of the members of the Civil Service Commission rests with the President, the commissioners can not be entirely free from partisan politics and undue executive influence. The Postmaster General has in this and in previous administrations been the chief politician and dispenser of patronage, and Mr. Burleson has fully demonstrated that the Civil Service Commission must be subservient to party or the members must resign.

The activities of the Federal Government have been so enormously extended and broadened in late years that the civil list of office holders now runs into the millions, the Post Office alone controlling more than 300,000 places. Honest and impartial administration of the civil-service law by a commission independent of executive power has, therefore, become a matter of vital interest to the whole people, and it is absolutely necessary if our present form of government is to endure.

The constitutionality of the proposed amendment of the civil-service law is expressed in the following language quoted from Article II, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States:

"* * * But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments."

The bill which I have prepared and introduced follows:

"A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States,' approved January 16, 1883.

"Whereas the recent retirement of the members of the Civil Service Commission appears to be due to executive interference with their official duties; and

"Whereas Charles Mills Galloway makes the following announcement in the press, to wit:

"'My resignation was forced because I would not cooperate with Postmaster General Burleson in debauching the civil service and making a sham of the merit system. Herman W. Craven, the Republican member, and I, a Democrat, were ousted from the commission because we were not willing that the commission should be a mere adjunct of the Post Office Department and subservient to it, especially with reference to the examinations for presidential postmasters under the Executive order of March 31, 1917.

"'A very recent example of Mr. Burleson's conduct is furnished by his proposed amendment to this order, which now awaits the signature of the President. The existing order provides that the eligible with the highest standing shall be nominated. A large number of nominations have been held up, many of them for a long time, evidently in anticipation of this amendment, which will enable Mr. Burleson in many cases to deprive those standing highest in these examinations of the nominations to which they are already entitled. Among the post offices affected by the amendment are those of Boston, Mass., and Newark, N. J.

"'Furthermore, a short time ago the commission unanimously recommended that the President appoint as chief examiner an employee of the commission who is far better qualified for this position than any other person of whom the commission has knowledge. But the Postmaster General desires that the position be filled by another person of his own selection.'

"And

"Whereas it has become evident that so long as the appointment of the members of the Civil Service Commission rests with the President, they are not likely to be able to remain free from partisan political bias and influence; and

"Whereas Article II, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States, after authorizing the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, provides as follows, to wit: 'But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments:' Now, therefore,

"Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States,' approved January 16, 1883, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That the Supreme Court of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint three persons, not more than two of whom shall be adherents of the same political party, as Civil Service Commissioners, and said three commissioners shall constitute the United States Civil Service Commission, and said commissioners shall hold no other official place under the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States may remove any commissioner, and any vacancy in the position of commissioner shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. The commissioners shall each receive a salary of $10,000 per year. And each of said commissioners shall be paid his necessary traveling expenses incurred in the discharge of his duty as a commissioner. The sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Supreme Court of the United States to institute a proper inquiry and make the necesary preparation for the carrying out of this act."

The announcement of Charles Mills Galloway, above referred to, published in the Washington Post yesterday (Sept. 7, 1919), follows:

OUSTED BY BURLESON—CIVIL SERVICE CHIEF GALLOWAY BLAMES POSTMASTER GENERAL—RETIRES TO-DAY BY REQUEST—SAYS HE REFUSED TO COOPERATE IN "MAKING SHAM OF MERIT SYSTEM"—COMMISSIONER UPON RETIREMENT ISSUES STATEMENT DECLARING HE AND HIS COLLEAGUE, HERMAN W. CRAVEN, REPUBLICAN, WERE FORCED OUT BECAUSE OF UNWILLINGNESS TO "DEBAUCH SERVICE."

"Charles Mills Galloway retires from the Civil Service Commission to-day, his resignation having been asked for by the President and tendered to take effect September 7, and accepted at once. Mr. Galloway in an authorized statement said his resignation was forced because he would not cooperate with Postmaster General Burleson 'in debauching the civil service and making a sham of the merit system.'

"The retirement of Civil Service Commissioner Galloway is the closing incident of a campaign actively inaugurated in February last by the Postmaster General, according to the point of view of the commissioner, to make the civil-service system of the country a mere appendage of the Post Office Department.

FRICTION DATES BACK TO 1917.

"The effort to get rid of Galloway began simultaneously with proposals emanating from the Post Office Department to amend the Executive order of March 31, 1917, covering the examinations of candidates for presidental postmasters.

"This amendment, it is said, was intended to avoid the disagreeable duty of appointing as postmasters the candidates who received the highest ratings after examination, regardless of their political affiliation. Up to the time this amendment was put forth merit pure and simple, as disclosed by the examinations, had been the policy of the Civil Service Commission.

"Under the proposed amendment, adroitly worded and prepared at the Post Office Department, two clauses were sought to be inserted in the Executive order that struck at the very vitals of the merit system. One provided that the nomination should go to the candidate having the highest rating 'if the appointment could not be filled by promotion.'

ANOTHER PROPOSED CLAUSE.

"The other new clause provided that as a condition requisite to appointment the candidate 'must have resided within the delivery of such office for two years preceding the vacancy.'

"Both of these changes were in the interest of candidates who were backed by the postal authorities in Washington. It enabled the department in the one case to make promotions for political reasons regardless of the result of examinations, and in the other to eliminate an 'objectionable' candidate on the ground of so-called 'nonresidence.'

"Commissioner Galloway said yesterday that it had always been his aim to administer the Executive order in accordance with the law. He said he had sworn to administer the civil-service system according to the civil-service law and had consistently opposed any attempt to bring it into disrepute.

OPPOSED BY GALLOWAY.

"Efforts to have the order amended at the instance of the commission was opposed by Mr. Galloway and his former colleague, Mr. Craven, whose resignation was demanded and tendered some months ago, because it was retroactive and because they did not believe the commission should take the initiative in making such a vital change in the administration of the merit system. It would have put them in the attitude of recommending changes that would enable the Post Office Department to make an appointment of some one other than the person who already had obtained the highest rating.

"It has been commonly reported that for months before his retirement Chairman John A. McIlhenny, of the Civil Service Commission, had been following the suggestions of the Post Office Department and going counter to the wishes of his colleagues on the commission in the matter of rating papers and submitting recommendations for appointment to the Post Office Department.

REFORM LEAGUE TOOK ACTION.

"So flagrant did this action become and so violent was the mangling of the merit system that the National Civil Service Reform League in the fall of 1917 had a conference with the President, at which they explained these alleged infractions of the administration of the merit system and urged the separation of Chairman McIlhenny from the commission.

"Officials of the league say the President promised them that McIlhenny should go as soon as he was able to find a proper man to take his place. But, according to report, McIlhenny continued to work with Burleson in carrying out the Executive order as interpreted by the Post Office Department, and was finally promoted by being made financial adviser to the Government of Haiti at a very substantial increase in salary.

"Commissioners Craven and Galloway were opposed to the form of examination held under the Executive order, but when it was approved by the President they set out to administer it honestly and fairly, but it is claimed that Postmaster General Burleson constantly interfered in this commendable program.

TOOK IT TO PRESIDENT.

"Friction between the Postmaster General and the two Civil Service Commissioners, after the promotion of McIlhenny, became so sharp that the Postmaster General is supposed to have made it an issue with the President. At any rate, on February 28 last, while the President was in Paris, a demand came for the resignation of both members of the commission.

"Commissioner Craven tendered his and it was accepted to take effect March 15. Senatorial protests against the proposed summary action against Galloway held up Executive action with respect to his resignation, and it was not tendered.

"Early in last month, however, indications became apparent that the Postmaster General was restive under the persistent refusal of Galloway to deviate from the administration of the civil service in accord with the law and the literal text of the Executive order.

CLIMAX CAME FEW DAYS AGO.

"It is assumed that the matter was again taken up with the President by Mr. Burleson. A few days ago Commissioner Galloway was given his option of 'voluntarily resigning' if he did so within a reasonable time. This naturally carried with it the threat that if he did not do so he would be dismissed. Mr. Galloway, realizing that Mr. Burleson still was all powerful at the White House, accepted the inevitable situation and tendered his resignation to take effect to-day. There were no exchanges of complimentary letters as is customary, but the acceptance of the resignation came quickly.

"It was said last night that a score of prominent postmaster nominations have been held up until obstacles could be removed that would enable the Post Office Department to 'pick' the proper men, regardless of the famous Executive order putting all post offices under the cloak of a competitive civil-service examination. The two most important offices are at Boston, Mass., and Newark, N. J. Now that Commissioner Galloway has gone, these nominations probably will soon be sent to the Senate.

WILL PRACTICE LAW HERE.

"Mr. Galloway said last night that he intended to practice law in this city. His authorized announcement is as follows:

"'My resignation was forced because I would not cooperate with Postmaster General Burleson in debauching the civil service and making a sham of the merit system. Herman W. Craven, the Republican member, and I, a Democrat, were ousted from the commission because we were not willing that the commission should be a mere adjunct of the Post Office Department and subservient to it, especially with reference to examinations for presidential postmasters under the Executive order of March 31, 1917.

NOMINATIONS HELD UP.

"'A very recent example of Mr. Burleson's conduct is furnished by his proposed amendment to this order, which now awaits the signature of the President. The existing order provides that the eligible with the highest standing shall be nominated. A large number of nominations have been held up, many of them for a long time, evidently in anticipation of this amendment, which will enable Mr. Burleson in many cases to deprive those standing highest in these examinations of the nominations to which they are already entitled. Among the post offices affected by the amendment are those of Boston, Mass., and Newark, N. J.

"'Furthermore, a short time ago the commission unanimously recommended that the President appoint as chief examiner an employee of the commission who is far better qualified for this position than any other person of whom the commission has knowledge. But the Postmaster General desires that the position be filled by another person of his own selection.'"

Graft Versus Postal Salaries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES J. THOMPSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, September 4, 1919.

Mr. THOMPSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, having been for many years connected with the Postal Service, I, of course, sympathize with the postal employees throughout the Union in their wrestling match with old Gen. Hy C. Living. He is a merciless extortionist and a high-handed profiteer.

The postal clerk, the salaried man everywhere, the good housewife struggling to make both ends meet, possibly neither has observed that perhaps one of the prime secrets of the high cost of living is excessive taxation of the people. The tariff, under present Democratic rule, is too low to raise sufficient revenue to conduct the Government. For generations the Democrats preached the doctrine of the "robber tariff" and "the tariff is a tax," and substituted for it the income-tax amendment to the Federal Constitution as a revenue producer. Aside from constitutional income taxes, the people are burdened almost to death with Federal and State corporation taxes, county taxes, and so forth. When John D. Rockefeller has to pay his millions of income and corporation taxes he raises the price of gasoline and other commodities and charges it back to the people, and the people pay it; and as it is with him and others like him, so it is ad infinitim, world without end. Amen. And up goes the cost of living.

I well remember that way back in the good old days of 1898, when I was a postmaster, I established the first rural routes in northwestern Ohio and myself appointed the first rural carriers, sending their names to the Post Office Department at Washington for confirmation. They received the princely salary of $300 each per annum. For 17 years thereafter I assisted the rural carrier system to grow and develop. One season I traveled 400 miles by horse and buggy with a rural agent within the confines of my county of Defiance, Ohio, assisting to "lay out" county service. At that time merchants bitterly opposed rural free delivery establishment on the theory that it would not bring the farmers to town "after their mail," and that, as a consequence, the retail business of local merchants would necessarily be curtailed, with detriment to their general receipts. I believe that history discloses that invariably every progressive movement meets opposition—sometimes bitter. Despite meticulous opposition, however, it was the policy of the Post Office Department during the administrations of McKinley, Roosevelt, and Taft, under which I served, to build up the service—not primarily as a money-making institution or a "hard-boiled" affair, but rather as an institution whose first and last word was efficiency and a living wage to postal employees. At the incipiency of the rural service, the patrons of our three original rural routes at Defiance, Ohio, took up collections and furnished cash to assist rural mail carriers to purchase mail wagons to protect and expedite the delivery of the mail. As the service developed salaries were gradually increased, until to-day a rural carrier receives for a 24-mile standard route $1,200 per annum instead of the $300 per annum, or 400 per cent increase in 21 years. It is a popular delusion in rural communities that anybody receiving a salary from the United States Government is "well fixed," and accordingly all sorts of demands are made upon postal employees from the postmaster down the line. Rural carriers experience the disadvantage of maintaining equipment, such as horseflesh and feed, repairs, and so forth. It is estimated that at present $400 per annum is not a far-away figure to cover such items, and this added to the high cost of living does not make a rural carrier's job look like a get-rich-quick scheme.

Moreover, the parcel-post system, which was advocated by a Republican administration and instituted by the Republican Postmaster General, Frank Hitchcock, has added much to the duties and expenses and labor of rural free-delivery carriers. Hence salaries of rural carriers, generally speaking, as a class, are not commensurate with the service they are called upon to perform and the increased equipage they are compelled to maintain. The flat temporary raise of $150 per annum proposed in this joint resolution I do not consider high enough. Yet as it is to cover 270,000 or more postal employees and to cost the Government $40,000,000, it seems that it is the best we can do at present and I shall support it.

And now comes the Post Office Department with a new ruling, the wisdom of which I question. It is just being inaugurated. Twenty-four-mile rural mail routes are being lengthened to 30-mile routes. The theory of it is to deliver more mail to more people at the same cost. The department should "let well enough alone." Persistence in tearing up rural routes and reconstructing those which have been established for years will open up a veritable Pandora's box of evils, and there will be no end of complaints, troubles, and annoyances for both the patrons and the department. Carriers should not be required to make the 30-mile route at the same cost as the 24-mile route. Reorganization of the routes will cause many people throughout the rural districts of the country who formerly received their mail at their doors to walk half a mile for it. The result of the new policy of the department, if my judgment, if applied to northwestern Ohio, will result in poor service to the patrons, and the rural carriers will be required to undergo additional hardships without extra compensation.

CITY CARRIERS AND CLERKS.

Dissatisfaction among clerks and carriers in first and second class post offices appears to be at a high pitch. Subcarriers appointed to assist regular carriers are remaining in the service in some cities as long as 48 hours before quitting. Men who have seen service for years are resigning overnight. Clerks are at a premium in most cities. The Government of the United States, which has sent millions of money overseas to succor foreigners and foreign peoples, offers its own grand army of faithful and efficient postal clerks the munificent sum of $83.33 per month to start in on and exacts proficiency to begin with. In the learning of an ordinary trade an apprentice is required to serve from three to four years before becoming a "jour," but it takes the post-office clerk six years to become a master grade clerk and receive a master-clerk's wages. The system of grades covers too long a period of time and is quite unfair to the postal employees. The Government is paying its post-office men the poorest wage a man can find. Compare their salaries, if you please, with the salaries of the princes at Washington who sit in upholstered furniture and swing in swivel chairs amidst luxurious surroundings, living as tax eaters. The people in the rural districts would gasp with amazement if the postal men were receiving salaries anywhere near proportioned to the Railroad Administration men here at Washington.

For instance, it is alleged, and the records should so bear me out, that 5 officials on the staff of the Director General of Railroads are each receiving $50,000 per annum salary; 2 are getting $40,000 each; 3 are getting $35,000 each; 2, $30,000 each; 8 at $25,000 each. Then there are 11 at $20,000 each; 1 at $18,500; 1 at $18,000; 1 at $17,500; 6 at $15,000 each; 1 at $14,000; 1 at $13,200; 1 at $12,500; 4 at $12,000 each; 1 at $10,800; 1 at $10,600; and 23 at $10,000 each. This makes a total of 72 men on the staff of the Director General of Railroads receiving salaries aggregating $1,398,100. Any one of these men receives more salary than the Chief Justice of the United States, whose compensation is $15,000 per year; more than Gen. Pershing, whose salary is $10,000 per year; more than Senators, Cabinet officers, or Members of Congress.

And then there is the United States Bureau of Transportation and Housing. During the lifetime of the late Sixty-fifth Congress there was passed as emergency legislation an enactment which created this bureau, with an understanding that at the end of the war it should be discontinued automatically and its affairs adjusted and wound up. An appropriation of $100,000,000 was granted by Congress to carry on this work. Recently there was presented to the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds by a member thereof, known as House bill 6563, which, if enacted, would mean the transferring of the United States Bureau of Transportation and Housing from the Bureau of Labor to the Department of the Treasury, with power to terminate the Housing Bureau, which is now seeking to perpetuate itself as a permanent institution—another bureau with hundreds of employees to eat the taxpayers' money. It is but one instance of a long line of legalized and duly authorized public plunder and riotous expenditure of public funds. Last April this bureau had about 800 employees, and since the armistice has been signed salaries have been raised. For instance, one man by the name of Webster, employed as a comptroller, who had been on the job at $6,000 per annum, last February had his salary boosted to $10,000, but such a dust was kicked up about it that I think he has been let out. The chief counsel's salary was raised from $5,000 to $6,000, and the dormitories in this city are being run by a woman in charge, who gets a salary of $4,500 per annum. And in addition to that I am told she has a large suite in the dormitory for her private use, as well as board, and it is alleged that a relative was also provided with room and board. It is said that another woman there receives $4,000 per annum, and also has a suite of rooms, which she occupies, together with her board. There are four matrons in each of those buildings getting $100 per month and their board, in addition to chambermaids, orderlies, and all that sort of thing. There are large numbers of officials receiving $5,000, $6,000, and $7,000 per year, or salaries approximating that amount.

The Federal Government in Washington, with its mazes of bureaus and commissions, has become paternalistic and socialistic with meticulous meddling in the people's affairs. It seems to have its nose in everybody's business throughout the land. There seems to be an utter disregard for the economical expenditure of the public funds on the part of this Housing Corporation and other Wilsonian governmental departments. The President himself has recently come before Congress and asked for $5,000,000 to pay the expenses of the American peace delegation while in Europe. And now the latest news is that he wants the Congress of the United States to advance from four to five billions of dollars in loans for foreign governments. Talk about extravagance. The entire Government reeks with it. And yet, when it comes to paying decent wages and decent salaries to the postal employees in all departments throughout the land, there seems to be a parsimonious howl. Is it possible that we have billions and trillions for foreigners and but little for our own people? Why, gentlemen, it is a fact that this United States Housing Corporation spent $128,000 for automobiles.

It is true these expenses must stop, but they can not effectively or altogether stop until both branches of Congress have larger Republican majorities and a President at the White House of the same political complexion, with backbone enough to turn the rascals and tax eaters out and appoint a personnel in the Department of Justice which will send a few of the war-time profiteers where they belong. This Congress is called upon to appropriate funds upon the request of a spendthrift administration. As fast as Congress endeavors to put on the brakes the bureaus of the administration devise ways and means to create deficiencies and to perpetuate its army of political grafters. I do not place in the same category postal employees throughout the country with the favored who reign at Washington. While rascals of high and low degree are making their millions here, I think the poorly paid postal employees throughout the land in all branches of the service should be granted a living wage or an honorable and remunerative salary. Such salaries they are not now receiving. As an evidence of the situation prevailing in the smaller communities throughout the United States, I beg to submit resolutions passed by Branch No. 470 of the National Association of Letter Carriers at Defiance, Ohio, as follows:

Whereas the cost of living has advanced over 1907 100 per cent, while our maximum salary was $1,100; and
Whereas the cost of living is advancing day by day and no relief from the excessive high cost is in sight; and
Whereas the wages in all lines of work are still advancing, and in most cases have advanced 100 per cent since 1907: Therefore be it

Resolved by Branch 470, National Association of Letter Carriers, in regular meeting assembled on July 16, 1919, That we request our representatives in Congress to use their utmost effort with Congress and the congressional committee which is investigating the salary question to have the salary of letter carriers raised to a minimum of $1,500 and a maximum of $2,000, same to be effective since July 1, 1918; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Postal Record for publication.

M. G. DUERR,
Secretary Branch 470.

These resolutions are accompanied by a letter of transmittal from the secretary, which I herewith submit:

DEFIANCE, OHIO, July 16, 1919.

Hon. C. J. THOMPSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed you will find a partial list of prevailing prices of living commodities, also a list of increases, of increased wages paid other labor. Labor that I would consider on a par with the postal employees. You will note that both the living commodities and other labor have advanced more than 100 per cent since 1907, while the postal employees have received an increase of 25 per cent.

The bricklayer, carpenter, painter, machinist, and, in fact, all other labor can take his dollar and go out and buy dollar's worth for dollar, as he did about 12 years ago. We the postal employees have got to figure and economize to make the 25 per cent increase, or $1.25, buy $2 worth.

I find that on a salary of $1,400 per year my wages equal that of the bricklayer's helper, plasterer's helper, section hand, and several others of the lowest grade of labor.

I know by actual experience, and think you will agree with me from the financial statements inclosed, that it is impossible for any man to live decently and provide for his family properly on the present salary paid the postal employees. I believe you will also agree with me that the Government should be as fair and considerate to their employees as the private employer is to his, and that our Government should be the first to set an example and become a model employer.

In establishing a wage scale I do not believe that a permanent wage scale should be set but should be made to meet the advanced cost of living, and be controlled by the same.

Has the committee held any sessions? And if they have, would be pleased to hear from you on the action they have or may take.

Thanking you for the very deep interest you have taken in our behalf for increased compensation, and trusting you will do all in your power to help grant us immediate relief, I beg to remain,

Sincerely, yours,

M. G. DUERK, Secretary.

I also submit a statement showing the per cent of increase in the cost of coal, clothing, hardware, shoes, flour, plumber's supplies, furniture, drugs, meats, beef, pork, and veal ranging between the years 1907, 1914, and 1919. This statement, which is illuminating, was compiled by the local secretary of Branch No. 470, Defiance, Ohio, and is as follows:

	1907	1914	1919	Per cent of increase.

RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS AND ASSISTANT POSTMASTERS.

Not only the rural carriers, city carriers, clerks, and so forth, are complaining, but also the railway mail clerks of the traveling post offices. I submit a sample of very many similar letters received from railway mail clerks, assistant postmasters, and postmasters:

BRYAN, OHIO, August 27, 1919.

HON. C. J. THOMPSON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The high cost of living and inadequate salaries of railway postal clerks make an issue of such paramount importance that can not be given too serious consideration.

It is a well-established fact that living costs have advanced from 100 per cent to 300 per cent since 1914, while the average salary of the railway postal clerk has been advanced only 10 per cent, making it practically impossible in a majority of cases to pay for housing, support families, educate children, and maintain a decent standard of living.

A reduction in the price of commodities seems very remote, and even if made will only partially alleviate the increased cost of living; in view of that fact we are asking you to use your best efforts in securing for the railway postal clerks a permanent salary increase of 75 per cent, calling your attention, in the meantime, to the Zihlman bill (H. R. 8537), which you are urged to support as a temporary relief measure.

I trust, my dear sir, that you will give this matter your careful and favorable consideration, bearing in mind the fact that an adequate salary has a powerful influence on efficiency.

Respectfully, yours,

W. J. WALLACE,
Railway Mail Clerk.

LEIPSIC, OHIO, August 26, 1919.

HON. C. J. THOMPSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am writing you at this time, asking that you support the Senate joint resolution 84, providing for an increased compensation of 35 per cent for all postal employees. We feel that we are entitled to and should have this increase in order to support our families and live as American citizens desire to live. At the present wages it is impossible to live on the salary paid and keep up without drawing on our savings, and we feel that we should not be asked to do this. It is not my desire to get this increase in order to hoard up money, but simply to be able to keep up on my salary without going in the "hole."

It is needless to tell you about the increased cost of living and about the low wages as compared to what others are getting, as you are already familiar with this; but it is through you men that our salaries are granted, so I am imploring you to support the resolution, and sincerely thank you in advance for anything you can do to help us.

Very sincerely, yours,

PAUL O. PLACE,
Assistant Postmaster.

TOLEDO, OHIO, August 7, 1919.

HON. C. J. THOMPSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. THOMPSON: According to newspaper reports, the railroad brotherhoods are earnestly seeking some relief from the high cost of living. When this matter comes up for attention before the body of which you are a Member, I will also ask you to consider the predicament of the submerged tenth, namely, the postal employees.

There is some talk of granting salary increases in certain localities. Permit me to say that would be rank injustice. Being thoroughly familiar with the situation in this State, I wish to emphasize that a substantial raise in salary is needed by all the employees and not a select few.

Trusting you will use your influence to obtain favorable action on this very important matter, I beg to remain,

Sincerely, yours,

J. C. GRACEY,
Secretary-Treasurer Ohio Federation of Postal Employees.

POSTMASTERS.

No class of postal employees are so poorly paid as the fourth-class postmasters. I know of one instance in my district where a fourth-class postmaster receives and dispatches 13 mails per day—as many as are received and dispatched by the larger second-class post office in my home town. I submit the following letters from fourth-class postmasters and trust that the joint commission appointed by the Congress of the United States to permanently readjust salaries will not overlook the third and fourth class postmasters of the country:

Hon. C. J. THOMPSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Just a few words asking your support and assistance in an increase in pay to fourth-class postmasters. The fourth-class postmasters are receiving the same pay, with the exception of a very small increase, amounting in my office to about $3 per month, that they got when living expenses were about half of what they are now. We have to depend on our cancellation, yet in an office like this, where we have an interchange of mail with three railroads, handling the mail that supplies three or four good-sized towns, the pay is not in keeping with the work. We have our office open from 6.20 to 7.30. Takes the entire time of one man and part of another to handle the business. We must own our fixtures, pay rent, fuel, and lights, pay a clerk, and have about $20 per month left for ourself. My office has too much business to handle in connection with a store, so must maintain separate room for office. During the last two years the salary of rural carrier has been increased $27 per month, and in summer time he makes his trip in 3 hours—somewhat different from the postmasters 12 to 13 hours. We receive 13 mails daily and send out a like number, and after paying rent, fuel, and lights have left about $60 per month to divide with a clerk. A day laborer gets $3 per day. Don't you think we have something coming? The Post Office Department boasts of their surplus. No wonder—the surplus when made by men who have got about half pay. They seem to have plenty of money to install aerial mail routes, why not pay the fourth-class fellows a living wage? I started in to write a short letter, but had to unload what was on my mind. Pardon me for taking your time, and thank you for anything you may be able to do to help us get a fair deal. I am,

Very truly, yours, R. E. TEARNEY, Postmaster.

FORT JENNINGS, OHIO, August 18, 1919.

Hon. CHAS. J. THOMPSON,
United States Representative, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The cost of living is getting so serious that I can not refrain longer from urging an increase in pay.

During the last year we handled 1,500 to 2,000 pieces of mail daily, sold $2,128.65 stamp stock, and issued 3,192 money orders, for which we received a salary and commission of $1,027. You no doubt know what it is to do this amount of work in connection with the other duties in a post office.

After deducting rent, fuel, light, and clerk hire, you can imagine what there is left.

These conditions have existed for the last three or four years. We cut the food to the lowest and wore out the clothes to the last, and still had to use from the small amount laid away for later years.

Who can support a family at such low rate of pay?

Won't you please assist us in getting relief at the earliest possible moment.

Respectfully, yours,

FRANK H. KRAMER, Postmaster.

I support this joint resolution to give the postal employees throughout the land temporary financial relief pending the final action of the Joint Commission on Postal Salaries. I think part of the increased cost can be covered by the "surplus" the Postmaster General boasts about. The Postal Service needs efficiency, and poorly paid employees are not conducive to the same. Truly the laborer is worthy of his hire. The Post Office Department is the only socialistic branch of our Government. It was not established as a money-making institution, but as an establishment to serve the people well and truly. It reaches everywhere and everybody.

This Congress should speedily do away with the present costly system of operating railroads. Turn them back to private owners, with proper governmental control, run them something like national banks are run, and eliminate the tremendous waste of millions upon millions of dollars, and use part of the money in developing efficiency in the Postal Service.

This Congress would also do well and serve the taxpayers of the Nation by backing what is known as the Clark bill. The unanimous membership of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I am a member, recommend that the bill do pass. We seem to think it is the duty of Congress to lop off the waste and extravagances in high places and save millions of the taypayers' money. I am one Member out of 435 who would neither dillydally nor temporize with rascals or plain grafters. It seems to be the fashion here at Washington to try to beat the Government while the beating is good and milk the taxpayers dry. Some of the employees of war-time bureaus are receiving now larger salaries than during the war and larger than the salaries of Members of Congress. One dormitory expert in the United States Housing Corporation, I have recently learned, was boosted from $5,000 to $12,000 per annum. Destroy the graft. Millions upon millions could be saved if the Congress acting collectively would smite with swift and heavy hand. Down with graft and up with a square deal, not only to postal employees but to the millions of American people unorganized and whose shoulders are becoming humpbacked with the weight of burdens and taxes heaped upon them by an unspeakable and unconscionable administration. May we not hope that after the 4th of March, 1921, we may at least have an honest government, economically but not parsimoniously administered?

Compensation for Postal Employees.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OSCAR E. KELLER,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, September 9, 1919.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the passage of this bill, although I am disappointed that the rules of the House governing the procedure under which this bill is being considered preclude the offering of amendments to raise the amount of the increase provided for.

The argument has been advanced that a larger increase can not be granted at the present time under the postal rates now in effect. There is no reason why the rates effective during the war of 3 cents and 2 cents should not have been kept in force instead of reducing them shortly after the armistice was signed. Of course, pressure was brought to bear to reduce the rates of postage—by whom? By certain of the powerful interests of the country. The reduction was promptly made effective, and who are the sufferers? The great number of postal employees, who are now told that an adequate living wage can not be granted because big business of the country demands that the postal rate be kept at 2 cents and 1 cent. The postal employees and their families are made to suffer to satisfy the wants of the business men of the country; and the ultimate result is that millions of people of the United States are indirectly affected by the inefficiency in the service.

The very men who are asking for economy in public expenditures, for a reduction in postal rates, are also asking for a tariff for revenue to make up the deficiencies in our operating expenses; a protective tariff which will be beneficial to a few interests at the expense of the public in general.

The figures, as I have been able to compile them from the report of the committee and from other sources, would indicate that the increase of $150 would involve an expenditure of approximately $23,000,000, as follows:

Approximately 35,000 letter carriers at $150 each	$5,000,000
Approximately 45,000 post-office clerks, including supervisory officials, at $150 each	7,000,000
Approximately 43,000 rural letter carriers at $150 each	6,000,000
Approximately 18,000 postal clerks at $150 each	2,250,000
Employees not listed above, approximately 2,000, at $150	3,000,000
Total	23,250,000

Statements have been made that the services of employees in the Post Office Department require no more ability than labor. If that were true you would not have men in the service who are qualified to write letters such as the following, which are typical of the many I have received explaining the condition of the average employee, due to the high cost of living and the lack of increase in salary:

ST. PAUL, MINN., August 29, 1919.

Congressman O. E. KELLER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I take the liberty to write you in reference to any action taken by Congress on the question of postal employees' salaries, especially railway mail clerks.

I am at present assigned the St. Paul terminal railway post office, and, along with about 80 other regular clerks, have expressed our opinion on the proposed $150 flat increase per annum, and find it entirely unsatisfactory and insufficient. Our Railway Mail Association is backed to a man asking a 50 per cent increase, which does not even cover the advance in price of the necessities which have in nearly all cases doubled in price.

I would also like to call your attention to the fact that a great many of our clerks in the lower grades, especially grade 1, drawing $1,100 per annum, have found it necessary to have their wives seek employment outside the home in order to defray living expenses, and $150 more per year will not remedy this execrable condition.

Thanking you for your support and awaiting my opportunity to reciprocate, I am,

Very truly, yours, J. F. O'GORMAN,
St. Paul Terminal Railway Post Office.

EXCELSIOR, MINN., August 28, 1919.

Hon. O. E. KELLER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: The question of increases in pay for postal employees has arisen and wish to say that the postal employees have been discriminated against again and again. Their citizenship rights have been twisted and turned and squeezed and wrung till scarcely a vestige of them remains; only the right to vote.

The commonest alien enjoys a wealth of citizenship privileges after his declaration compared to the postal employee, who was born and reared here; and this very same common alien is paid more money today for his labor in the streets, the mines, the mills, and the railroads than the postal employee is for his.

And now, Mr. KELLER, the fact that you men in Congress quibble and hesitate and procrastinate over increases in pay for postal employees is disconcerting; yes, disgusting. There should be absolutely no question as to the need of increases; the only question that should present itself is, How much or what kind of increases should they have? The answer comes of its own volition; they should have immediate and substantial increases. The men are demoralized in body, mind, and soul, and their wives and families are also. Men all about them are being paid 50, 100, and 200 per cent more than they are for the same class of service, and such a condition they can not long endure. They are as fine a body of men as could possibly be found and, Mr. KELLER, to maintain that quality and that high standard they must necessarily be paid what they are worth.

Now, Mr. KELLER, you will have to pay the postal employees more money or they will go to the employer who pays them a wage commensurate with the position they hold, where they are given some consideration and where they are entitled to the exercise of their privileges as citizens of the good old U. S. A. The postal employees need a raise; give it to them, and Godspeed.

Sincerely, WALTER W. MUNGER.

Increased Pay For Postal Employees.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN B. JOHNSTON,
OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, September 4, 1919,

On House joint resolution 151, to provide additional compensation for employees of the Postal Service where extraordinary and unusual conditions prevail.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this resolution. I had hoped, however, that the committee would have reported a bill providing for more adequate compensation for postal employees. There is no class of public servants more overworked and underpaid than the letter carriers and postal clerks, and there is no class of public servants more deserving. I have had hundreds of communications and messages from my constituents urging me to lend my influence so that the postal employees may secure increased pay, and it will be difficult for me to satisfy the people of my district that an increase of only $150 per annum is sufficient.

You gentlemen from the rural sections of the country do not and perhaps can not be expected to know the character of work required of a mail carrier in a large city. In my district—and conditions are similar throughout Brooklyn and New York—a letter carrier leaves the station to which he is attached laden like a donkey. He has a bag filled with mail, which weighs about 75 pounds, swinging from his shoulder, and his arms are also filled with letters. When he reaches his route and commences to deliver, he deposits the bag—often must climb a stoop, leave his mail, descend again, pick up his bag and go to the next house, where he repeats the performance and continues this way for hours. He does this several times a day, week in and week out, year in and year out, in stormy weather as well as fair weather, in the torrid heat as well as in the bitter cold, and he is as regular as the sun itself. I have seen him drenched to the skin, but not one piece of his mail even damp.

I think it is a very shortsighted policy for the Government to be so niggardly and penurious in its attitude toward the postal employees. They must bring to the discharge of their duties a high degree of intelligence, as well as untiring industry. No class of men has been more loyal or more faithful, and none has been so poorly rewarded. We are informed that the service is crippled because of the large number of resignations. This is not surprising, when we appreciate the substantial increases that have been made in other branches of industry, public as well as private. I know of window cleaners, most of whom can neither read nor write and many of whom can not speak our language, who obtain $30 a week. It is impossible for a mail carrier or postal clerk to support his family on the wage he now receives. He can barely provide his family with the necessaries of life and, of course, none of the luxuries.

It is provided by the resolution to increase their pay $150, or about 10 per cent a year. The gentleman from Minnesota, the distinguished chairman of the committee, said that according to the statistics furnished by the Department of Labor the cost of living in New York has increased 79 per cent since 1914. The fact is—and I am quoting from the same report as the gentleman from Minnesota—that the percentage of increase in New York City from December, 1914, to June, 1919, is: Food, 75.32 per cent; male clothing, 138.62 per cent; female clothing, 162.19 per cent; housing, 13.38 per cent; fuel and light, 45.40 per cent; furniture and furnishings, 136.57 per cent; and miscellaneous items, 75.11 per cent. I suppose no one will dispute that the cost of living has increased still higher between June 1 and September 1. Even when conditions were normal—that is, before the cost of living had increased at all—it is a notorious fact that the postal employee, particularly in large cities, was the poorest paid of all public employees, municipal, State, or national.

I know the committee takes the position that this is only a temporary measure to provide additional compensation where extraordinary and unusual conditions prevail, but why they determined to increase the wages only 10 per cent where the cost of living has increased over 80 per cent I am at a loss to understand.

A letter carrier is compelled to spend $50, or one-third of the increase provided by this resolution, to furnish himself with shoes and purchase equipment which the rules of the department require. He is now forced to pay $17.50 for a summer uniform which formerly cost him $12, and $29 for a winter uniform which he formerly purchased for $19. He must pay $2 for a cap which he previously secured for $1.50. A city carrier, who must tramp all day on stone pavements, must buy four pairs of shoes a year, and he is compelled now to pay $9 for shoes which only three years ago he could get for $3.50 a pair; moreover, to have his shoes mended he must now pay $2.25, when he could formerly have them soled for 75 cents.

In view of the tremendous increase in the cost of living and also of the character of service rendered, I believe the postal employees are entitled to the increase in wages provided by the joint resolution introduced by my colleague [Mr. GOLDFOGLE], and I also believe that any temporary increase should be largely in excess of $150 a year, as provided by this resolution.

Under the rules of this House no amendment providing for a larger increase can be offered. As Judge MOON said, it was brought before us in this form to prevent us from amending it, "so you will have to take this or you will have to take nothing."

I will support this resolution not because I believe it provides a reasonable, fair, or just compensation but on the theory that a crumb is better than no bread.

Increased Pay for Postal Employees.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS GALLAGHER.
OF ILLINOIS.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, September 4, 1919.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the bill now before the House is drawn in such a way that we only provide a small increase for postal employees; that we must vote for it without any opportunity of amendment or they get nothing. Under the circumstances I am compelled to vote for it, though it only helps a little. I believe that employees of the Postal Service are deserving of better treatment; they should get a decent salary; and I desire to take advantage of this opportunity of placing in the RECORD an appeal from Chicago Local No. 1, National Federation of Postal Employees, with the hope that conditions in the Chicago post office, as fully set forth in the appeal, may be brought to the attention of the Senate, and the justice of the appeal will be placed before that body in such a way that competent remuneration will be provided for this worthy class of Government employees. I also wish to call attention to certain statistics gathered in Chicago bearing on this subject. I am sure that if the authorities were as anxious to do this as they were to reduce the postage from 3 cents to 2 cents they could find the money to do it. If the 3-cent postage was allowed to stand a little while longer, ample funds would be provided and the employees given a satisfactory salary.

Let me read the following public notice to Congress by Chicago Local No. 1:

WHY JEOPARDIZE POSTAL SERVICE?—A TIMELY APPEAL TO THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS.

To the Senate and House of Representatives, Sixty-sixth Congress, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: The Postal Service is on trial. For some time it has ceased to function as efficiently as you, the authorized representatives of the Nation, and the general public are justified to expect.

The Postal Service is on trial because it no longer can comply with the needs and demands of the public. Our mail service is in jeopardy because, as one of the main arteries of commercial life, it fails to serve its purpose—the prompt transmission of the mails. Every enterprise, whether big or small, to-day suffers on account of the deplorable inadequacy of the Postal Service.

POSTAL SERVICE NEAR BREAKDOWN.

The Postal Service in Chicago, for instance, is on the verge of a breakdown. In its ill-ventilated premises a totally inadequate force of clerks copes in vain with a constant, heavy influx of mail far beyond the working capacity of this limited number of employees. Although they toil an average of two hours overtime per day, many sacks of unworked mail are mute but eloquent evidence of the daily unfinished task when the overworked and underpaid night clerk meets the equally abused day clerk during the early hours of the day.

The important communications of big mailers, whether letters, circulars, or parcel post, the means through which they attract and interest an extensive patronage, have no assurance whatever of the service they need to expedite their various transactions.

WHY MAIL IS DELAYED.

Why is mail delayed? Because the force of employees, their pay, and the general facilities are totally inadequate.

Because pay of post-office clerks is so ridiculously small, by no means commensurate with the cost of living, nor with the decidedly higher wages of most unskilled workers, an adequate force can not be retained in the service.

Approximately 3,000 clerks have entered the Postal Service in Chicago, and also have resigned from it, since January 1, 1919. To the 3,600 clerks employed in Chicago's main post office and stations throughout the city local officials in vain endeavor to add about 600 clerks. The deplorable outcome of this attempt brought, as stated above, about 3,000 entrants and a similar number of resignations from a service that in every respect is uninviting to the applicant who wants a living wage and fair working conditions.

This condition is general throughout the country.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

Cause and effect of the badly neglected service in the Chicago post office may be summarized as follows:

CAUSE.

Inadequate pay (less than most unskilled workers receive).

Excessive night work.

Constant overtime, causing fatigue and consequent mental sluggishness and physical inability to perform assigned duties with that vim and vigor essential to absolutely satisfactory results. (Daily overtime is a deliberate violation of the eight-hour law, which provides for overtime merely in emergency cases.)

Insanitary working premises, congestion, and poor light.

EFFECT.

A totally inadequate force.

A crippled service.

A resultant lower grade of efficiency, seriously impeding the prompt transmission of the mails.

LIVING WAGE WILL ASSURE COMPETENT MAIL SERVICE.

A living wage unquestionably will assure a competent mail service. The figures of Government experts and other competent authorities prove that a living wage for a family of four is far beyond the maximum of $1,500 per year for post-office clerks.

Still the post-office clerk receives but the means of a bare existence. The unavoidable result of a sadly depleted force of employees, owing to inadequate pay, is an unreliable mail service.

IMMEDIATE RELIEF IMPERATIVE.

Immediate relief is imperative. The enactment of remedial legislation for the next fiscal year will not pay the accumulating bills of underpaid post-office clerks during the current year. The post-office clerk can not live now on what he will receive in the future.

A JUSTIFIABLE APPEAL IN THE HOUR OF NEED.

Mr. Senator and Mr. Congressman, if you are considering the pressing need of more adequate compensation in this hour of need, do not defeat the very object of such legislation by not providing amply to make wages of postal employees commensurate with the abnormal cost of living and with the exacting duties of a distributor—an enervating task at a high rate of speed, based upon the necessary knowledge of thousands of facts.

To you, gentlemen of the Congress, post-office clerks must appeal for redress of grievances, cognizant of their constitutional right to secure a living wage and tolerable working conditions. Without such fair concessions, many capable and experienced employees will find it impossible to remain in the service.

Adequate pay will assure an efficient Postal Service, which in turn will more than offset the expense of a sorely needed wage increase.

Very respectfully,

CHICAGO LOCAL NO. 1, NATIONAL FEDERATION OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

Let me also present herewith the statistics gathered in Chicago, Ill., that I have already referred to, with comparative tables, that no doubt will prove as instructive as they are interesting:

STATISTICS GATHERED IN CHICAGO, ILL., DURING THE MONTH OF APRIL, 1919, FOR PRESENTATION TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE COMMITTEE ON SALARIES IN POST OFFICES.

The following figures and data, being compiled by a committee appointed by the Chicago, Ill., post office clerks for the information and guidance of your honorable body, are respectfully submitted for your earnest consideration.

We trust that they will be sufficient proof of the urgent need for increased salaries in the Postal Service; salaries that will be commensurate with the cost of living and the work performed.

The subjoined table merely covers the expenses of a minimum existence for a family of four, including two children of school age. The appendage is added to show what is necessary to maintain a minimum American standard of living. We have dared include in this the amount necessary for the buying of a home because, as Gilbert Chesterton, a wise philosopher, once said:

"Every normal man desires a house of his own. He does not merely want a roof above him and a chair below him; he wants an objective and visible kingdom; a fire at which he can cook what food he likes; a door he can open upon what friends he chooses. This is the normal appetite of man."

A MINIMUM EXISTENCE-EXPENSE ACCOUNT FOR FAMILY OF FOUR.

Minimum existence-expense account for family of four, including two children of school age:

Rent, $25 per month	$300.00
Fuel, 5 tons coal at $12 per ton	60.00
Gas and light, $4 per month	48.00
Food, at 18 cents per person, per meal, $15.12 per week	786.24
Clothing, including shoes, underclothing, coats, hats, suits, etc., husband and wife, $150; two children, $150	300.00
Insurance, household and life	92.60
Telephone, necessity because of irregular working hours	18.00
Reading matter, newspaper and two magazines	13.88
Car fare, to and from work only	37.44
Doctor and dentist bills	50.00
Household upkeep, $5 per month, and incidentals $2 per month	84.00
Total for year's necessities	1,790.16

ESTIMATE BASED ON AMERICAN STANDARD OF LIVING.

Additional items necessary to the maintenance of an American standard of living:

Interest on home, $15 per month	$180.00
Fuel, 1 ton additional	12.00
Repairs and upkeep	100.00
Insurance on house	10.00
Reading matter for educational purposes	10.00
Church or lectures	25.00
Recreation, vacation, $50; movies or other diversions, $1 per week	102.00
	439.00
Doctor and dentist bills reduced $25 because of better living conditions	25.00
	414.00
Minimum existence, total	1,790.16
Grand total	2,204.16

In comparing these totals with the prevailing salaries paid the postal employees the question arises as to how they manage to get along.

MEAGER PAY COMPELS EXTRA EMPLOYMENT.

The answer is that the average married postal employee is forced to bolster up his inadequate salary by either one of the following means: He must himself seek extra employment, or his wife is forced to seek outside work; he must take boarders into the home, or deprive his family of proper nourishment and clothing.

These are in themselves evident mathematical certainties. They can be verified by canvassing any number of married postal employees who have families to support.

Under these conditions it will be readily seen that the home, if, indeed, it can be called such, must suffer.

HOW COST OF FOOD INCREASED.

In support of the food item of $786.24 we submit the following table, taken from the report issued by the Government April 18, 1919:

	1913	1914	1917	1918	To-day.
Sirloin steak....pound..	$0.25	$0.26	$0.30	$0.37	$0.45
Pork chops....do....	.20	.30	.31	.38	.42
Bacon, sliced....do....	.32	.32	.50	.60	.63
Lard....do....	.15	.15	.31	.35	.37
Eggs....dozen..	.39	.35	.30	.68	.52
Butter....pound..	.36	.36	.49	.65	.72
Milk....quart..	.08	.08	.12	.14	.13
Bread....pound loaf..	.06	.07	.10	.10	.10
Sugar....pound..	.05	.06	.08	.10	.11

As a whole, 22 articles were 2 per cent higher last month than the preceding month, and were 14 per cent higher than March, 1918.

For the six-year perior March, 1913, to March, 1919, the increase in the retail prices of all the foods was 80 per cent, with flour, bacon, lard, and corn meal increasing more than 100 per cent.

HIGH PRICES TO CONTINUE.

And, according to the Chicago Daily News of April 11, 1919, there is no hope for a return to former living costs. We quote a part of a statement issued by the Chicago branch of the American Meat Packers' Association and printed therein:

"The situation in the meat industry," says the statement, "is just about what Herbert C. Hoover and other Food Administration officials said it would be. High prices will continue. Each day that brings final peace nearer means a greater call on this country for meat. The world's production of live stock is crippled."

Thus it will be seen that while the cost of food has increased all the way from 80 to 100 per cent within the last six years, and other products that go to make up the necessities of life have increased in proportion, the postal employees' wages have been increased only 25 per cent. In other words, the purchasing power of their salaries has been reduced from 55 to 75 per cent.

REMUNERATION IN PRIVATE INDUSTRIES FAR GREATER THAN IN THE POSTAL SERVICE.

That private industries have recognized the necessity for wages commensurate with the increased cost of living is evidenced by the following table of salaries. We insert the salaries of postal employees at the bottom of each group to show the marked contrast in Government salaries:

	Per annum.
Masons and bricklayers	$2,002.00
Structural iron setters	2,002.00
Plasterers	2,002.00
Hoisting engineers	2,002.00
Electrical workers	2,002.00
Steamfitters	1,864.72
Tile setters	1,859.00
Plumbers	1,859.00
Gas fitters	1,859.00

	Per annum.
Stonecutters	1,859.00
Cement-floor layers	1,859.00
Ornamental-iron setters	1,830.40
Lathers	1,830.40
Carpenters	1,830.40
Roofers	$1,773.20 to 1,830.40
Sprinkler fitters	1,830.40
Pipe coverers	1,744.60
Marble cutters	1,716.00
Painters	1,716.00
Sheet-metal workers	1,716.00
Cement finishers	1,716.00
Elevator constructors	1,716.00
Post-office clerks	$1,000.00 to 1,500.00

The above workers, excepting the postal clerks, receive time and one-half for overtime, with double time for work performed on Sundays and holidays.

Many of these workers have received increases in pay since the above schedule was put into effect.

Printers.

	Per annum.
Printers, pressmen	$1,924.00 to $2,340.00
Folding-machine operators, 3 machines	1,846.00
Stock cutters	1,768.00
Tension men	1,716.00
Folding-machine operators, 2 machines	1,790.00
Separating-machine operators	1,638.00
Separating-machine assistants	1,638.00
Folding-machine feeders	1,560.00
Press feeders	1,664.00

Night work, $1.50 per week in excess of day scale.

Stockyard workers.

	Per annum.
Cattle killing, floormen	$2,496.00
Cattle killing, splitters	2,496.00
Cattle killing, backers	2,381.20
Cattle killing, rumpers	2,256.40
Cattle killing, sticking and heading	1,996.80
Cattle killing, knocking only	1,747.20
Sheep killing, pelters	2,184.00
Sheep killing, sitters	2,184.00
Hog killing, scalders	2,121.60
Hog killing, helpers	1,872.00
Hog killing, gutting	2,184.00
Beef casing, middle fatter	2,496.00
Beef casing, scraping tripe	2,121.60
Hog casings, feeding machine	1,872.00
Kitchen cooks	1,996.80
Live-stock handlers, scale counters	1,920.00
Live-stock handlers, feeders	1,800.00
Common labor, men and women	1,632.40
Post-office clerks, including expert distributers, maximum	1,500.00

Teamsters and chauffeurs.

	Per annum.
Laundry-wagon drivers, $25 per week and commission, average $40 per week	$2,080.00
Milk-wagon drivers, $35 per week and commission, average $36.50	1,898.00
Bakery-wagon drivers, $25 per week and commission, average $42 per week	2,184.00
Chauffeurs, 7-ton truck	1,768.00
Chauffeurs, 5-ton truck	1,638.00
Chauffeurs, 3-ton truck	1,508.00
Teamsters, 4-horse wagon	1,508.00
Post-office clerks, expert distributers included, maximum	1,500.00

Railroad office clerks.

Freight-rate clerks, $1,500 to $1,700 per year and over.

Post-office clerks are the lowest paid of any of the above-mentioned workers.

In explaining the comparatively good wages paid some of the above-mentioned workers it may be said that they are skilled, the assumption being that postal employees are not.

We want to prove that this is not so.

POST-OFFICE CLERKS RANK AMONG MOST SKILLED WORKERS.

The post-office clerk is among the most skilled of them all, comparing favorably with many of the professions. Indeed, the qualifications of a post-office clerk transcend some of the professions in that his efficiency is impaired if he does not devote a certain amount of time to study at home.

A SEVERE TEST OF EFFICIENCY.

Upon entering the service he is required to commit to memory a scheme of distribution comprising from 10,000 to 25,000 separate and distinct notations or facts. To illustrate: He must know that the town of Olney, Ill., is in the county of Richland; that a letter for that place must be dispatched on the 8.30 a. m. auto for connection with the Chicago & Carbondale R. P. O. tr. 23 No. 1 via Champaign, leaving the Illinois Central depot at 8.45 a. m. When this train is gone he must know on what train to send it next, and so on as per following schedule:

Chicago & Carbondale tr. 23 No. 1 (via Champaign), Illinois Central depot, pouch locks 8.29 a. m., auto 8.30 a. m., train time 8.45 a. m.

Chicago & St. Louis tr. 21 No. 3, Dearborn Station, pouch locks 9.41 a. m., auto 9.42 a. m., train time 10 a. m.

Chicago, Springfield & St. Louis tr. 1 No. 3, Union Station, pouch locks 9.59 a. m. auto 10 a. m., train time 10.15 a. m.

Chicago & Evansville tr. 93 No. 3, Dearborn Station, pouch locks 12.06 p. m., auto 12.07 p. m., train time 12.25 p. m.

Chicago & Carbondale tr. 3, No. 2, except Saturday, Illinois Central Station, pouch locks 5.59 p. m., auto 6 p. m., train time 6.15 p. m.

Chicago & Carbondale tr. 21 No. 2, except Saturday, Illinois Central Station, pouch locks 8.14 p. m. auto 8.15 p. m., train time 8.30 p. m.

He must have stored away in his memory approximately the same amount of information regarding 2,000 to 5,000 other post offices in his particular State or section of States. He must, besides, be ever on the alert for letters that are overweight or stamps that are uncancelled while he distributes mail at the rate of 75 to 100 pieces per minute.

As train schedules change, post offices are discontinued, new ones established, or old ones reestablished, the schemes of distribution are in a continual state of fluctuation so that the clerk, in order to maintain a proper standard of efficiency, must study and practice at home.

He must be prepared to take an examination every 75 days or every year, according to scheme, and pass with a mark of not less than 95 per cent. This requires him to devote on an average of one hour a day to his study at home.

Regarding the efficiency of the average post-office clerk, Mr. Frank H. Galbraith, superintendent of mails in the Chicago post office, made the statement that the post-office clerk makes only one error in every 34,026 pieces of mail handled, while the general public makes one in every 177.

NO EXTRA PAY FOR NIGHT WORK.

The majority of the clerks in large offices like Chicago work nights, and yet there is no wage or time differential for such work. The Government is far behind private industries in this respect.

The following figures taken from the mailing, city, registry, and parcel-post sections of the Chicago post office show that out of a total of 2,297 employees only 562, or 24.45 per cent, work regular hours, while the other 75.55 per cent work unnatural hours:

Reporting time.	Number of men.	Per cent.
6 and 7 a. m.	152	6.61
7.30 and 8 a. m.	410	17.84
10.30 and 11 a. m.	166	7.22
12 m.	49	2.13
1 and 2 p. m.	212	9.22
2.30 and 3 p. m.	19	.82
3 and 4 p. m.	86	3.74
5, 5.30, and 6 p. m.	634	27.60
6.30 and 7 p. m.	211	9.18
8 p. m.	252	10.97
10.30 and 11.55 p. m.	106	4.61

NIGHT WORK HARMFUL TO WORKER.

That night work is detrimental to health is evidenced by the many studies that have been made on the effect of fatigue on sickness.

In one ammunition plant in England, with a force of 36,000, where careful records were kept, it was found that increases in sickness were attributed to overtime and night work. The monthly sickness rate for the entire plant rose from 2.9 per cent in July, 1914, to over 4 per cent in the first quarter of 1915, when work speeded up, and in another plant to 7 per cent.

The records of a sick-benefit organization composed of 1,000 members in the Chicago post office showed that during the year 1917 (the year 1918 being ignored because of the prevalence of influenza) 14.50 per cent were sick for a period of one week or more. Out of this sick total 18.53 per cent were respiratory diseases and 6 were laid up with eye trouble.

This is conclusive evidence of the pernicious effect of night work upon the health of the worker where there is no time differential as between night and day work.

Doctors unanimously agree that six hours of night work is equivalent to eight hours of daywork in the matter of physical strain on the constitution.

UNFAIR WORKING CONDITIONS DEMORALIZE SERVICE.

The Postal Service is gradually becoming demoralized because of the aforementioned conditions. There was a time when a position in the post office was a coveted one; when examinations were only necessary every four or five months in order to keep the roster filled. That time is past. Examinations are now held every week, and yet they can not get enough men to take them; and this in spite of the fact that there are soldiers and civilians by the thousand seeking employment.

The reason is plain. You can not expect them to enter the Postal Service for $20 per week, with night work and scheme study, when they can get a job driving a wagon at $29 per week and be out in the fresh air and sunshine.

POSTAL SERVICE NO FIELD FOR AMBITIOUS WORKER.

While many young men have quit the Postal Service for more remunerative work in other fields, we, the veterans and men of families, have been buoyed up with Micawberian hope that something will at last turn up; that a progressive and just Government, as ours, will eventually recognize the fairness of our appeals. And it is through the honorable body of which you are a Member that we anticipate a speedy crystallization of this hope into a pleasing, though belated, reality.

In this direction we look forward to your indulgent consideration and favorable action.

COMMITTEE LOCAL NO. 1, NATIONAL FEDERATION OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN C. KLECZKA.

OF WISCONSIN.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, September 4, 1919.

On a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 151) to provide additional compensation for employees of the Postal Service where extraordinary and unusual conditions prevail.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, it is a keen disappointment to those who desired to vote for an adequate increase of salary for postal employees to see this bill reported in its present form. The fact that this bill is to be considered and passed under suspension of rules precludes the possibility of its amendment. We are assured, of course, that this increase of $150 is only temporary and that when the commission appointed to revise the salaries of postal employees will make its report complete justice will be done to this class of employees. I regret, however, that this pending measure does not meet the just demands of the postal employees.

The people generally realize that the postal employees are underpaid. Under prevailing high cost of living they are unable to sustain themselves and those dependent upon them.

As proof of how intensely and keenly the postal employees feel in this matter, I may state that on August 24, 1919, the postal employees in Milwaukee, with large delegations from the entire State of Wisconsin, after parading through the streets of Milwaukee, in order to awaken public interest in their demands for a just salary, met in mass meeting and adopted the following resolutions:

Resolutions adopted by Wisconsin postal clerks and carriers in mass meeting assembled at the Schubert Theater, Milwaukee, Wis., Sunday, August 24, 1919.

Whereas the cost of living has decreased the value of the prewar dollar to 40 cents; and

Whereas the present salary is only a temporary arrangement to meet the war emergency and fixed on a basis far below the actual cost of keeping up a household and rearing a family; and

Whereas in spite of the declarations of Government statisticians that the cost of living would be lower, it is constantly rising higher and higher, making the life of the postal workers almost unbearable; and

Whereas post-office employees are obliged to work unnatural hours and an excessive amount of overtime; and

Whereas working by artificial light, together with this excessive amount of overtime and lack of rest owing to the unnatural sleep secured in the daytime, impairs the health and efficiency of the employees: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Wisconsin clerks and carriers in mass meeting assembled on this 24th day of August, 1919, demand that a law be passed that hereafter 45 minutes night work performed by clerks and carriers in first and second class offices shall be computed the same as one hour's work, provided that for the purpose of said act night work shall be defined as any work done between the hours of 6 postmeridian and 6 antemeridian, and that all work performed in excess of eight hours in any one day shall be computed on the basis of time and one-half on all such work performed; and be it further

Resolved, That we urge those in authority to grant immediate relief to the postal workers, thereby saving the Postal Service from a complete breakdown and the employees and their families from further deprivation and suffering; and be it further

Resolved, That Congress grant salaries of $1,800 minimum and $2,400 maximum, and that we favor the passage of the Moses bill as a partial reimbursement for the loss we have suffered during the period of high prices; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to our national officers, to our local newspapers, and to the committee investigating postal employees' salaries and working conditions.

Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that the demands of the postal employees are reasonable and justifiable.

Since 1907 the postal employees have worked for a maximum salary of $1,200 per year. For 11 years Congress granted them no increase in compensation in spite of the ever increasing cost of living. They are working at the present time virtually under wages determined in 1907. The small allowance of $200 given them on July 1, 1918, when the wages in almost every line of industry and skilled endeavor were doubled, afforded them no substantial relief.

The railroad employees of the country have received an increase in wages amounting to 98 per cent, while the postal employees have been given an increase of but 16 per cent. It is apparent that when the cost of living has increased during the recent years by over 100 per cent, a 16 per cent increase in wages is wholly insufficient for this class of public-service men to support themselves in reasonable comfort. During the period of the great conflict the postal employees faithfully and patriotically performed their work and were obliged to render a great deal of overtime service. They hoped for permanent relief in the present measure. Disappointed, they are compelled to leave the service. The recent resignations and withdrawals from service have produced and will produce further inefficiency in the Postal Service. If the resignations of these skilled and experienced men because of insufficient pay will continue, the entire Postal Service will be disintegrated and the Government will be compelled to spend a far greater sum in rebuilding and developing it to the grade of efficiency demanded by the public than any amount expended in meeting their justified demands.

Mr. Speaker, the present salaries will not attract men of intelligence, industry, and ability. From the standpoint both of public interest and justice to these employees the remuneration must be adequate. While it may be difficult to define with absolute precision what constitutes adequate compensation, it is conceded that it must be sufficient to provide the means of supporting the average family in reasonable comfort according to prevailing American standards. Every laborer has a moral right to at least a family living wage. If in fixing wages in private enterprise and industry the moral element should not be overlooked, then in establishing the standard of compensation in Government employment this moral aspect can not be ignored. We can not consistently demand that the individual who is engaged in private business or industrial enterprise pay a justified adequate living wage if the Government denies to its employees a corresponding measure of compensation. Unlike industrial and skilled workmen, the postal employees can not resort to the process of bargaining. Their salary is fixed by law, and the obligation of the Government in this matter is therefore clear and unescapable.

Mr. Speaker, the allowance in increase provided for in this bill is wholly insufficient. I trust that the revision commission will hasten its report, so that full justice will be done to these postal employees.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LUCIEN W. PARRISH,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, September 4, 1919,

On House resolution 151, to provide additional compensation for employees of the Postal Service where extraordinary and unusual conditions prevail.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to the Members of the House to extend their remarks in the RECORD I desire to add my most earnest indorsement to this bill. My only regret is that a bill which would in a measure meet the needs of the postal clerks, carriers, and railway clerks, as it now actually exists, has not been presented to this House in order that we might have an opportunity to vote upon it. There have been no men engaged in public service who have been hurt worse by the high cost of the necessities of life than have the railway mail clerks, carriers, and postal clerks. Many of them have been working at salaries far less than they could get in other fields, and yet as a patriotic duty they have remained loyally at their posts. The conditions in my district are such that it is almost impossible for most of the men to live and support their families and send their children to school upon the salary they receive, and the surprise to me has been that they have not quit the service. In my section a laborer gets from $5 to $8 per day, and a single hand, with a team, gets from $10 to $16 per day, and yet the railway clerks, the postal clerks, and the carriers, many of them, receive as low as $3 per day. This is not equitable, and these men are not receiving fair treatment at the hands of the Government. Speaking for my district, I feel sure that the taxpayers would vote unanimously to give this class of employees a very much greater and more equitable compensation than they are now receiving, and I sincerely trust that the boys in the service will hold on until the Salary Investigation Commission makes its report, at which time, I trust, they will receive compensation that will enable them to carry on the work and support themselves and families and send their children to school. It is only in this way that the Government can get the best service and can hold in its employ the best class of men. After all the public demands the service of its best and most efficient men—men capable of rendering the best possible service to be had to the end that the public business may be permanently and successfully handled.

OF

HON. L. S. ECHOLS,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, September 4, 1919,

On House joint resolution 151, to provide additional compensation for employees of the Postal Service where extraordinary and unusual conditions prevail.

Mr. ECHOLS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the committee, this resolution ought to pass. I expect to vote for its passage. By my action in voting for the same, however, I do not mean to indicate that it is my intention to vote for the many increases in compensation of Federal employees that are now being sought and for others that I know will in the near future be sought. Qualified employees of the Postal Service can not well afford to serve the Government at a compensation of $900 a year, especially where they are required to live in the cities of the country. In order to accomplish equal justice this resolution should be acted upon favorably, and then there should be some way found to dismiss from the public service the thousands of employees who are rendering no service, or practically none, for the Government and who are receiving much greater compensation than this resolution gives to the postal employees. Their work never ceases, and as a general rule they are competent, courteous, and industrious. If there is error in this resolution, it is in the niggardly increase in compensation that it allows and not in its extravagance. I say let us pass this resolution and then let the Congress take some action that will stop the expenditure of money in sending our soldiers to Siberia to freeze, starve, and be murdered; stop the expense of sending soldiers to Silesia—for what purpose the good Lord only knows, unless it is to take part in a plebiscite election soon to be held there; stop the expense of waging war in countries with which we are at peace; and stop the expense of building railroads in Alaska to reach coal fields of doubtful value.

There has been $50,000,000, or more, of the Government's money wasted in my district within the last two years. Such miserable extravagance, I regret to say, is still going on there.

When I came here to attend this session of Congress, the Government was expending at Nitro $250,000 per month furnishing automobiles to scores of employees and paying hundreds of clerks, stenographers, and typists extravagant salaries for sitting around in the offices of that comparatively deserted village looking at each other. There was not one single thing being manufactured or produced at Nitro by the Government. The employees were doing nothing there except unloading about forty-five carloads of empty shells per day. This service should not have required the labor of more than 100 men, yet there were on the pay roll at that time, and I assume they are still there, 2,100 people receiving compensation far in excess of that now being paid thousands of postal clerks who really render valuable service to the Government.

There was then at Nitro $10,000,000 worth of cotton, most of which was out in the fields exposed to the weather, rotting, and no effort upon the part of the Government to dispose of it. There were 30,000 tons of sulphur that had cost the Government $31 per ton piled on the ground by the sidetracks, and there appeared to be no effort upon the part of the Government to protect or dispose of it. There were thousands of feet of lumber and hundreds of trucks, automobiles, wagons, and dump carts scattered around over Government property going to ruin, and no effort upon the part of the Government to take care or dispose of them. Since coming here, I have been informed that thousands of feet of such lumber have either been burned or dumped into the Great Kanawha River. In addition, there were tons of copper wire, nails, iron, steel rails, and hogsheads of dishes destroyed or buried at Nitro.

A specific illustration of Government destruction of property is found in this: When the Government took over the land upon which this plant is located, there were 75 or 100 acres of corn, and at maturity 200 men were put to work cutting the corn and carrying it and the fodder off the field, when it was piled and burned; and at the same time the Government was shipping in carloads of feed for the subsistence of the live stock it had there.

When horses were tired and fagged out, instead of giving them rest they were taken up the branch to the crematory, killed, and first class lumber piled upon their carcasses and burned. Finally, after the armistice was signed and construction slowed up, some of the horses were advertised for sale at $90 per head. Citizens offered $75 for such horses, and instead of making the sale the Government employees at Nitro killed them and burned them in the manner above stated. Millions of dollars' worth of Government property going to waste, while hundreds of idle employees, at extravagant prices, sit around and perform no service whatever for the Government.

Employees at Nitro went to Gallipolis, Ohio, 50 miles away, got drunk, were arrested and locked up, and stayed away from Nitro as long as 14 days at a time, yet they drew compensation for the entire time they were absent. Men who were in Gallipolis drunk boasted that their time was going on at Government expense at Nitro.

Any man who came along with a hammer and saw and told the Government agents he was a carpenter was put on the pay roll at carpenters' wages—I think $7 per day. Any man who came along with a soldering iron and a monkey wrench and told the Government agents that he was a plumber was put on the pay roll at plumbers' wages—as I recall $9 per day, with time and half time for overtime, Sundays, and holidays—thus increasing his wages to $13.50 per day.

Thousands of dollars were spent in putting in work at the instance of some incompetent engineer, only to be torn out by instructions of some other engineer who perhaps was less competent.

I make no charge of criminal action, but it would be interesting to the public if it could be ascertained why the only serious fires that occurred at Nitro burned only the buildings that contained the public records. My information is that this plant was constructed upon a commission basis by Thompson-Starrett Co., of New York. I have further information to the effect that Mr. Starrett, of that company, shortly prior to the time the construction of this plant was commenced, severed his connection with the corporation and tendered his services to the Government at a dollar a year, which the Government accepted, and that among his various patriotic duties was the inspection of the Nitro plant. If this information is correct—and I think there is no doubt about it—then it would be interesting, also, to the public to know just what Mr. Starrett's services really cost the Government at Nitro alone. There is an unusually fertile field at Nitro for the services of the investigating committee some time ago appointed by this House to investigate the costs of the war.

The press, at the time this plant was started, carried the important information that it would be constructed at a cost of $30,000,000; in a few weeks we learned it would cost $40,000,000; a few weeks later it was to cost $50,000.000; and later on we found the important news that it would cost $68,000,000. I am inclined to the opinion, based upon information from a reliable source, that upon investigation it will be found that prior to the 1st day of May, 1919, the Government had spent at Nitro $107,000,000.

I came here pledged to vote for an economic administration of public affairs. I propose to keep that pledge, and I in no sense feel that I am breaking it when I vote for this resolution. It is not economy for the Government to be niggardly with its employees. It is always economy for the Government, just the same as it is for a corporation or business man, to employ competent men and pay them competent men's wages.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM N. VAILE,

OF COLORADO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, September 11, 1919.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD I am printing an address delivered by my colleague [Mr. HARDY], as president of the National Editorial Association, on August 2, at a public reception tendered to the association by the board of trade and by the people of Edmonton, Alberta, Canada.

My colleague's district has a unique distinction in having as a Representative in Congress a man whose interest in high standards of journalism caused his elevation a year ago to the presidency of that great association, the largest association of newspaper men in point of membership in the world. His own thriving little daily—a weekly when he first took it 25 years ago—has not only been a great practical benefit to one of the cleanest, prettiest, and busiest little cities in the country but has always set a high standard of editorial excellence—wise suggestions for municipal and government improvement, business sense, political views positively and logically maintained without rancor or pettiness.

Mr. HARDY is a keen observer, a clever writer, and a shrewd and kindly critic. It is especially fitting that he should have occupied the presidency of the National Editorial Association at a time when the victory tour of the association through Canada was undertaken. Such a trip under such leadership could not fail to have a most salutary effect in increasing the spirit of unity and cooperation between the English-speaking peoples on this continent.

He did not carry to Canada nor did he bring back any propaganda except the propaganda of good will. He did not go with the intention of developing or demanding any particular system of a world government. His speeches, the type of which is well represented by the one here following, were not political speeches in the interest of a party or a policy, and I am not prepared to say that they were not more valuable on that account.

Mr. HARDY'S Edmonton speech, in my judgment a model of good sense and good humor, is as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. GUY U. HARDY, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF COLORADO.

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, I count myself fortunate that it has been reserved for me to tell you good people of Edmonton how much we newspaper folks of the United States appreciate this cordial reception you are giving us here in Edmonton and all through Canada. We have with us over 200 people representing newspapers in 35 States of the American Union. This is the thirty-fourth annual convention and tour of this association. We have with us members who have attended most of these meetings. During these years we have traveled in and have been entertained by most every section of the American Continent, and I want to assure you that we have never before been accorded such uniformly cordial and generous treatment as you have given us in Canada this year. Here we find abundant evidences of the hospitality of our South and the enterprise of our North joined in beautiful harmony.

We have come up into Canada to see your resourceful country, your matchless scenery, to be neighborly, and to fraternize with you folks across the border line. We call our trip the victory tour, and we want to join with you and have you join with us in celebrating our great victory for liberty and civilization, in the accomplishment of which our two countries have been so prominent and so closely associated. We want to take you by the hand and congratulate you upon the magnificent spirit shown by your country and upon the manly fighting qualities of your Canadian boys who fought in France. We have rejoiced with you in their victories, and our mothers have silently wept with your mothers in their sacrifice.

Wherever I go I hear our own American boys praising the Canadians in France. As I came out of Washington the other night I fell in with a bunch of returning soldiers and as we talked late into the night about the Great War, I said, "Who made the best fighting men in France?" A bright young chap from a Western State answered, "Well, of course, we put our own boys first, but next to them surely come the Canadians—they were wonderful fighting men—yes, I would say the Canadians and the Australians."

The next day I got acquainted with a bunch of United States Army nurses and the same question brought almost precisely the same reply. And one of the girls added, "Those Canadian soldiers surely did show us American girls a wonderful time."

Over in Winnipeg I met a little newspaper girl who drove an ambulance all through the war in France. And I said to her, "Who do you think made the best soldiers in France?" And she said, "You, of course, will let me place our Canadian boys first, but I will say the Americans came almost along with them even in our estimation—that certainly was a fine bunch of boys you sent over from America." And so they talk of one another as of brothers and friends.

I like to hear the views of the average man—the man you meet on the cars as you travel about. To me it counts for more then the high-browed stuff you get from the tongues of orators. So I want to repeat a little more of the talk of my young western soldier friend whom I met on the train. He said, "You know when I went over to Europe I think I had in me a good deal of prejudice against the English. It probably came from the old school histories—the stories of the red coats who sought to suppress us in 1776. But I had not been long in France before I began to recognize the difference between blood and water. I soon found that the Englishman is our natural kin. He stands out strong and distinct from all other races and peoples. You can take an Englishman by the hand and make a deal with him and be assured that he will keep his word. He respects his word, his treaties, and moral obligations. He respects the honor of a woman—the same as does an American."

It is a fine thing for our people to be finding one another out. The mixing of our millions of soldier boys with your half million and Great Britain's millions of soldier boys has done more to bring English-speaking people together in a better understanding of our peoples and purposes than a hundred years of literature and publicity could have done.

Your speakers have told us that we are cousins. Well, be it so—it is in fact literally so, I know in many instances. But we are practically the same people. We are closer than cousins. Canada and the United States have much in common. You have some differences between Alberta and Quebec and find it harder to understand each other's talk than do the great majority of the people of Canada and the United States. You have a more liberal democracy than we have in that your King and Governor General no longer use the veto power—but we have acquired some liberties that you have never enjoyed—we can cuss the President and you can not cuss the King.

Canadians and Americans have mingled freely in the past. Your speakers have rather boasted of the great number of Canadians honored in the United States—including one of our latest heroes—Admiral Sims. We are proud to have them with us and to see them rise to the highest places. But let me warn you that unless your immigration department suspends operations and your hospitality is tempered, more or less, your country is in danger of having your Parliament houses filled with good American farmers and politicians.

We who come from the western part of the United States can understand your western Canada—your country, your people, and your problems. We have preceded you in development by only a few years. We know what it is to take a great section of undeveloped and unpeopled country and prepare it for habitation and fill it with homes, churches, farms, schools, and factories. We can understand and appreciate what you have done in developing these wonderfully well-built, enterprising, thrifty cities and in peopling and cultivating the great country that supports them.

I come from Colorado, the crowning gem in a rich cluster of our attractive mountain States, a State of wonderful resources and splendid scenery. Our mountains are higher than yours, our resources more varied, our winters are warmer, and our fields quite as fertile.

The cities and towns of Colorado are newly built, and I see much of similarity between your country here and our fair State. You have matched us in enterprise and have gone us one better, in some instances, in building for the future.

One of your citizens said to me this morning, "Coming from Colorado on the crest of the continent, you will not be much interested in our mountains," but I told him "That is where you are mistaken. Being from Colorado, where we have the finest mountains, perhaps, on the continent, I will be more interested in your mountains than any man on the train, and can appreciate them better."

And it is true. The man who has mountains of his own can better enjoy and appreciate other folks' mountains than those people who come from the corn belt and measure everything by the number of hogs a quarter section will feed. Some of these folks have been reading magazines on the train. I never read a magazine when riding through mountains. I have not read a magazine in Canada. I do not want to miss a single view of your charming country.

And coming from this newly developed country of our own I can appreciate better than some what you have done in the way of permanent development in such a few years, and I congratulate you on your accomplishment.

Our country has not forgotten the close ties that have existed between it and England. Next year the National Editorial Association will meet in Boston to celebrate the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims. Only last month, on the 4th of July, a day notable in the world's history, I was down in old Virginia in the section first visited by Capt. John Smith. While down there I visited the counties of Princess Anne, Norfolk, Isle of Wight, Southampton, Sussex, Surrey, Prince George, Warwick, New Kent, King William, and King and Queen, and I will ask you if these names do not remind you more of old England than of any foreign country?

I went down there more especially to get a little atmosphere of the home country of our own greatest of all Americans—George Washington. You may not have thought of it, but the first time Mr. Washington got into the headlines of the home newspapers was when he started out with a British army under Gen. Braddock to help save eastern Canada for the English.

A little later he came into more general notice the world over by helping to establish in America that recently rediscovered theory about "the self-determination of nations."

As a matter of fact, we have never had much trouble with England. All we ever did have came in the reign of one King—your stubborn, forgotten, old German King, George III. He stands out prominently in our school histories because he was the last English King we had anything to do with. Under him our connection with kings ceased, and we remember him only because of that incident. But in that sudden separation and exhibition of self-determination we had the assistance and best wishes of many good people in England. And you have forgotten George III. I see by the street signs in Canada that you honor the memory of many noble Englishmen, but I see no hotels, theaters, garages, or cigars named after George III. He is truly forgotten whose name no longer appears in the street signs or newspaper ads of the day.

George Washington lives, and will ever live, in America and in England and in English-speaking countries as the first and greatest American.

Sympathy for the growing young American Republic has been strong in England since 1776, and this year the 4th of July was appropriately celebrated in England as "Interdependence Day."

For a hundred years the border line between Canada and the United States has been slightly marked, and never marred by forts or armed guards. For a hundred years no dispute or difference of consequence has arisen between America and Canada or Great Britain. Surely nothing in the past will prevent, and every necessity of the future demands, the closest cooperation and friendly relations of our countries.

I know not what may become of the proposed league of nations. I prophesy not of the successes or failures of any league that may be formed. But, having an abiding faith in English-speaking people, I would urge the closest understanding between the English-speaking peoples. With that I believe the destinies of our own Nations will be safe and the liberties of the world will never be trampled upon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. C. BASCOM SLEMP.

OF VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, September 12, 1919.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, since our declaration of war against Germany it has been a matter of regret to me that I could not participate on the military side. However, I have been exceedingly glad that I was permitted to remain a Member of Congress throughout these eventful years.

The distance from the active scene of operations, more than 3,000 miles, has made it impossible to visualize the battle area as it really is or to correctly measure the American effort.

I have felt that Members of Congress—and, indeed, American citizens as well—should, when possible, visit the territory where the civilized world engaged in warfare for over four years and where America suffered in killed and wounded over 300,000 men. Accordingly, thinking Congress would take a vacation, I decided with fellow Members to make a hurried trip to France to be gone in all five weeks, one week on the water each way and three weeks in the country. We sailed on July 13 from Hoboken and on August 13 from Brest, thus defying this numeral precursor of misfortune. Going over on the Leviathan, the largest ship ever built, we found it arranged to defy the number 13. It had 13 decks and 13 elevators. It was officered by 65 men, or five times 13 and carried 130, or ten times 13, full carloads of coal. It carried 14,000 soldiers besides the crew, or a number equal to the population of Pulaski, Wytheville, Marion, and Abingdon, with food and places to sleep for each. It had also aboard 13 wives en route to their husbands in Europe. In spite of all this we had a perfectly smooth, safe, and rapid journey.

Landing in Brest on the 20th in midsummer, we were so cold that we had to get out all of our heavy, warm clothes and fight off winter. American officers met us and began telling us things about France and about the war and when they thought they were going home. Brest is an interesting place for a few days' stay—and a few days only. It has a wonderful harbor, an old castle, quaint old French houses, and barracks built by Napoleon. I was fascinated with the people. They are Bretons, their part of France being Brittany, many of them not speaking French at all but only in the Breton language. This was surprising to me, as I supposed they, of course, spoke French. The women wear little white lace caps, and the men, as if to balance this extravagance, wear wooden shoes. We saw thousands of our soldiers there and they looked fine. We talked to a number of them and they took us to a perfectly good place to eat, where a splendid dinner was served, minus sugar, for the munificent sum of 80 cents. They have no sugar in France, using saccharine, a coal-tar product, as a substitute. This was our first experience as to the high cost of living, and I may say right here that the cost of food generally in France is much less than it is in the United States. This, however, would not apply to Paris, which probably is the most expensive place in which to live in the world to-day. One can get a fairly good dinner there for about $5. The French people are short in fats and sugar, and until the new crop is thrashed they will not always have white bread. France was greatly aroused over high food prices. After waiting for prices to come down the people took matters in their own hands, forcing the minister of agriculture to resign, arresting profiteers, organizing fair-price committees, and at times forcibly taking food when prices were not reasonable. In other words, Europe is fighting high prices as we are in the United States, their fight being generally directed against the middlemen rather than against the producer, though I am sure I saw nothing similar to our farmers' recent experience with hogs, of which the price was reduced one-third in value in three weeks.

In seeing our boys everywhere in France I saw lots of them in company with French girls, but never with a Frenchman. Outside of a few officers in both armies there was practically no fraternizing between the French and Americans. This is not strange, considering that the people are entirely different in temperament, language, and habits. They are raised differently, trained differently, and live differently. The French soldier gets 15 cents a day wage, or $4.50 per month. On that there is no extravagance or indulgence he can practice. In addition, his inherited habits of economy are a bar to his spending even that much. The French boy is a saver.

France is a nation that has survived only through its thrift, and this characteristic runs through every Frenchman's life. The French lost very few cannon in the war. Their guns were nearly always withdrawn rather than risk their loss. It has been said that the retirement of some of the French units occupying a sector with the Americans illustrated the same tendency.

A French boy's experience is rarely wide. Many of them receive a most refined education, but their lives as young men are quite limited and, indeed, are often narrow. There is in them little of the big-hearted, generous spirit that actuates an American youth. Neither are they so assertive or self-reliant. The French boy, unlike the American youth, does not leave home to make his way and fortune thousands of miles from home. Thus, being so unlike in many ways, when the American and French, after the armistice, were left alone together with nothing in common they got terribly tired of each other. This incompatibility was evidenced often by the American boy taking the Frenchman's girl from him, or at least spending a great deal more money entertaining her than the latter could afford to do. This misunderstanding, or rather lack of understanding, has given rise to the report that the French dislike Americans. On the contrary, France has the highest and most sincere admiration for America, for her soldiers, and for her contribution in the Great War; but France is so busy adjusting herself that she entertains no sentimentalities. War and fighting has occupied so much of her 1,500 years of history that she does not attach the importance or significance to it as a nation does to which war comes once in half a century.

I think our American boys have been somewhat disillusioned regarding France and Frenchmen; I myself have been. They remembered, as I did, the chivalric and venturesome spirit of Lafayette, who had come to our rescue in the birth of our Nation, and they had expected in France more nobility, more chivalry, and more heart responses than they got; more of the spirit of Lafayette and his compatriots. But they found themselves fighting with and for a saving, thrifty, and not overly sanitary people. They found the French home, while solidly and permanently built, yet lacking nearly all modern conveniences. Scarcely any home, either in town or country, has a bathroom or sewerage facilities, and none at all have telephones.

Their newspapers, too, are only four pages in size. This evident lack of progress was a shock to the American soldier, which was accentuated when he had personal business dealings with a French soldier. They do not do business in the same way. An American, given a problem to solve, is infinitely quicker and more resourceful than the average Frenchman, who fairly gasps at American rapidity and intrepidity. For instance, at Treves, in occupied Germany, three kinds of money were needed—dollars, francs, and marks. Bankers were robbing our boys in exchange, so the American Army wanted to start a bank. Maj. Morris, whose father was born near Big Stone Gap, was called in and told to get busy. This was at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Maj. Morris telephoned Army headquarters, 150 miles away, for German money, flew there in an aeroplane by 6 o'clock, got the money, returned by train that night, and opened a bank at 9 o'clock next morning. How is that for quick work? Very rapid, and very American, I would say. It was with some pride that I remembered that the Morrises have always been friends of ours and among our best people.

The first thing the civilian does, however, when he arrives in France is to change his American money into French money. Before the war an American dollar was worth 5 francs; in other words, each franc was worth 20 cents. But now an American dollar is worth 8 francs, or each franc 12½ cents. When one changes a $100 bill into eight 100-franc bills he temporarily feels very rich, but prices in France absorb this difference; so one does not get the expected benefit. German money has fallen much more than French. Before the war $1 would get 4 marks. One dollar will now get 20 marks, or the American dollar expressed in German money is five times as valuable as before the war. Prices in Germany have not risen to take care of this loss, so one can buy articles in Germany with American money for about one-half what it costs in France. I know Americans who changed thousands of dollars into German money and deposited the money on interest in German banks, anticipating a rise in the value of German money in the near future. The same situation exists in all European countries. Germany has outstanding $170 per capita, France $150 per capita, while the United States only $55 per capita, so one should be careful in purchasing their money. They have issued so much paper money and owe so much outside indebtedness all over Europe that their money is not as good as the old American dollar. A great many Italians, Serbian, and other central European people living in the United States, where they have been receiving high wages and have saved some of it, are changing their money and returning to their native land, getting in exchange twice as much money as they would have taken back formerly. There are many angles to this exchange question which I can not now discuss. A fall in the purchasing power of money usually accompanies a nation at war, and this war is no exception. This situation can not continue indefinitely. The remedy lies in production and work on the part of their people.

After getting our money changed in Paris, we visited Gen. Pershing and began the study of war maps. The battle front was about 400 miles long, running from Switzerland to the North Sea, traversing as varied topography as the earth's surface affords. The roads in France are wonderful, and there is no difficulty in reaching every spot made sacred by our fallen dead. One passes through fertile fields, beautiful meadows, and smiling landscapes to reach what was only a few months before the scene of the most terrific destruction known in the history of the world. An area 10 miles wide and 300 miles long is about the extent of the devastated area in France and Belgium. In the center will be no man's land, sometimes only 50 yards wide and often 1½ miles in width. On either side stretch innumerable trenches of the Allies and the Central Powers. Each had the same system. A main front-line trench, connecting trenches, and several rows of supporting trenches. Pill boxes, concrete dugouts, underground passageways, wire entanglements still stand out as lonely sentinels of the desolation they helped to create. In no man's land, and often for a mile on either side, there would not appear an inch of ground that had not been struck by a shell. No one can imagine the destruction in this area. Not a tree, not a house, not a work of man or a product of nature that had not been changed or destroyed in this holocaust. Mother earth was healing her wounds, however. The warm sunshine and the frequent rains covered this area with the green grass of our meadows, while the red poppies and our bright-eyed daisies lent a profusion of color. German prisoners and French farmers were filling up the trenches, and within a year little evidence of the destruction will remain except devastated cities and ruined houses, and these it will take many years to repair, if it is ever done.

Take the city of Ypres, for example. Before the war it had a population, I think, of 20.000. To-day not a single building is left standing, whether home, store, church, school—all wiped out. How long it will take to rebuild the city or even how it will be done scarcely anyone can say. Indeed there is yet no fixed policy. The French wish to rebuild on a long-time basis, so that Germany will pay a large part of the expense and her people can be given time to recuperate. I ran across one American firm which had taken a $200,000,000 contract of rebuilding. It is a splendid opportunity for a builder who is well supplied with building material, concrete mixers, and the like, and who can take bonds of towns guaranteed by the French Government, payable, however, in American dollars for the greater part.

The most vivid scene of desolation, it seemed to me, was that of the city of Lens, in the coal-mining area. One approaches this mining town or city from the west and suddenly finds himself on a plateau 250 feet above and overlooking what had been the busiest city in France. The scene is one of indescribable ruin as far as the eye can see. Row upon row and whole streets of demolished houses, with here and there a church spire alone still standing, as if to point to the immutability of Christ's teachings. Costly coal tipples and hoisters burst, broken, and twisted by tons of nitroglycerine greet the eye, but no human habitation, where five years ago France secured the major part of her coal supply. Going into town we found German prisoners cleaning the streets and hauling away the débris. The coal companies had erected a beautiful little wooden office building, which looked odd, seeing that all buildings in France were of brick. Several restaurants were open and Lens was beginning to try to come back. To restore her ruined cities is the big problem of France, and to do this she will require all the assistance the world can furnish her. I did not come in contact with any organized American societies. It will require, I should suppose, from five to six billion dollars to make restoration, though French officials claim it will require twenty-five billions.

In a short time one can examine only the principal points on the 300 miles of battle fields. There were distinctively British, French, and American sectors. But for Gen. Pershing's insistence we would have had no American sector, and our troops would have been brigaded with the British and the French, under foreign leadership, and no independent credits would have attached to American effort. As it was we were engaged in only one really large independent offensive, though the effort of American soldiers at Chateau-Thierry, Belleau Woods, and Canal de Nord can never be forgotten. From Mount Kimmel, in Belgium, not many miles from Waterloo, on a hill 600 feet high, standing absolutely alone on a plateau, on whose beautiful head 20,000 missiles of death have fallen in a single day, one can see miles in every direction and visualize the dogged endurance of the British. Here Great Britain lost thousands upon thousands of her young men as her most costly sacrifice.

Facing the North Sea, one sees on the left a low fringe of hills, the last ridge separating the Germans from the plains of Calais and the channel ports. Capture of this ridge would have involved as a military consequence the drawing of the English Army out of France and leaving France alone to bear the shock of the German armies. They were stopped at the base of that ridge in 1918 by the British fighting with their backs to the wall. In July, 1918, the Germans were forced to withdraw some of their troops here to repel the American attack at Rheims and Chateau-Thierry. So even here America played her part. Had there been no Americans in France, Germany would have taken Calais, and she would never have been defeated.

Vimy Ridge, where the Canadians fought to glory and to death, fascinates one, for the fighting here was hand to hand, without pity and without quarter. The German monument and the Canadian monument stand side by side, mutely attesting the valor of their soldiers. Standing there I wondered why it was necessary for this to come upon the world, and I was glad that America should have been the means of bringing it to an end. The region of Mount Kimmel, in Belgium, is the scene of Great Britain's mightiest effort. Vimy Ridge will stand forever as a monument to Canadian valor, and Verdun will ever live in French history as the supreme test of French heroism and valor.

Verdun; the word is on every tongue in France. Alone, unaided, single handed, France here resisted the mighty hordes of the German Empire attacking in countless waves, assisted by all the engines of death, and here proved her right to live among the nations of the earth and a just claim to immortality. In one small sector, 3 miles square, there was not a single square yard that had not been made sacred by the death of a soldier. Not until 500,000 men on each side had laid down their lives did the attack cease, and France had won her one great victory of the war. She was so far gone, though, that she could sustain no offensive. The most interesting thing about Verdun is her old fort, planned by Vauban, and so constructed as to house underground 10,000 soldiers. We were entertained by the French commander, who had us at a dinner party of men and women, not one of whom spoke English, while none of us spoke French. I sat between two attractive French ladies. To maintain absolute silence for two hours under such circumstances and to have to appear to enjoy the meal was certainly a strain on social amenities.

The American sector was the most interesting to us. We lingered over Chateau-Thierry and stood on the railroad track behind which the Third Division made their stand which halted the Germans on that famous 15th of July, 1918. On the boat coming back the boys of this division told us how they stood in fire and shot and shell while the French on their right were retiring. God must have been with them—for three American men fought seven Germans—and fought them to victory. We walked through Belleau Wood and stood in reverence at the little cemetery where sleep our brave boys who fell there. We drove along the road to Rheims until we came to where the First and Second Divisions made the principal counter attack on July 18, resulting in the German retreat and finally in her surrender. We uncovered our heads, because we were on historic and hallowed ground. As long as time will last July 18, 1918, will be remembered as the beginning of the end of the World War, and in this principal counter attack on that historic morn there was neither a French nor a British soldier engaged; Americans and colonials only. Again I paid tribute to our own beloved land and the valor of her soldiers. Later we drove all over the St. Mihiel salient, which had resisted French efforts for four years, but we were most interested in the one big offensive conducted by American arms. This was the Argonne; and we found in the center of the valley midway between the Meuse River and the Argonne Forest the celebrated hill, Montfarcon. It is a long, sloping hill, commanding a view of the entire country, and is almost impregnable to attack. The Argonne Forest, on the left, was filled with machine guns and the heights on the right with heavy guns of all calibers, while the flower of the Germany Army was in the rear. Against this enemy's position Gen. Pershing brought 600,000 American soldiers, the pride of our country, and ordered the charge, while 2,600 guns prepared the way. Stealing out under the protection of the early morning mist, the American soldiers took their objective, though many had seen fighting for the first time. Here it was, too, that the Eightieth Division, composed of thousands of Virginians, received their baptism of blood. To their credit it must be said that the Eightieth Division took every objective that was assigned to it, and, while late in being called to France, on the field of battle acted as veterans.

It was the success of this attack, begun on September 26, that caused the Germans to ask for an armistice on October 7, a few days later. Many of our boys wished the war had not ended then. They preferred marching down Unter den Linden in Berlin to the tune of the Star-Spangled Banner; but when the enemy surrendered there was no alternative but to cease hostilities and prepare for peace. Thus filled with visions of America's part in the great war, and proud of her achievements on the battle field, we again drove toward Germany, passing through what seemed to be the garden spot of the world.

On our way in the beautiful valley near the Argonne Forest we passed the great American national cemetery. This spot is consecrated by the bodies of 23,000 heroes who gave their lives for their country. The cemetery is on a gentle slope, white crosses marking the resting place of the dead. It would seem to be a pity to disturb their sleep, yet I can understand the feeling of a mother whose son lies buried in a distant land. After a short stay at Cologne we returned to Paris, then to Brest, and then home.

I wish the American people could acquire the discipline and the philosophical contentment of the people of Europe. The evidences of the war are already fast disappearing. In all our travels I saw only three people who had been maimed in battle. The people are settling down to the problems of life better, perhaps, than we are in the United States, and we might profit by their example. There is little or no Bolshevism in France or Germany and there is less excuse or reason for the United States. My stay, short as it was, made me even prouder of my country than I had been, and also made me more contented as an American citizen. I believe that our American soldiers realize the better now that, after all, our country is the most promising of all the countries in the world and that to be an American citizen is the proudest heritage one can have in this world.

American Cables and Mail Still Being Censored—Favors Compulsory Military Training Only in Time of War—High Cost of Living Going Higher and Higher.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, September 15, 1919.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I insert the following:

AMERICAN MAIL STILL BEING CENSORED.

MOUNT UNION TANNING & EXTRACT CO.,
Mount Union, Pa., September 3, 1919.

Hon. B. K. FOCHT,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FOCHT: In very frequent mails we receive letters returned by the British censor which we, as far back as December, 1917, directed to our customers in Russia. This not only occurs with mail sent a long time ago, but with recent mail.

We would like to inquire why it is necessary that all communications to Europe should be conducted through the office of our friends at the British post office. It is certainly beneath the dignity and self-respect of this country to have all cables and mails censored by one of our associates in the late war. Please make complaint to the United States Post Office Department, since it seems we are a branch of the British foreign office. Please inquire also why cables in code to Greece can not be transmitted all the way through. We have sent a number lately which never went through at all. Too much British Empire, I fear, and when our English cousins get done picking the bones there will be nothing left for us but Woodrow's dreams.

With kind regards, I am,
Sincerely, yours,

E. M. GREENE, President.

FAVORS COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING ONLY IN TIME OF WAR.

REEDSVILLE, PA., September 8, 1919.

Hon. B. K. FOCHT,
Lewisburg, Pa.

DEAR SIR: As a citizen residing in your congressional district I feel privileged to write and express to you my objection to the adoption by the Government of the principle of "compulsory military training."

This principle seems to be embodied in the Chamberlain-Kahn bill, now before Congress.

I am in favor of compulsory service in time of war. In fact, I hold the opinion that provision should be made by legislation that compulsory service should automatically come into operation upon the declaration of war.

But in time of peace the adoption of compulsory training would represent a radical and unsafe departure from the ideals of democracy and of our people. Such a principle is not American. On the contrary, it is foreign to American institutions and practices and represents the first and logical step toward militarism, autocracy, and the suppression of freedom of development on the part of the individual.

I served the country gladly in the late war, having enlisted about April 27, 1917, and called to duty on May 12, 1917. At the time of my discharge I was a captain of Infantry.

Since my discharge I have discussed this question with many returned soldiers in my community. With but one or two exceptions they oppose compulsory military training. They oppose it in principle, for they realize that it would not apply to them.

I would therefore urge as strongly as I may be permitted that you oppose every effort that is made to have the country adopt the policy of compulsory military training.

Yours, very truly,

HAROLD F. BUTLER.

HIGH COST OF LIVING GOING HIGHER AND HIGHER.

[From the Waynesboro (Pa.) Record-Herald, Sept. 10, 1919.]

TALK IS CHEAP, BUT LIVING COSTS STILL ON STILTS—PLENTY OF CONVERSATION, SAYS FARMER; FOODSTUFFS STILL REMAIN IN THE AIR—OUR FRUIT GOES TO ROT, WHILE SUGAR GOES TO EUROPE OR AFRICA OR IS HOARDED IN WAREHOUSES AT HOME.

"I don't see anything more in the papers about the great reduction in living cost that was to be brought about," remarked one of the farmers who has a stall in the market to the Record-Herald reporter this morning.

"No; the excitement seems to have died a natural death," answered the reporter, as he inquired the price of some delicious looking grapes that suggested Bryan's favorite drink to him.

"And the worst of it is," continued the stall man, "that not only is the cost of living not coming down but we can't even preserve stuff we have on hand owing to the lack of sugar.

"I have more of those grapes than I know what to do with. Yesterday I came into town with several bushels and attempted to sell them in a house-to-house canvass. The women looked at them longingly and liked my price, but in nine homes out of ten they said, 'I would like to buy them, but I can't get the sugar to make jam, jelly, or grape juice, so what's the use?'"

"Yes," put in a woman in the next stall. "We had the same experience with our peaches. My husband came in with a load and could hardly dispose of them because of the sugar shortage."

BLAME THE FARMERS.

"And then they blame the farmers for high prices," was the rather bitter comment of another.

"You're right," said the first farmer. "The Government is sending out illustrated literature showing us how to can and urging us to save every pound of fruit for next winter, and then they send all the sugar to Europe to the Czecho-Slavs, the Turks, the Mesopotamians, and a lot of other tribes who never saw refined sugar until after the war, leaving us high and dry at the most critical period of the year."

"Or else the sugar hoarders are keeping it in their warehouses hoping it will go up another cent or two in price," chuckled a bystander with a basket on his arm.

"Which takes us back to my original question: How about all the reforms they were going to put into effect at Washington?"

"Oh, well, what do you expect?" chimed in another man, also armed with a basket. "That's all those investigations ever amount to. A lot of chatter, columns of threats in newspapers, and then quiet. I never knew one to amount to anything."

LOT OF TALK; NO ACTION.

"Just think it over. A few weeks ago there was a terrible furore. The President delivered a special address to Congress on the high cost of living. He said he would bring it down.

"Then the Attorney General comes out with a bunch of 'interviews' in the papers. He drafts a bunch of new laws which he asks Congress to pass, incidentally asking for a few hundred thousand dollars to pay the salaries of a lot of 'investigators.'

"Half a dozen Congressmen introduced bills which contained threats all the way from fines to hanging for the profiteers. The 'authorities' went out and confiscated a few tons of meats, eggs, and decayed fish from the cold-storage warehouses and threatened to send the owners to Sing Sing or some other institution for a long rest.

"Labor papers blame the high cost of living on the farmers, the farmers say it is the high wages in the city; others tell us it is the result of the war and the attempt on the part of the United States to feed the world, and the President says the league of nations will make food dirt cheap.

"But the fact remains that all 'is quiet on the Potomac' again. The excitement at Washington has died a natural death, the investigation is all over, and prices remain the same.

"And it's the little fellow, like you and I, that pays the bills—that contributes to the support of the profiteers; that sees our fruit go to rot on the ground because we can't get sugar," was the parting shot of the man who started the argument.

Significance of the Grand Review of Pershing's First Division as Connected with the Grand Review of Grant's and Sherman's Armies in 1865.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY Z. OSBORNE,
OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, September 18, 1919.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, the House has been kind enough to permit me to extend my remarks in the form of observations which I made in the Washington Herald of September 18, 1919, on the subject of the grand review of Gen. Pershing's Army, which occurred in Washington on September 17, 1919, and some comparisons with the grand review of the Union Army at the termination of the Civil War, May 23 and 24, 1865.

[From the Washington Herald, Sept. 18, 1919.]

SOLDIERS OF AMERICA RETURN AS VICTORS OVER AUTOCRACY—BACK FROM A DISTANT LAND, BEARING NO SPOILS AND WITH NO CAPTIVES CHAINED TO CHARIOTS—HOW THE GRAND REVIEW IMPRESSED A VETERAN OF THE CIVIL WAR—SIGNIFICANCE OF THE TWO GREAT HISTORICAL EVENTS AS SEEN BY A VETERAN OF 1861–1865.

[By HENRY Z. OSBORNE, Member of Congress from California and past senior vice commander in chief, Grand Army of the Republic.]

No patriotic man or woman could have witnessed without emotion the grand spectacle of the passing along the broad avenues of the National Capital of the first body of American soldiers to cross the Atlantic and plant the Stars and Stripes on European soil. The thunderous applause which greeted the returning veterans wherever they appeared and which extended in one great wave of sound along Pennsylvania Avenue from the Capitol to the White House, attested the unanimity and sincerity of the feeling of pride which animated every American who was privileged to witness the grandest and most inspiring spectacle of which Washington has been the scene since that other grand review which marked the conclusion of the great Civil War more than a half century ago. The spectacular "triumphs" which were accorded to the victorious generals of ancient Rome upon their returning from battle fields in foreign lands, as depicted by historians, were, without doubt, processions of graphic and barbaric splendor. With captive kings and queens bound to the chariots of the disdainful conquerors, with thousands of distressed prisoners—men, women, and children—presently to be reduced to slavery, and with the display of the rich spoils of the conquered peoples, they could hardly have failed to impress the spectators, as they passed in martial splendor through the streets of the Imperial City, with the warlike strength and power of their successful soldiers and generals.

The soldiers of America also returned from distant lands as the victors, with their brave allies, in the greatest war of the world's history. They returned, however, as they went abroad, without ostentation or display, and they bear with them no captives to be reduced to slavery and no spoils of war. They return as the powerful defenders of their country against the arrogant assumptions and attacks of an autocratic nation, which sought to enforce its will upon our own Republic, as well as upon the other nations of the earth. While they return with nothing but their arms and habiliments, and no visible spoils of war or signs of the conqueror, we, who witnessed their passing yesterday, saw in the firm young faces of the gallant soldiers of the First Division, in their stalwart limbs, in their martial bearing, in the free and untrammeled swing of their march through the Capital as the representatives of nearly 4,000,000 of their comrades, an assurance of devotion to their country and a guarantee of capacity for armed power in times of national danger that inspired in the hearts of all Americans love and gratitude to these brave young soldiers, and thankfulness to God that the fires of patriotism, love of country, and devotion to America burn as brightly as ever in the hearts of millions of true men like these.

A history of the war activities of the First Division, which will some time be written, could only be hinted at in a single article, so extensive, valuable, and inspiring they were. Well might it be called the First Division, as it was the first division of our Army to cross the seas; first in sector and to fire a shot at the enemy; first to conduct a raid and first to be raided; first to capture prisoners and to inflict and to suffer casualties. In one thing alone was it last, and that was in returning home. It had in succession a most brilliant array of commanding officers, the first being Maj. Gen. William L. Sibert, followed by Maj. Gen. Robert L. Bullard, Maj. Gen. Charles P. Summerall, Brig. Gen. Frank E. Bamford, Brig. Gen. Frank Parker, and Maj. Gen. E. F. McGlachlin, jr., who was in command yesterday.

Besides many minor engagements, the First Division fought with great distinction the battles of Cantigny in May 1918; south of Soissons in July, 1918; St. Mihiel salient, September 12 and 13, 1918; Argonne-Meuse, September 29 to October 12, 1918; Mouzon and vicinity, November 1 to 11, 1918. On November 17 the First Division started for Germany and crossed the line at Coblenz December 13 and 14 after a march of 350 kilometers.

24,000 MEN IN LINE.

An army division at its full strength, with all its accessory organizations, comprises 39,000 men, of whom 27,500 comprise the combat strength. The First Division as it appeared in the grand review yesterday had over 20,000 men and the select regiment 3,600—a total of about 24,000. The inroads upon the division during its service in Europe may be appreciated when it is stated that to November 11, 1918, there were 30,206 replacements, amounting to a full duplication of the combat strength of the division. That does not mean that the entire original membership of the division was replaced, as one original man might easily be replaced successively by several. The division lost 4,411 men killed and died of wounds. In addition there were 17,201 wounded and gassed. They lost but 152 taken prisoners, although the division captured 163 German officers and 6,304 German men. This shows that the Germans were not so reluctant to be taken prisoners as were our boys of the First Division. The division also captured 119 pieces of German artillery, 62 trench mortars, and 413 machine guns. The First was 220 days in front line, and its members received 356 distinguished-service crosses.

As we look at these brave boys, briskly passing in military formations with their officers in their appropriate stations and the Stars and Stripes and their regimental flags floating over them, the scenes of blood and struggle that these figures suggest present themselves to our consciousness.

We see them at Cantigny in their first battle, deporting themselves like veterans, thus giving fresh courage to all our Army and to our hard-pressed French and British associates and bringing joy and pride to the hearts of all loyal men and women whom they left at home.

SEES THEM ON BATTLE FIELDS.

We see them again in the St. Mihiel salient, with relentless determination taking from the Germans powerful forts and strategic positions which they had held uninterruptedly for four years, flattening out the troublesome salient and threatening the marvelously fortified military city of Metz.

But most graphic of all is their long-sustained, bitterly contested but finally triumphant battle of the Argonne-Meuse. We see them struggling with the best troops of Germany in the Argonne Forest, taking one range of wooded hills after another, but not without the loss of many a brave comrade.

We visualize the 4,411 brave men of the First Division who fill humble graves in France—just such splendid, courageous men and as full of life and hope as those whom we delightedly gazed on yesterday as they passed through the broad avenues of Washington. We may also endeavor to consider the 17,201 who suffered wounds or who were compelled to inhale the poisoned gases invented by scientific German minds, directed to diabolic ends. Just think for a moment. We saw about 24,000 men in the grand review. It required several hours for them to pass the reviewing stand. Of their comrades, about one-fifth as many as we saw sleep their last sleep in France and the wounded and gassed added to the killed would have made a procession nearly as imposing in numbers as that of yesterday—in exact numbers 21,612 were killed, wounded, and gassed, against about 24,000 in yesterday's review.

BACK TO DAYS OF 1861–65.

The grand review of yesterday naturally carries the mind back to the only other event of this character to which it is comparable in interest and significance—the grand review which was the closing scene of the great Civil War of 1861–65. It occurred 54 years and 4 months ago, less 6 days. The grand review occupied two days, May 23 and 24, 1865, when more than 200,000 men passed in review before the reviewing stand in front of the White House, which was erected on precisely the same spot as that of yesterday. The army of Sherman had crossed the Atlantic coast and thence advanced north and was in North Carolina when the end came at Appomattox. Sherman's army continued its march north and joined the forces immediately under Gen. Grant at Washington for the grand review. Sherman's forces comprised the Army of the Tennessee and the Army of the Cumberland. Grant was in supreme command, but the Army of the Potomac, under Maj. Gen. George G. Meade, was in his immediate charge.

The circumstances lent themselves to a much larger review in point of numbers than that of yesterday and the event was one so vast and impressive that it lingers in the minds of all who witnessed it and still survive.

IT WAS A BEAUTIFUL DAY.

The morning of May 23, 1865, opened one of those bright and beautiful days such as should accompany great events. This first day was devoted to the Army of the Potomac, at the head of which rode Gen. Meade. The troops, embracing infantry, cavalry, and artillery, came into formation north of the Capitol, passed the Capitol itself, and then up Pennsylvania Avenue and past the reviewing stand in front of the White House. On the reviewing stand were President Johnson and the members of his Cabinet and their ladies; Gen. Grant and Gen. Sherman, Gen. O. O. Howard and their staffs. Gen. Sheridan was the only Union general of prominence who was not present, he having been ordered to the Mexican border in Texas a short time before.

The troops marched in company front—a company then consisting of 100 men—and at quick step, in order that the large Army might not take too great time to pass. The march commenced each morning at 9 o'clock and occupied the entire day. Regiment after regiment, brigade after brigade, division after division, and corps after corps—Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery—followed each other throughout the day. At that time, after four years of war, the Army was a superb body of men. No one survived at that time but the fittest. They had fought a war of more than 2,000 engagements, and they were thoroughly drilled and equipped. Their company lines were perfect, and as they passed west on Pennsylvania Avenue, with the glistening of the bayonets of the Infantry, the prancing and neighing of the horses of the Cavalry, and the rattling of the gun carriages and harness of the Artillery, that great avenue never witnessed a more brilliant or thrilling sight. Great generals rode at the head of their commands.

GEN. HANCOCK, "THE SUPERB."

The handsome Gen. Winfield Scott Hancock, "the superb," was the observed of all observers. Pennsylvania Avenue was strewn with flowers. A charming girl threw a beautiful wreath of brilliant flowers to the impetuous and romantic young Cavalry officer, Gen. Custer, who was riding a magnificent stallion. The general caught the wreath, but the powerful charger was frightened and dashed down Pennsylvania Avenue at a terrific pace past the reviewing stand. Custer clung to his wreath, but had parted with his hat and saber; but he did not fail to salute the President and Gen. Grant as he dashed swiftly by. He soon recovered control of his war horse and rode back to his place.

Gen. Sherman was on the reviewing stand with the President and Gen. Grant the first day, and he observed that the Army of the Potomac had been pretty well prepared for the parade. All metal, swords, bayonets, buttons, and everything were very properly shined up for the great event. It is said that he called his generals together that evening and instructed them that his army was to undergo no special preparation, but that they were to turn out exactly as they would do in active war. They therefore appeared on the second day, May 24, 1865, less polished as to metals and brasses, but in impressive efficiency as to everything that went for actual war.

SHERMAN'S LAST VIEW OF ARMY.

Gen. Sherman rode at the head of his army. As he reached the corner of Pennsylvania Avenue and Fifteenth Street, near where his equestrian statue now stands, he wheeled his horse around and looked back toward the Capitol and witnessed for the last time the vast field of glittering bayonets of that great army which had marched with him "to the sea," and with which his fame in history will ever be associated. The statue to which reference is made is said to stand in the position which he assumed as he thus gazed back upon the great Army that a few days later dissolved into the general citizenship of the country.

In their proper places rode Gen. Thomas, the hero of the Battle of Franklin; Gen. John A. Logan, magnificently mounted on a "superb dapple gray stallion"; Gen. Francis P. Blair; and many others of high fame as soldiers.

Fifty-four years have passed since the grand review of 1865. Now we have another grand review to mark the close of another great war. Few who witnessed the review of 1865 were privileged to witness that of 1919. There are a few, however, who in the providence of God have been permitted to see these two great historical events. Among these was one who by the courteous invitation of the War Department was one of the occupants of the reviewing stand yesterday, in company with Vice President Marshall, Gen. Pershing, Secretary Baker, Gen. March, the members of the Cabinet, the staffs of the generals, and other men of distinction.

PAST AND PRESENT LINKED.

I refer to "Corp." James Tanner, past commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic. "Corp." Tanner had both his feet shot away by a cannon ball at the second Battle of Bull Run in 1862. "Corp." Tanner yesterday was accompanied by his two devoted daughters, Misses Ada and Nettie. It may be an assurance and encouragement to some of our boys who have been maimed in the service of their country that "Corp." Tanner, despite his terrible handicap, incurred when he was still under 20, and from which he has, throughout life, been a severe and almost constant sufferer, has led a particularly useful, active, and successful life. He is an orator of great charm and eloquence, and has never ceased to advocate patriotism and love of country. There are few men who have performed such service in this direction as he. Withal, he gets from life more pleasure than do most men, through reading and a happy, witty, and delightful social intercourse with hosts of friends.

The grand review which we witnessed yesterday was a splendid and impressive spectacle. But to my mind it means much more, and is far more significant than as a spectacle. It has the same significance that the grand review of 1865 had, that our country would in peace have the powerful support of these brave men who had defended it with their lives in war. I entertain the opinion that the Grand Army of the Republic, with its affiliated organizations, has accomplished more than any other agency in keeping to the front the importance of patriotism and in inculcating the love of country. It constantly has kept burning the fires of patriotism.

THE OPPORTUNITIES ARE GREAT.

I believe the soldiers of this war will do a similar beneficent work. Their opportunities are even greater than were those of the veterans of 1861–1865, because there are 4,000,000 of them instead of 2,000,000, and by reason of circumstances they cover more completely the territorial area of the country, South as well as North. These soldiers, like their fathers and grandfathers, believe that they can best serve the world and all mankind by making their own country the best in the world, free and independent. They believe in nationalism rather than internationalism, and they love America. While they wish the entire world to enjoy freedom and democracy, they will always be careful to have in their keeping and sacredly guard the liberty and freedom of America.

The grand review of September 17, 1919, at Washington will always be remembered with pride by all who witnessed it, and particularly by all those brave and gallant veterans who participated in it. As those splendid soldiers offered the best that they had for our country and for ourselves, in which many of their comrades contributed the supreme sacrifice which each of these generously offered, let us who were the objects of their valorous generosity ever bear toward these men a grateful spirit of admiration and affection, and in our conduct with regard to them let us, in whatever stations in life we may be placed, be governed by a sense not only of justice and fairness but of appreciation of the debt of gratitude which America owes to its soldiers of 1917 to 1919.

The Sweet Amendment to the War-Risk Act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES J. THOMPSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, September 13, 1919.

Mr. THOMPSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the Sweet bill is a corrective to the war-risk insurance act. The Sixty-fifth Congress, in the time of stress of war, committed the United States Government to the insurance business—for soldiers only. The war-risk act was the entering wedge. The Sweet bill is simply the first of many corrective acts that this Congress, and possibly future Congresses, will, in my judgment, enact, unless public opinion forces the repeal of the law. I regret the many innovations in our American form of government tending to the paternalistic. Germany had all sorts of similar laws, even old-age laws, prior to the breaking out of the war, and for nine years prior to 1914 the imperialistic German Government was running behind millions upon millions of dollars annually. The Kaiser sought to have the deficiency made up by proposed enactment of the Reichstag to heavily tax the incomes of the very rich classes; but the bill was defeated and the Emperor was told to use his war machine, make war on France, collect indemnities, and pay off the debts of the nation. The world knows the result. This Republic can not afford to pattern after imperialistic Germany in the way of expensive paternalistic legislation. We are having too many bureaus and commissions, and, as a consequence, there is excessive perspiration of taxpayers throughout the land. A democracy is said to be the most expensive form of government in the world. If it is the intention of Congress and the people that the War Risk Bureau shall be perpetuated, I shall vote for the Sweet bill, because it is the best corrective measure that so far has been produced by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

On the 28th day of June I appeared before the subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, which constructed this bill, and made the following plea, as copied from the stenographic notes of the hearing:

STATEMENT OF HON. C. J. THOMPSON, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF OHIO.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am glad to note the closing remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin, because they bear upon a concrete case that I wish to insert in the record. It is very brief.

I wish to call the attention of your committee to a serious defect of the war-risk insurance act. I have a case which may aid your committee. No doubt the condition of affairs which I portray may have been called to your attention before this time by similar or parallel incidents. This case relates to the poor and the lowly of our land and lifts the curtain sufficiently to show that they too made great sacrifices. The constituents I refer to are living on a farm near Grover Hill, Paulding County, Ohio, in my district. My attention was first called to this case by a letter as follows, under date of May 12, 1919:

GROVER HILL, OHIO, May 12, 1919.

Hon. C. J. THOMPSON,
Defiance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: I write you to-day to ask you to assist me in the matter of the insurance of William A. Dempsey, who died in France October 12, 1918, while in military service. He insured the 6th day of August, 1918. He was a boy we raised from 16 months old when his mother died. His father is dead also. We failed to have him adopted. He made us the beneficiaries and signed it over to us. Now the War Risk Insurance Board refuses to pay it because he was not legally adopted. I want you to take the matter up in Congress and get us some help. We are both old and not able to work, and he was our only support.

Truly, yours,

W. H. DEMPSEY,
R. F. D. No. 4, Box 53, Grover Hill, Ohio.

The 13th day of May I wrote Mr. Dempsey from Defiance requesting him to send me his correspondence received from the department at Washington. He complied with the request under date of May 29, 1919. His letter is as follows:

GROVER HILL, OHIO, May 29, 1919.

Hon. C. J. THOMPSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I registered you all papers yesterday as you requested in the matter of insurance of W. A. Dempsey. Now, please do all you can for me, for I am in sore need of help. I am not able to work any more on account of rheumatism and heart trouble, and my wife is an invalid, and he was our only support, and we had a hard time to raise him, and when he was caring for us he was taken away and died in France October 12, 1918. Now, for us to be taken to the poorhouse, it looks hard. Please do all you can for us.

Yours, truly, W. H. DEMPSEY.

This is a case of a poor colored couple living in the colored farming community of Paulding County, Ohio. They raised an orphan child from 16 months old. As the little fellow grew up and his foster parents grew old he became their only comfort and support. When the war broke out he was conscripted. The boy went to France and died in the service of his country. In camp he made out his war-risk insurance to his foster parents. I consider this act equivalent to his last will and testament. Now, because of a legal technicality of the war-risk act, is this poor old couple to be deprived of the means their child left them? I submit that a great Government can not afford to be either unjust or ungrateful even to the most lowly of its citizens. I submit that this case alone, if there were no other brought to the attention of your committee, is sufficient reason for an honest attempt on your part to amend the war-risk insurance act so as to correct the situation now pertaining to this and similar cases.

Section No. 4 of this bill, as now proposed, cures the defect referred to above, and reads as follows:

SEC. 4. That section 22 of the war-risk insurance act is hereby amended by inserting therein a new subdivision to be known as subdivision (4a) and to read as follows:

"(4a) The terms 'father' and 'mother' include stepfathers and stepmothers, fathers and mothers through adoption, and persons who have stood in loco parentis to a member of the military or naval forces for a period of not less than one year: Provided, That this subdivision shall be deemed to be in effect as of October 6, 1917."

The Sweet bill also contains a provision that payments shall be made in 36 monthly installments. This will enable the beneficiary to secure the full amount of the insurance within a reasonable time.

Commenting further, in a general way, it strikes me that the common soldier has not had a square deal. A great hullabaloo was raised about the American soldier being the best paid soldier in the world. Was he? Let us see. He was voted $30 per month pay—$1 per day and keep. Then he was treated just like a Member of Congress is treated, after the Federal income-tax collector and the Washington hotel and eating-house vampires, and other high and lofty profiteers get through toying with his stated salary. The first thing the soldier was made to do was to take out insurance. His salary was split for allotments, then his insurance was deducted, and so forth. To make a long story short, after all deductions the American "buck private" soldier had about $8.60 per month left out of a month's pay for spending money and Liberty bond purchases, and so forth.

Up to January 30, 1919, according to testimony, $200,000,000 had been taken by the Government for insurance from the pay of soldiers. At the present time there is about $300,000,000 in money in the Treasury of the United States deducted from soldiers for insurance.

Nearly 90 per cent of the soldiers have dropped their insurance.

At this rate, if the War Risk Insurance Bureau is kept going, it will not be long until there will be more employees in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance at Washington and in proposed regional stations throughout the land than there are soldiers, sailors, and marines insured. It is estimated that it will require $23,000,000 to run the War Risk Bureau next year; but the way things are headed it will not be long, in my opinion, until the overhead expense will be something like $40,000,000 a year.

I believe in the old-fashioned American form of government. I am not for paternalistic innovations unless it can be shown that such innovations spell progress and are for the benefit of the people and not for classes. I think that all war legislation, whenever and wherever practical, should be repealed as quickly as possible. The Government is liable for pensions to disabled soldiers. Why maintain an expensive insurance establishment at a fabulous yearly cost to the taxpayers of the United States?

The soldiers of the United States were conscripted and sent into a foreign country to fight at $1 per day in mud knee-deep and cootie-infested trenches, the Government all the while having a string to each soldier's salary until the same was reduced to approximately nil per month, while dollar-per-year men, close to the President—some of them, it is alleged, liberal contributors to Democratic campaign funds—were said to have organized a copper company, out of which, it has been stated, they pyramided millions upon millions of dollars, and as a consequence are rolling in wealth. Are not such actions a travesty upon patriotism?

If this war-risk act stands as the permanent policy of the Government, the next move will be regional or State subdivisions of the bureau, and Congress will be called upon from time to time to appropriate millions of dollars to maintain the great army of tax caters, while old Gen. Hy. Cost will chuckle and smile and continue to grind out taxes from the people.

It might perhaps be cheaper to abolish bureaus and boards, created by the war, including the war-risk act and bureau, and issue each and every soldier, sailor, and marine a bonus in the form of an honor bond. The money already in the Treasury—the $300,000,000—together with what might be confiscated by the Government in the form of special taxes from the class of profiteers on patriotism just now referred to, might be applied as part liquidation of such honor bonds and the balance left for future generations to liquidate. It is hardly square that the present generation should foot all the bills. Future generations, no doubt, will be benefited by the results of the late World War, and should pay.

I understand Canada and Australia have or are about to issue honor bonds to soldiers. The United States has not.

The ingratitude of Republics is proverbial.

No soldier will get the benefit of the money paid in for insurance unless he renews his policy. True, he was "protected" while the insurance was in force. But, had he been injured in the service, the moral and legal obligations of the Government of the United States are such that the Congress would have been morally bound to pension and take care of him in that way, insurance or no insurance.

Activities designed and shaped for the purpose of war will now do well, in my opinion, to shut up shop and leave it to time of peace to find ways and means to the needs of peace. It is, I believe, a serious mistake in policy to attempt to make over the machinery of war times and apply it to the service of a time when war is past. The time now is just as imperative to quit as it was imperative to begin. The time has come to quit making appeals in behalf of war activities when there is no war. It is indeed time to ring down the curtain and put up the shutters.

War-Risk Insurance Act Amendments.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALVAN T. FULLER,

OF MASSACHUSETTS.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, September 13, 1919,

On House bill 8778, to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act.

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill. This piece of proposed legislation is sane, safe, and humane, and I believe will do more for the material welfare of the soldiers, sailors, and marines in the Great War and their beneficiaries than any other piece of legislation yet contemplated or likely to be proposed within many a year to come.

The war-risk act of the Great War was approved October 6, 1917, just six months after the war was declared. It was a new venture in insurance. It was supposed to take the place of the pension system which came down to us from our Civil War. It related to allotments, both voluntary and involuntary (taken out of the pay of soldiers, sailors, and marines), and family allowances paid by the United States Government. It related to compensation for death and disability. It related to war-risk insurance.

That legislation was enacted in the interest of every commissioned officer and enlisted man and every member of the Army and Navy Nurse Corps when employed in the active service under the War and Navy Departments of the United States.

Last year the sum of $550,000,000 passed through the office of the Director of War Risk Insurance. Forty billion dollars' worth of outstanding insurance—more than is written by the five largest insurance companies in the world—is the record of the War Risk Insurance Bureau.

The bureau has received 1,649,035 applications asking for Government allowance and 2,742,321 applications not asking for Government allowance. Two-fifths of the men in service have dependents. The bureau has paid $271,000,000 in allotments and $237,000,000 in allowances. Twenty-five thousand six hundred and eighteen claims for compensation have been approved, paying $678,000 each month. Thirty thousand seven hundred and ninety-five claims for disabilities through service have been approved, paying $974,279 each month. One million six hundred and forty-five thousand two hundred and twenty-five dollars has been paid for burial expenses. In the bureau there are 13,500 officials and employees, and they handle the insurance of over 4,000,000 of men.

Two years' experience with the working of the war-risk insurance bill has shown its defects, its incongruities, and its many needed changes, which was, of course, but natural in a piece of untried legislation.

I, in common with other Members of Congress, have had a great many dealings with the War Risk Bureau under its several directors—Delanoy, Commissioner Nesbit, Lindsley, and its present most efficient director, R. G. Cholmeley-Jones. My relations with the bureau have always been of the most pleasant character, and I have always felt that the great hostility to its workings came from the imperfect law, rather than from the efforts of the director and his assistants to carry out the wishes of those who have had dealings with it.

The bill which we are about to pass is for the purpose of enlarging the provisions of the original war-risk insurance act and making it more beneficial for the insured and his beneficiaries.

Of the 435 Members of the House, I presume every one has had a bill which he has threatened to introduce into this Congress to remedy some of the defects he has found in trying to obtain for his constituents what seemed to be right and fair, and this bill as reported contains the best wisdom of the committee which had it in charge and, it is fair to say, embraces in it a great many needed changes which have been found necessary after the two years' working of the original act. I have not time to set forth in detail the provisions of this bill—they all have been referred to in this discussion—but I do wish to note a few things in which I have been very much interested and which appeal to a great many constituents of mine. They are as follows:

(a) The raising of $30 a month to $80 for a disabled person who has neither wife nor child living.

(b) The raising of $45 to $90 per month if the disabled person has a wife but no child living.

(c) The raising of $55 to $95 per month to a person who has a wife and one child living.

(d) The raising of $65 to $100 a month to a person who has a wife and two or more children living.

(e) The raising of $40 a month to $90 if a person has no wife but one child living, and $5 for each additional child up to two.

(f) Section 4 of the bill defining the words "father" and "mother," and including persons who have stood in loco parentis to a member of the military and naval forces for a period of not less than a year.

I have had brought to my attention a great many cases which would be taken care of by this last provision, a most righteous one. I have in mind a young man who lost his father and mother and was brought up by a person who was no relative of his. She cared for him as if he were her son. He called her mother; she was, in fact, a mother to him for all purposes. The boy died in the service. He designated her as his beneficiary and insurance was refused to her because she did not come within the permitted class of beneficiaries.

Section 6 provides for the assignment by the beneficiary of his interest in a policy of converted insurance to any other member of the permitted class of beneficiaries. The present term insurance will not be assignable by any person, but the committee have very justly viewed that after the term insurance had been converted the beneficiary had a vested interest therein and should have the right to assign his interest to any other member of the permitted class of beneficiaries. I should go further and authorize him to assign it to anybody, as I believe that where a person has a vested interest in a thing it should be placed under his absolute control, so that he could dispose of his interest in any way he chose.

Section 12 provides for the extension of automatic insurance for all men inducted into the service between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918. This covers the full period of the war. This section provides, with certain limitations, that any person in the active service during the war who becomes or has become totally and permanently disabled and dies, or has died, without having applied for insurance shall be deemed to have applied for and to have been granted insurance payable to such person during his life in monthly installments of $25 each. This section also provides for the payment of automatic insurance to those who while in such service and before being accepted and enrolled for active military or naval service become disabled, or permanently disabled, or die without having applied for insurance, it being provided that such person shall be deemed to have applied for and to have been granted insurance payable to such person during his life in monthly installments of $25 each.

I am glad to see in the bill the provision that the family-allowance feature will terminate four months after the President issues his official proclamation of peace. This provision was placed there, as the House chairman stated, at the suggestion of the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, so that ample time might be given to close and terminate properly all matters in regard to family allowances and make adjustments relative to compulsory allotments.

The provision about allowing the War Risk Bureau authority to establish a reciprocal policy in taking care of the soldiers who fought in the Great War is a good one. The illustration stated was very pat, namely, that some 20,000 or 30,000 American citizens were a part of the Canadian Army and of necessity the Canadian Government must look out for the soldiers who have been maimed and crippled, no matter where they reside. Many of these soldiers will return to the United States, and it would be far better for them to receive assistance and medical treatment at our governmental hospitals in the United States than to have the Canadian Government render that service to them within the borders of the United States. If we render that service for the Canadian Government, the Canadian Government can, under the provisions of this bill, reimburse our Government for the services so rendered.

I have referred to this last matter for the purpose of expressing an opinion that it would be a patriotic act for our Government to deal as liberally with our soldiers as the Canadian Government does with its soldiers. The latter Government practically loans them $3,000 on which to start life anew and gives them a very handsome compensation for each month that they were in the war.

This bill is the combined wisdom of what appears in 3 resolutions and 28 bills introduced into this Congress suggesting amendments to the original war-risk insurance act.

The War Risk Bureau, as we all know, was created in September, 1914, as a part of the Treasury Department, to provide facilities for the insurance of American vessels and their cargoes against the risks of war and so carry on our foreign commerce. More than 90 per cent of the men in the service have taken out war-risk insurance for an amount averaging $8,700 each. This bureau has 30,000,000 individual records, 3 miles of file cabinets, 4,000 typewriters. Its business was transacted before it was located in its present building in 16 scattered buildings in Washington ranging from garages to museums. If the amount of insurance issued by the bureau was in dollar bills joined end to end, the line would extend to the moon and back over seven times. This bureau, with the cooperation of the Public Health Service, is caring for the sick and disabled discharged soldiers, and is providing hospital and sanatorium service in addition to its other work.

A word about the new insurance which is being issued by the Government—a matter concerning which there is some confusion in the minds of the public. The war-risk insurance provided during the war time was a one-year renewable term insurance with true monthly premiums. This policy was nonassignable, was free from the claims of creditors, and was not subject to taxation. The beneficiaries under the new form of insurance are the same as under the old form, which is better known as the "term insurance." The term insurance was always payable in monthly installments, whereas the new form in the case of endowment insurance is payable in one sum at maturity. The new insurance is issued in six kinds of policies—ordinary life, 20-payment life, 30-payment life, 20-year endowment, 30-year endowment, and endowment at the age of 62.

To convert insurance a man must have continued his term insurance in force. The conversion may take place at any time, but not later than five years after the declaration of peace by the President. The form of the converted insurance is officially known as the United States Government life insurance, and the strength of the United States is the security for these policies; and the premiums are lower than those charged by any other company for participation insurance with similar benefits. It is well to remember that while the Government has provided for insurance in time of war, as much as possible of this insurance should be converted and carried by men in civil life. Three-fourths of the holders of existing policies have not continued their payments.

It should always be remembered that while the iron cross is a symbol of our enemy, the war-risk insurance policy is a symbol of our democracy and helps to inspire and create new confidence for the future of our country.

These are dry statistics, and I give them only for the purpose of showing the enormity of the business which the bureau is carrying on. Let me for a moment refer to some things of a lighter nature in connection with the work of the bureau. There are in the employ of the bureau a great number of girls who have come to be known as the sleuth detectives of the bureau. Their skill is marvelous, and it is owing to their ability in deciphering human scrawls that a great number of policies for the soldiers have been located; and if it had not been for their skill and proficiency many of these policies of American soldiers and sailors might have been lost forever. When you stop to consider that 30 per cent of the addresses of discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines are found to be incorrect, these girls should certainly obtain the degree of B. I.—Bachelor of Imagination. One of these file searchers had placed in her hands a memorandum to find a beneficiary, Mrs. Ella Stalks. She found the case, and it turned out that the correct name should have been Mrs. Ella Cabbagestalks, wife of James Cabbagestalks, from McCall, S. C. Another girl was given a memorandum to find the record of the case of Pvt. Charles E. Flivver. It turned out that the name was Charles E. Ford, of Pushmataba, Ala. The case of Andrew Good, of North Dakota, was found to be the record of Andrew Good Thunder. Of the Jose Rodriguezes, 51 were members of the Three hundred and forty-seventh Infantry. There were 53,200 Johnsons called into active military service. There were 51,950 Smiths called into service and 48,000 of the Brown family. There were 175 John J. O'Briens, and to add to the completeness of the surprise of the searchers 50 John J.'s had wives whose names were Mary A.

Some difficulty was experienced in distinguishing between the names of the father and son in the case of Lemon Cobb. The name of the father, according to the application for insurance, was Orange Cobb. It was finally determined, however, that Lemon Cobb was the son of Orange Cobb. Constant combing is necessary to keep the files in the bureau up to date. Among the discharge notices received by the bureau to compare with original signatures upon applications for insurance made at the time of entering the service were many with unusual names, some of which appear in the files as follows:

Asad Experience Wilson, Mih Gosh, Green Horn, Velvet Couch, Will Swindle, Paris Green, Little Kitty Car, John Albert Pancake, Please Hatch, Grief Grimes, Wash Day Clouds, Slaughter Bug, Chocolate Candy Clark, Harry Cries for Rib, Owen Money, Toy Brush, Cigar Brown, E. Pluribus Brown, York Candy, Lloyd George Parliament, Precious Eugene Grant, and Dinner Bell Page.

I desire now to make some general observations on the principle of insurance as set forth in these war-risk insurance bills.

I am always amused when I listen to the discussion in this House on propositions of public welfare to see the standpoint on which the desired good is sought. It is always what we propose to do for the other fellow; what good things we are going to place on his table, what sights from the mountain tops we are going to show him, what lands we are going to give him on which to till the soil—most of these lands will bring forth nothing but stones and weeds, as far as I have examined the proposition up to date—what things we are doing for his welfare. I have heard for the past two years this discussion, that the war-risk act would take away all thoughts of pensions from our returning soldiers; there will be no more pension bills, no more pensions asked for, none granted, none needed.

I am awaiting the time when our soldiers get back home into the harness to hear what they themselves will say about this act and its provisions. Will they not say, "Gentlemen, this war was on. We were rushed into the war. This war-risk act was rushed at us. It did us a great deal of good, but it did not go far enough. The act is full of technicalities. There were no technicalities needed when we had to pull the trigger of the gun and kill a German or be killed by him. It was do or die. We did both, some of the boys. We come back 25 years of age. Our legs are shot off. Our arms are gone. We are wounded; we are incapacitated for life. We are cripples. Come and see us in the Walter Reed Hospital. Our families have had just enough to keep the wolf from the door while we were away. We simply say to you lawmakers now, 'Make us whole, as near as possible. Extend the provisions of the war-risk insurance act. If there are benefits to be paid, let us have them to keep us from starving. Have a heart, men. Do not rely upon the quibbles that many life and casualty companies rely upon to defeat their policies. The war was an emergency. We took the emergency insurance. Treat us fairly. Are we not asking things which are right?'" Your answer will be, "Yes"; and if there are pension bills growing out of the war pass them, as you have done for the old soldiers for the past 50 years and as we are doing to-day, and as you will be doing, if I read psychology right, for all time to come, and we the taxpayers will pay our portion of the expenses willingly, cheerfully, and without complaint.

My own State of Massachusetts has granted the boys $100 bonus. If the vote were put to a referendum in my State, I believe we would grant them a much larger sum. The State of Wisconsin by a referendum has made a most liberal provision for her boys. I am heartily in favor of the bill introduced into Congress by Representative JOHNSON of Washington, which provides for the establishment of branches of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the capital cities of each of the States of the Union. This is one of the recommendations growing out of the Hughes investigation, and I believe it would be of great service to our boys in the way of obtaining their just dues from the War Risk Bureau in the quickest possible time and with the minimum of trouble on their part. I sometimes think that the Pension Bureau, which has branches in every State in the Union, should be amalgamated with the War Risk Insurance Bureau.

Next week we celebrate the coming of Gen. Pershing and his magnificent First Division. We have given him his four stars. Congress has never given any man a higher honor. He stands alone, the great general. The boys under him have won their stars, and we gladly pay them that honor in our gratitude and emoluments for their material benefit. With it all there is one thing which we must not forget.

You will remember Rostand's "Song of the Stars." The Man of Frightfulness states that he was made up to look like an American citizen for the purpose of making our flag wave in the air for him, but never could he get the flag to stir. He said to it, "Wave for Germany." Sadly it stayed still. But if he spoke a word for France it thrilled. "What then," he said, "inspires this flag in such a manner? The stars!" he answered. "I had not calculated with the stars. My troubles come from those old generous stars. What can I do? I will tell you that I have found a way." So quickly he mounted the staff and with his scissors where the blue square was there remained a square hole. "As for their stars, I've got them in my pocket." The flag amid the night hung low, concealing its wound in its fold. The Man of Frightfulness said, "See if it now waves, then pronounce your land." The man said "France." At once the flag waved forth to the blue sky, and in their corner the stars they all were there. They showed it would not be possible to cut the heavenly scutcheon from the flag, except to make it bluer, and the Man of Frightfulness understood how through the empty spot where now the sky was framed you saw real stars where pictured stars had been. In the flag he cut the heavens had placed a piece of their own blue, and with fresh voices, as when shadows lighten, the stars of heaven sang through the silk flag the song of the stars, which never can be lacking. "Oh, flag with stars adorned, float out." No man hath heard it said as yet that stars are like to lose their memory.

"And laugh," said suddenly a star—"And laugh
At all who, like Von Gluck along the Marne,
And our man of this night * * *
With method scientific, big hands sure * * *
And sure plans * * *
Sure there are never, back beyond the stars
Their big eyes see, other and other stars;
Sure they should never see return the blue
Their scissors with big blades had cut away;
And so are stupified when we shine out.
For they foresee well—all save the essential.
They have forgotten but one thing—the heavens."

Let us not in these days of our triumph forget "the heavens," for as—

The tumult and the shouting dies,
The captains and the kings depart,
Still stands thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

Amendment to War-Risk Insurance Act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM W. HASTINGS.

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, September 13, 1919.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, it is frequently stated that republics are ungrateful. I think that this is only too often true. This Nation owes a debt of gratitude to the men who were willing to die in its defense. Every man who joined the Army was assured that he would be cared for, if disabled, and that his dependents would not suffer. The men who were left behind in civil pursuits ought to be willing to give a generous share of their earnings for this purpose. We have enacted much legislation for the benefit of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the last war, and an analysis of the same shows that Congress has not been unmindful of the quality of service rendered and the great sacrifices made.

To-day we have before us amendments to the war-risk insurance act. All of them liberalize the law. When the bill was first enacted, many contingencies could not be foreseen. When many provisions were subjected to close scrutiny and administrative construction, it was found necessary to add amendments qualifying the language and construing them. The original act was a splendid piece of legislation. At the time it was passed I expressed my gratification in being able to assist in its enactment. There has been some confusion in the administration of the law, due to many causes. The bureau administering it is new and had to be systematized. Nearly all of its officers were without sufficient previous experience and the work rapidly expanded to undreamed-of proportions. Again, let us remember that the enlistments in the Army alone totaled about 4,000,000 men, and that they were scattered not only all over our own country, but throughout western Europe. The mails were irregular and many addresses were difficult to obtain. The work of the bureau has now been systematized and the Army has been reduced to about one-tenth of its original strength. Complaints concerning delays are now few and far between.

The bill before us seeks to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act so as to make it more workable and easier of administration. Section 4 amends the original act so as to enlarge the definition of father and mother to include persons who stood in loco parentis. It makes this provision retroactive from and after October 6, 1917. If the soldier designated as beneficiary a woman who stood in the place of his mother, but who had not legally adopted him, she will be able to collect the insurance after the adoption of this amendment. Section 11 amends section 302 of the original war-risk insurance act and increases the compensation allowed to disabled soldiers, as follows:

If and while the disability is rated as total and temporary the monthly compensation shall be the following amounts:

(a) If the disabled person has neither wife nor child living, $80; under the present law, $30.

(b) If he has a wife but no child living, $90, while the present law provides only $45.

(c) If he has a wife and one child living, $95, but the existing law gives them only $55.

(d) If he has a wife and two or more children living, $100; but under the present law they would receive $75.

(e) If he has no wife, but one child living, $90, with $5 for each additional child up to two. The present law would give them $40, with $10 for each additional child up to two.

(f) If he has a mother or father, they would receive the same as under the present law, if dependent upon him for support.

If the soldier's disability is total and permanent he receives a compensation of $100 per month and for double total permanent disability, where both eyes and feet or both arms and feet are lost, he receives $200 per month as compensation. In the event there is constant need of a nurse an additional sum not to exceed $20 per month is allowed.

In addition to the above compensation the injured person is furnished with medical and surgical service and hospital accommodations and is given free necessary artificial limbs.

The converted insurance, if these amendments are enacted into law, may be made payable to the beneficiary by the insured in a lump sum, or in 36 monthly payments. The converted insurance may also be made payable in more than 36 installments, at the option of the beneficiary, providing the insured designates that they shall be paid in 36 payments. In other words, the beneficiary may increase the number of payments over what the insured designated in the policy, but the beneficiary can not have the payments made in a smaller number. The reinstatement of insurance without a physical examination is provided for. In the event no one survives within the permitted class, the insurance is payable to the estate of the insured.

It is greatly regretted that discharged soldiers are not finding it convenient or to their interest to carry some of their insurance, if not all of it. In the first place, this insurance is cheaper than any other insurance that can be obtained. All of the overhead expenses, including salaries of officials, commissions paid to agents, office expenses, and the like, are paid by the Government and not by the policyholders. No insurance could be safer. It is an obligation the Government owes its defenders. Every business man in the country endeavors to carry some insurance, and the importance of the matter should be pressed upon the attention of all soldiers. They should be urged to retain at least a part of their insurance. If they can not keep all of it, they can keep some. As they grow older it is more difficult for them to pass a physical examination and the premiums rapidly increase. Every soldier should make some financial sacrifice and retain a part of his insurance.

Everyone rejoices that the world-wide war is over. In looking back through the past two and one-half years we see that much legislation has been enacted because of it. There was never any other war that approximated the one just ended, either as to the number of nations involved, the number of men engaged, or the amount of money appropriated. Exclusive of the money loaned to our allies, the United States expended $22,000,000,000. France spent $26,000,000,000; Great Britain and her dominions, $38,000,000,000; Russia, $18,000,000,000; and Italy, $13,000,000,000; and the sums spent by Belgium, Japan, and other small countries bring the total up to $123,000,000,000. The Central Powers spent staggering sums also. It cost Germany $39,000,000,000 and Austria-Hungary, $21,000,000,000. An additional $3,000,000,000 was expended by Turkey and Bulgaria, making a total of $63,000,000,000. It is to be seen that the great total of war cost to the Allies and the Central Powers was $186,000,000,000. These figures are official and were recently given out by the War Department. I am reminded that the total cost for all wars for 121 years prior to this war was about $23,323,000,000. In 19 months our Government spent almost this much. It is stated that we spent at the rate of a million dollars an hour during the past two years. These sums do not include the vast expenditures made by individuals caused by the war.

Between August 1, 1914, when the war began, and November 11, 1918, the date of the armistice, the official figures of the deaths given out to date show as follows: Russia, 1,700,000; Germany, 1,600,000; France, 1,385,000; Great Britain, 900,000; Austria-Hungary, 800,000; Italy, 364,000; United States, 50,000. The grand total of soldiers who died on the field of battle is 7,450,200. This number does not include the wounded in our Army, who number about 230,000 men. It is also called to my attention that during the period of 121 years prior to this war 6,000,000 men were killed in battle. This war was the most costly and was the most frightful, so far as the loss of life is concerned, of any war in all history.

It was preparation on a large scale by the United States that enabled us to win the war without a death loss equaling our allies. We raised an Army in an incredibly short time. We made appropriations and provided the necessary men, transportation, and supplies. Not only did we do this for our own Army, so as to make it effective, but we also rendered aid to our allies so as to make their soldiers more effective.

Since studying the question carefully and visiting the battle fields of France, there is no doubt in my mind but what the quick termination of the war and the saving of hundreds of thousands of lives was due to the splendid leadership of President Wilson, the laws enacted by Congress, the effective work of the various departments of the Government, and the efficient military officers of the Army and Navy directly charged with the responsibility of conducting operations. Since the war ended in a triumphant victory, I do not have much patience with men who are now hunting for small things to criticize. Of course, mistakes were made and doubtless some blunders. We do not condone them, but in the years to come things to criticize that are now being looked for with partisan microscopes will be lost sight of, and our posterity will read with amazement about the things accomplished during the 19 months we were at war. The little errors will be lost sight of in the greater achievements of our glorious country.

When we look back over the sacrifices made we ought to be generous to our soldiers. The dependents of disabled soldiers ought to be looked after with an affectionate care. I am glad to be a Member of the House during the consideration of this legislation and give the same my hearty support.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WHITMELL P. MARTIN,

OF LOUISIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, September 20, 1919.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks I include an address delivered by Representative JAMES O'CONNOR before Carroll Council, Knights of Columbus, Washington, D. C., on September 16, 1919.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS BY JAMES O'CONNOR TO KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS, CARROLL COUNCIL.

WASHINGTON, September 16, 1919.

I am glad to have the honor and privilege of addressing a council which has for its presiding officer one of the foremost citizens of this beautiful city of Washington, the Capital of the Nation, a gentleman who is known by every Representative in the House of Representatives and whose fame as a man, official, and patriot has gone from one end of the country to the other, from ocean to ocean, as we are wont to say, and as others, equally affectionate, put it, from the Great Lakes of the north to the Mexican Sea on the south. This reference to Grand Knight Haltigan is not a species of hyperbole, an exaggeration of his value, worth, or standing. If anything, it does not do justice to the splendid figure whose magnificent services to the House and therefore to the Nation have won for him the admiration, affection, and esteem of the membership of that assembly, which is composed of Representatives from every State and Territory of the Union of sovereign States that make up the sovereign Nation, the United States of America. But beyond the services and the duty that he owes to his country and which he renders and performs so efficiently and so patriotically there is a duty which he renders to humanity, to the outcasts, the "down and out," as it is eloquently expressed, even though accompanied by a sneer that almost ends in a sob, for the derelict is ours and we can not help but think that a turn of the wheel of fortune and his might have been our lot and ours his.

When not discharging his duties as reading clerk in the House of Representatives of the United States of America—for that is his title, and of more real importance to the country are his services than those of even the Speaker of that House, as valuable as that officer is to the welfare of the country—we may find this knight of the present day not in the seats of the mighty, not on Olympus, not with the great of the land, but down in the city jail or out at Occoquan, in the reformatory and in the penitentiary, laboring to encourage, to hearten, to cheer on their lonely and wretched existences the men and women who are incarcerated, bidding them in language eloquent to fight the good fight, and to pray God for the strength and courage to start on the road again and make one more "supreme" effort to justify life in a great way, and to make the end of the trail as one who has lost every round in the fight except the last. Oft I have seen him at work, and I have thrilled to his honest words bursting from a heart that felt the woe of those to whom he preached. I have followed him and talked better than I can talk usually, for he feels their passion and their pain, the terrible despair that seizes upon these men and women doomed to serve in servitude 10, 15 years, and even life terms, to be bereft of liberty and freedom, and to look upon the human race as their enemies; and he communicates that pain, that emotion, and I can then see what he sees and feel what he feels. It is then that I realize the full meaning and significance of those words that flame and burn:

If you would have me weep,
Begin the strain,
That I may feel your sorrow,
Feel your pain.

Haltigan is a Catholic and preaches and practices the great teachings of his religion with the fiery zeal of a crusader. Haltigan would have been a churchman if he had been born thousands of years before the august church of which he is a member had come into existence, for while it has an antiquity which few human institutions can boast and the reverence of millions of great men and women all over the habitable world, there were before it churches that played out their part in the scheme of things and went their way of oblivion and left not a track behind, churches that produced world figures who preached and then crossed to that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler has ever returned. In Egypt's celebrated Book of the Dead, written 2,000 years before Joseph was sold into captivity and long before the dawn of Judaism had yet begun, there appear these words: "He hath given bread to the hungry, water to the thirsty, clothes to the naked; he hath given a boat to the shipwrecked; he hath made due offerings to the gods and paid due rites to the departed." All of these duties has he discharged so faithfully that in his case it is not a duty; it is his religion. And running hand in hand with these splendid performances we find him visiting the outcast, the wretched in prison. That famous book is almost forgotten; the temples in which it was preserved and read are no more. The book may survive a few centuries and then will be with the books of yesteryear. The temples are no more. They have joined the great architectural wonders and engineering monuments of the past, in the grave of oblivion.

They are one with the—

Cloud capp'd towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself;
Yea, all which it inherit shall dissolve,
And like this insubstantial pageant, faded,
Leave not a wrack behind.

But the splendid sentiment of that mighty past, and which was expressed in its sacred temples, still struggles for utterance and for practice in such noble breasts as the gentleman that I am proud to call friend—a Christian with all of the religion that God has vouchsafed to the world through all of the centuries in his make-up—and a man for whom all the world should have an admiration. "The elements are so mixed in him that one might stand up and say to all this world, this is a man."

I am glad to speak to the membership of an organization which is destined to play such a great part in the affairs of our country that in the years to come it will be looked to as a bulwark of constitutional and representative government, an organization which as ancillary and auxiliary to the Catholic Church has imbibed, absorbed, the holy principles of that great church and its imperishable nature, for while all things earthly may fade and pass away the church immutable, changeless, perennial, immortal, shall live on forever, undimmed by age, unhurt amid the wreck of matter and the crush of worlds.

What a history that church has. Glorious, inspiring! What tongue can sing its praises? What voice can proclaim its service to God and the world? What hand portray with brush or chisel the images that have come from its soul into the blood of man and which may be felt but never expressed? Oh, glorious cathedrals of the church everlasting, serenely, tranquilly, sit in thy holy places, a reminder of the wonderful authority and power over the human soul in the past and a suggestion of its invincible truths for the future. Listen to the voice from the grave, the voice of one who has given to English letters as great and as secure a chapter in the literature of the world as Shakespeare or Milton. Listen to the son of a Presbyterian minister, the Macaulay who is known in schoolhouse and college and university wherever the English language is spoken, as he paints in never-fading words the history of that church which seemed to have fascinated his eye as soon as he began to gaze upon it and its mighty and splendid past:

There is not, and there never was on this earth, a work of human policy so well deserving of examination as the Roman Catholic Church. The history of that church joins together the two great ages of human civilization. No other institution is left standing which carries the mind back to the times when the smoke of sacrifice rose from the Pantheon, and when cameleopards and tigers bounded in the Flavian amphitheater. The proudest royal houses are but of yesterday when compared with the line of the supreme pontiffs. That line we trace back in an unbroken series, from the Pope who crowned Napoleon in the nineteenth century to the Pope who crowned Pepin in the eighth; and far beyond the time of Pepin the august dynasty extends till it is lost in the twilight of fable. The Republic of Venice came next in antiquity. But the Republic of Venice was modern when compared with the papacy; and the Republic of Venice is gone and the papacy remains. The papacy remains, not in decay, not a mere antique, but full of life and youthful vigor. The Catholic Church is still sending forth to the farthest ends of the world missionaries as zealous as those who landed in Kent with Augustine, and still confronting hostile kings with the same spirit with which she confronted Attila. The number of her children is greater than in any former age. Her acquisitions in the New World have more than compensated for what she has lost in the Old. Her spiritual ascendancy extends over the vast countries which lie between the plains of the Missouri and Cape Horn, countries which a century hence may not improbably contain a population as large as that which now inhabits Europe. The members of her communion are certainly not fewer than a hundred and fifty millions; and it will be difficult to show that all other Christian sects united amount to a hundred and twenty millions. Nor do we see any sign which indicates that the term of her long dominion is approaching. She saw the commencement of all the governments and of all the ecclesiastical establishments that now exist in the world; and we feel no assurance that she is not destined to see the end of them all. She was great and respected before the Saxon had set foot on Britain, before the Franks had passed the Rhine, when Grecian eloquence still flourished in Antioch, when idols were still worshiped in the temple of Mecca. And she may still exist in undiminished vigor when some traveler from New Zealand shall, in the midst of a vast solitude, take his stand on a broken arch of London Bridge to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's.

My friends, I am not unmindful of the magnificent work accomplished by the great Hebrew church, which has given to the world so many lights by whose rays millions have been guided through the troubled night.

We can never forget the deathless names given to history and humanity's scroll of fame by the great Protestant church of the world. But we can not forget that if it were not for that other church and its monasteries there would be no world as we understand it to-day. There would be no civilization as we live it now. It is difficult to describe what would be our condition, and if a society would be in existence at all. When we reflect that all of the learning found repository in the monasteries during the long night of the Middle Ages and that it was this learning that restarted the world and gave it a new birth, the Renaissance, we can imagine the chaos that would be ours if the light of learning had not continued in existence in these holy places during century after century, while all of the world slumbered and slept the sleep of intellectual somnolence. Some years ago I heard a noted Protestant divine, a man who was justly loved and venerated by the people of his country, for he was great in heart and soul, say that with all of our boasted civilization we were but a few generations removed from a state of savagery; that if by some dreadful visitation similar to that which afflicted the Dark Ages our schoolhouses went and our churches tumbled into ruin the grass would be growing in our cities within 100 years and a new animal and vegetable life would begin to contend for the mastery of what is now the farm. Never while the human mind prizes the intellectual glow that comes from the acquaintance of the great literary men of the past and who live in their words should be forgotten the church that has continued them in its life. Never while men and women prefer to live amid a splendid and glorious civilization should we forget that it was that church that preserved for us its immutable foundations and mudsills.

I can still see that church standing when all other things begin to crumble and fade and fall away forever. I can still see it doing noble and great and wonderful things in behalf of humanity when the world is reeling in its orbit and about to take the final plunge, for the church is immortal. Temples will come and go, palaces will spring from the hands of a modern Phidias, and ages of Pericles will come again and again and then roll down from their high places and disappear in the abyss of time; but the church, securely fastened with the spirit that gives it comfort and strength, will be with us until the last chapter is written.

Through its great societies and its latest acquisition, its last intellectual offspring, it is doing a great work now, for the preservation of law and order, for the preservation of human rights and the virtues and the religious adherence and devotion to the commandments, the fundamentals of our creed. For it is a great work to labor for the maintenance of law and order when riot and disorder seem to be in the blood of the world; it is a great work to struggle for the preservation of property rights when those rights are being assailed in secret and in the open more so than any other time in the history of the world. It is great to fight and struggle for the reconstruction of the world when mighty forces are clamoring for its destruction. It is patriotic, holy, to hold the balance evenly between capital and labor, when there are such fierce resentments and hostilities abroad between the contending factors of our civilization. For to-day as in the past our church stands for the rights of the wage earner, and seeks to secure for him that just share of the wealth of the generation in which he lives and labors that will enable him to live decently and bring up his family as God-fearing, honest, and patriotic and cultured men and women of a great Republic, its pride and glory, and its best gift to the future.

That is your work, Knights of Columbus. And it is a great work. To defend the institutions of your country, to insist upon the veneration of the Constitution, to obey the law of the land and to uphold the dignity of the Nation, to fight to the death its foes from without or within, to stand heel to heel and shoulder to shoulder and heart to heart with your countrymen, to rally in the hour of danger behind our flag, is the hope, the monition, the command of this organization and its mother church. It is a great work! To protect the weak from the strong, to preserve the Nation, to defend it from the forces of chaos, what nobler or greater work can any American perform? Knights, you were rightly named.

For while it is true, indeed, that the age of chivalry is no more, that it is just as much of the past as Hannibal crossing the Alps or Alexander trampling the Persian hosts beneath his phalanxes at Arbela, there is as great a need for individual service to-day as in the days when the knight, armed and mounted, dashed across the drawbridge in search of adventure in the land of romance upon the mere suggestion that some damsel was in captivity and sighed to be rescued. More often than not the knight performed some other service of just as much value to his generation and day as in attempting the rescue of a heroine that had existence only in the imagination of some strolling minstrel. Each and every knight may perform knightly service for his country. The many problems that press for solution and which require the highest order of conservative thinking and solid intellectuality, the building anew upon the old order that is disappearing but should recede slowly and not pass abruptly away, which should move down a decline instead of fall over a precipice, are tasks for you to take up and discuss and endeavor to remedy or assist in arriving at the remedy.

The making of the new order will be a work for the biggest and best among us. The razing of tenements and the erection of new homes that will build an American Nation that can proudly boast that this is a country of liberty and of freedom, where the general welfare and the happiness of the people is the first and chief concern of the people and their lawmakers. To cure the terrible curse of having our female blood, treading the iron way, trading themselves off for money, the blot upon our civilization that will forever prevent us from being great until that blot is wiped away. The chasm between the rich and the poor, between the great and the humble in worldly means should not be so great. It is unhealthy and a menace and a danger. We must close that gap. The national integrity must be maintained, and the thoughtless rich must be made to understand their obligations to their country and their countrymen, however obscure and poor and unknown. The wage earner must be given a chance, not only for himself but for his children who may be called upon to die for the country and who therefore have a right to claim a reciprocal obligation from the country and Nation, and that is that these children should be made by and through the schoolhouse, and by proper food and dress, decent, upstanding, courageous, brave, dauntless Americans. Great, glorious to fight for such a day and such a cause in our history.

And what, Knights of Columbus, if in seeking to accomplish this great and holy and patriotic purpose you do not stand upon the spotlight or occupy the central position upon the stage of this great drama? Your work is for your own satisfaction and for your own spiritual welfare and for God and your country. Suppose in attempting to perform this great service you do not climb the steep where fame's proud temple shines afar. What of that? "Many a shell has a pearl within; some are mated with the gold in the light of day; some are buried fathoms deep in the seas far away." Your fame is secure if you succeed in satisfying yourselves that your lifework was in the interest of your country and humanity, though no chronicler should note it. The little violet growing at the foot of the oak performs in the economy of nature as great as service as that monarch of the forest that withstands every wintry wind and sighs beneath the summer breeze.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
Full many a flower was born to blush unseen
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

Strike out for your country and its altars and its homes and institutions. Fight for their preservation, struggle for their maintenance, and the great order of which you are members will live in you ages after you have mingled your ashes with the brave of the land who have fought in the years gone by, fled forevermore,

Whose swords are rust, whose bones are dust,
Whose souls are with angels, we trust.

Take up with your own Constitution the immortal Encyclical, "The Condition of Labor," by Pope Leo XIII, because the Encyclical of his holiness is the greatest tribute ever paid by man to the greatness and the genius of our Constitution. Irrefutable, unanswerable, it stands out a monument of learning, of wisdom, of constitutional greatness; a magnificent tribute and eloquent testimonial to that Constitution under which our country has grown from 13 colonies on the Atlantic Ocean to "ocean to ocean and lakes to gulf," as we fondly and lovingly and affectionately and banteringly express it; aye, to still greater limits, down where the Southern Cross shows in heavenly splendor as it casts its beams upon our flag on Ancon and Taboga; out in the western seas where over the palms Old Glory receives the light of the moon that illumined those isles that perhaps enjoyed a Chinese civilization when Babylon was in its beginning. And what romance, what adventure, what tang, in that expansion! The Lousiana Purchase and the wonders that grew from that almost trackless empire of territory, the drives across the Mississippi, the reaching out by day and by night of men and women into the unknown forest! God! What a thrilling and splendid time they did have! And then the rush to and over the Rockies! The desert, the caravan, the prairie schooner, the graves, the babies born on the road to the end of the trail—Texas, Oregon—cowboys, Indians, buffaloes—the days that are no more—California, New Mexico, Nevada, Utah, Arizona, Gadsden, Hawaii, Samoa, the Philippines, Porto Rico, Panama. And that growth came from a Constitution that is but 132 years old. Nothing is comparable to it in history. Is it worth preserving, is it worth fighting for, is it worth defending? Read it and read the great Encyclical of Leo XIII. And when you have read both and have made them your speech, go forth and preach the word that that is what America stands for—the Constitution and the flag. Let them know—and by them I mean our blood and flesh, our people, our countrymen and countrywomen—what the State is in the sublime apostrophe of Longfellow:

Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all its hopes for future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate.
We know what Master laid thy keel,
What workmen wrought thy ribs of steel,
Who made each mast and sail and rope,
What anvils rang, what hammers beat,
In what a forge and what a heat
Were shaped the anchors of thy hope.
Fear not each sudden sound and shock,
'Tis of the wave and not the rock;
'Tis but the flapping of the sail
And not a rent made by the gale.
In spite of rock and tempest's roar,
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea!
Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee,
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee—are all with thee!

Yes, Knights of Columbus, you have a great work to perform, and well might you feel proud of the dignity and the holiness of that work. As American citizens willing to die for your own proud land, go forth with the Constitution in one hand, the mightiest and greatest work that ever came from the brain and pen of man, and "The Condition of Labor" in the other, one of the greatest gifts of a church whose beginning is lost in the remoteness of time, a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night for the world to travel by, an utterance that might well be given a place beneath the Ten Commandments handed down to the Great Lawgiver on Mount Sinai amid the roar of thunder and the flash of lightning, in the most awful and solemn moment in all of the world's history. Yes, Knights of Columbus, the church must have had its beginning ages before the Redeemer came to vitalize it and visualize it to humanity through His Holy Presence and the flame and purity of God nature. Well, indeed, might the words of David, the psalmist, be addressed by the church to the Great Father:

Whither shall I go from Thy spirit or whither shall I flee from Thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, Thou are there; if I make my bed in hell, behold Thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall Thy hand lead me and Thy right hand shall hold me. If I say surely the darkness shall cover me, even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from Thee; but the night shineth as the day; the darkness and the light are both alike to Thee. For Thou hast possessed my reins; Thou hast covered me in my mother's womb. My substance was not hid from Thee when I was made in secret and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eye did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in Thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them.

Millions of men and women long before the visible advent of our holy church saw it with that inner eye which no calamity can ever darken and felt its coming when its substance was yet unperfect, and before any of its members were written in the book, which in continuance were fashioned, and when as yet there was none of them. Millions of Catholics, like Haltigan and those that surround me in this council chamber, lived out their lives by way of anticipation of the coming of Christ and the advent of the glorious church that sends its spires and fanes and steeples toward the sky in every land and clime from Rome to Peru and from Washington to Good Hope. It could not be otherwise, for the truths of our church are not of yesterday; they are eternal. They had no birth from the standpoint of time; they will have no death. There were in all ages and in every generation men and women who yielded to the great truths and knew that the glories of the coming day would be for their children, when the church would be visible to all men.

But to the men and women of our country of the Catholic faith and of our generation was reserved the magnificent part in its grand and beautiful drama. No words can adequately describe the splendid work done by the Knights of Columbus, during the Great War, on this and the other side of the ocean. No language can fittingly carry to the pages of history the wonderful deeds by sea and by land, in hut, on the march, in trench, on the firing line and behind it, at stations, in Flanders fields, in the Alps, with the boys that turned the tide when disaster seemed to confront Italy—wherever our soldier boys were, there were the Knights of Columbus and their words of cheer and solace, their material comforts, and their spiritual encouragements. No; I shall not attempt to describe that work. Why try to paint the lily, perfume the rose, gild the wings of the butterfly? When shall their glory fade?

But I say to you, my friends, that, great as that work was, there is a greater work yet to be performed. That work may, can, should, shall be performed by the Knights of Columbus councils. Already you are moving up to meet any problem that may confront the country and mean its danger. Eighteen hundred councils have begun or will shortly begin a rereading of the Constitution, seeking a new baptism in its holy waters, that they may go forth strengthened for the conflict, if there be conflict, and reimpregnated, reinforced, refortified, by its wisdom and its learning, and willing to make any sacrifice that "government of the people, for the people, by the people, may not perish from the earth." Read it, read it, and read it again, my friends, and read in connection with it the immortal Encyclical, "The Condition of Labor," a work so profound, a work that interprets so clearly and beautifully the purpose, the soul, of our Constitution, that if he had never done anything else in his splendid life, it and it alone, would have consigned its grand author, Leo XIII, to literary and religious immortality.

The days that are ahead of the world and which will bring storm and agony and suffering are days that will again try men's souls. It is folly, idle, foolish, my friends, to believe that we can escape the tremendous danger that confronts the Old World. We can feel that appalling menace more and more with every wind that blows across the Atlantic. It is idle to suppose that the world can go back to its old methods and its old way of thinking and dreaming and living. The past is past, and only a heavenly Power can restore the old order of things. The things that were of the old order are largely with the men that went down into death that the new order, the rebirth, might mean higher and holier things to the generations that are to come. But the new dispensation must come not on frantic wings but with the sweep of the eagle, our own emblem of liberty, slowly, grandly, beautifully, so that while there is still a vision of the past gently receding into an ever-closing vista the great, splendid, boundless future may be seen approaching with its glorious possibilities and wonderful prospects. Let us remember the sunset, the gorgeous spectacle that silently, sadly, weirdly whispers the death of day, even while we are looking with eagerness, with enthusiasm, with amazement, to the glories of the coming day, the rising sun, and the awakening of a new life as it bursts over the eastern horizon. Read our Constitution. It makes for the old and provides for the new. Its principles of government can reach and vindicate all of the changing and alternating policies which may be required and demanded. Its old provisions when not sufficiently elastic may be amended, and in such a way as to make way for liberty on an ever-enlarging and grander scale, but liberty with reason, freedom with tolerance, fraternity with affection and love, union with that patriotism which means "this is your land and my land"—a Constitution which teaches us to reverence the past and to welcome the splendors of the future, always commanding us to remember that no government can endure that does not keep in mind that the people's welfare can be secured only through a government without license, liberty with law, and freedom with restraint, self-sought and self-imposed.

My friends, my theme is ended, my song has ceased, my voice is about to join the echoes. Would that this effort were worthier! As one who loves his country, who sees its troubled days that lie not far in the future, who sees the tremendous work required to place a devastated world on its feet again, who sees possible conflict, which I pray God to avert, I say buckle on your armor, and by teaching, preaching the word of the Constitution and its corollary—"The Condition of Labor"—still the mutterings, subdue the discord, and allay the discontent that rumble over the land and swell from the throats of those that may be thoughtless of the wonders that lie in the Constitution and the vast results that might be secured in an orderly, legitimate way by an appeal to its guaranties and its articles of faith and hope and charity, for all that is great and good in man, all that is holy in history, all that is reverential in the past, all that is hoary with antiquity, all that is pregnant with hope for the human race, all that inspires with a grand, sublime faith in the destiny of our country and its wonderful charity to the world, may be found in the Constitution of the United States. Let me close with words that are old to me but ever new to my spirit and to my tongue, because they epitomize the solemn warning that has been sounded in all of the ages against the dangers that come to every people in the thick night of political turmoil and onrushing tides that threaten to sweep away the ancient landmarks ere we erect, construct, build, the new:

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of truth with falsehood, for the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand and the sheep upon the right,
And that choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HOMER HOCH,
OF KANSAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, September 22, 1919.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an address delivered by Mr. William Smith Culbertson before the American Chemical Society at Buffalo, N. Y., April 8, 1919.

The address is as follows:

AMERICAN CHEMICAL INDUSTRIES AND THE TARIFF COMMISSION.

[Address delivered before the American Chemical Society, at Buffalo, N. Y., Apr. 8, 1919, by William Smith Culbertson, member United States Tariff Commission, Washington, D. C.]

The two outstanding general forces that operated during the war to modify and in some branches revolutionize the American chemical industries were the isolation of the central European powers, which cut off their overseas trade, and the enormous demand for chemical products in the prosecution of the war. How far-reaching these influences were I need not discuss in detail before this learned society. You are more familiar with them than I, and your work has been a determining factor in assisting our industries to meet the crises through which we have passed. The American public now realizes as never before that the chemical industries are in many particulars essential in the pursuits of both war and peace.

Of the industries affected by the war conditions, the coal-tar dye industry is the most familiar to the general public. The months of famine which followed the last direct shipment of dyes from Germany, in March, 1915, were more potent arguments for the diversification of American industrial life than a flood of oratory. An infant industry came into being and thrived under the protecting influences of the restrictions on the commerce of foreign competitors. The new industry has shown some of the failings of youth, but it can not be gainsaid that it has met the situation and that to-day the production of intermediates and dyes represents an important American industry.

Not so spectacular, but nevertheless significant, was the development under the war influences of many other chemical products—potash, synthetic nitric acid and ammonia, barium salts, synthetic phenol, thorium nitrate, phosphorus, oxalic acid, and chlorine and its products. The natural disadvantage under which some of these products—potash, for example—are produced makes their production in the United States in the future highly problematical. Others, however, will remain a permanent and important part of our industrial life. Thorium nitrate represents an interesting case of the effect of the removal of German competition. With the exception of the thorium nitrate produced by one large-sale manufacturer of incandescent gas mantles for his own use, our supply formerly came from Germany. But at the present time the monazite sand of Brazil, which before the war was shipped to Germany and there by complicated processes converted into thorium nitrate, is now shipped direct to this country and is being consumed by our own enlarged industry. Such changes as these had taken place in our industrial structure before April, 1917. Our entrance into the war brought added complications. War restrictions in some lines delayed development or diverted energy. The progress of the new dye industry was, for example, hampered by scarcity and high prices of raw materials; especially was this true in the case of toluol. In other lines there was an unprecedented stimulus of production. The Government demand for explosives and other chemical products was heavy. Old industries expanded to meet the emergency. New plants were erected by private companies and by the Government. Nitric and sulphuric acids, acetic acid and acetone, phosphorus, and chlorine and chlorine products were produced in enormous quantities.

ADJUSTMENT TO NORMAL TIMES.

No industries, taking the world over, have been as profoundly modified by the war as have the chemical industries. Changes have taken place not only in the United States but in foreign countries. German chemical industries have been drawn into an even closer business combination than existed before the war, and they have doubtless made progress in technical research and mechanical processes. Although they will suffer from the crisis through which Germany is passing, they will adjust themselves more readily to normal times than the German textile and steel industries. In other countries the same influences which established new and expanded old industries in the Unitel States were operating. Norway, Japan, Canada, and particularly Great Britain have made great progress in many chemical lines and, now that the war demand has ceased, are seeking new markets for their increased productive capacity. The same forces, therefore, which have affected our chemical industries constructively have raised up competing firms in other countries and an era of severe competition is unquestionably ahead. This situation requires, in the first place, a reconsideration of measures of commercial policy, and, in the second, a careful investigation of the facts.

MEASURES OF COMMERCIAL POLICY.

Let me turn your attention, then, to some aspects of commercial policy as they relate to our chemical industries. So fundamental were the changes wrought by the war that a measure entirely adequate to prewar conditions can not be assumed to meet our present needs. In the field of chemistry the war solved some problems, modified others, and created still others. It is peculiarly our task to face the new situation squarely and to consider the proper answers to the pressing questions before us. I am sure that you realize better than anyone else that the future of the chemical industries of the United States depends primarily upon the research work of chemists, the designs of engineers, and the organizing skill of business men. Industries which do not show vitality and growth in these respects should not be maintained by legislation. With this qualification, however, national policy warrants the enactment of tariff and unfair competition laws which will enable essential and desirable industries to become an effective, permanent part of our industrial life. The laissez faire attitude has no place in the reconstruction period.

THE TARIFF ON CHEMICAL PRODUCTS.

Among the most—perhaps the most—urgent tariff problems which Congress will be called upon to consider fall within the chemical schedule. The reason for this is obvious. The war's effect was, as I have suggested, more revolutionary among the chemical industries than elsewhere. I wish it were possible for me to discuss a number of chemical products worthy of consideration, but this can not be done within the limits of this address. Not all the items in the chemical schedule have an equal claim to legislative assistance. A few have none. Each should be considered on its own merits, keeping in mind the advantages of production, the availability of foreign supply, the needs of the American consumer, and the diversification and development of the structure of our industrial life. I shall speak specifically of the industry producing coal-tar products, for I regard it as a clear case deserving of legislative help.

Before hostilities ceased, Great Britain had declared the industry producing synthetic dyes essential to her national well-being. For its protection she has made a radical departure from her traditional policy of laissez faire in trade. She has provided State aid for the dye industry in the form of loans and grants for buildings and research. The importation of all dyes is prohibited except under license granted by a licensing committee. No dye is to be imported which the domestic industry is able to supply or for which an adequate substitute is made in the country. I believe that such a plan has been suggested as desirable for this country. For my part I can not regard it with favor. In Great Britain the plan is in the early stages of experimentation. There the firms are comparatively few and the Government is closely associated with them in the enterprise. In the United States our industry is too diversified and varied, the problems of administration too vast, the political considerations too uncertain, to warrant meeting the dye problem with prohibition, importation licenses, and direct Federal supervision.

The alternative is a tariff which will equalize, with a fair margin, the conditions of competition between this country and abroad. The rise of the dye industry has given a new significance to the "infant-industry" argument for the tariff. In many phases of research and engineering, this industry in the United States is in the experimental stage. The selling of the German patents to the Chemical Foundation (Inc.) by the Alien Property Custodian is of great assistance, but we are not as yet in a position to compete on an equality with the old well-established concerns abroad. It is first necessary to determine by tireless and expensive experiment the best conditions for the manufacture of each product and to train a staff to put into effect the results of such experimentation. Although American chemists deserve congratulations on their success in making so many varieties of dyes, nevertheless many important and much-needed dyes are not yet being made in the United States. An encouraging sign is that the American dye industry is not slavishly following the methods of Europe. Already American chemical engineers are installing larger units than were ever used abroad. Mechanical stirrers are replacing hand stirrers, and pipe lines are replacing buckets. In the end American mechanical genius will surely bring supremacy in the design and operation of equipment. An insight into the structure of the molecule, such as comes to a chemist only after long training, is necessary to make new dyes which will surpass the products of nature in quality. The rapid progress of this new dye industry is sufficient proof that America possesses chemists of a caliber to win success in this more difficult field. The American industry, however, can not be expected to do in four years what Germany has done in 40 years. During its development even the advocate of free trade would admit that the new industry is entitled to legislative consideration. Assistance to the dye industry may also be justified, from a national standpoint, on the ground that the industry is essential to both our military and industrial organization. It is well known that the preliminary processes for making certain dyes and high explosives are identical, and that the machinery and technical staff of a dye plant may with comparative ease be turned to the production of explosives. The war has taught us also that it is not a wise policy to have our great textile and other dye-using industries rely wholly on foreign sources for their dyes. Finally, I regard the dye industry as necessary to the normal development of our industrial life. Diversification of industry develops the productive power of our Nation. It awakens the spirit of invention and enterprise. It calls into play latent talents. The progress of the dye industry has demonstrated how these conditions come about, and I believe that we should recognize and maintain the industry as a desirable and permanent part of our industrial structure.

UNFAIR METHODS OF COMPETITION.

A tariff designed to maintain American industries—not only the dye industry but others equally entitled to consideration—should be supplemented with laws carefully devised to prevent unfair attacks on them, against which a tariff, unless it is prohibitive, affords no safeguard. A reasonable tariff and adequate legislation against dumping and other unfair practices go together. Unfair competition—commercial bribery, deceptive labeling, full-line forcing, and other practices—can be prevented by our courts, and particularly by the Federal Trade Commission, in all cases where the offending parties can be reached by legal process. It is not these cases which are grounds for concern. It is those directed by individuals in foreign countries beyond the jurisdiction of our domestic tribunals. Dumping, that is, selling in this country at a price less than that which prevails in the country from which the goods are exported, and similar practices, can often be dealt with only by means of additional tariff duties or prohibition. For years our law has provided for countervailing duties to be levied on bounty-fed products which are imported into the United States. These afford protection against one form of dumping. In the act of September 8, 1916, a provision for a double duty to be assessed against goods imported under a full-line-forcing agreement was enacted. At the same time an attempt was made to deal with the dumping evil. It was declared criminal to dump goods systematically into the United States with the intent of destroying, injuring, or preventing the establishment of an American industry. But some additional measures are needed.

Canada was a pioneer in the enactment of antidumping legislation. Her act provides that in the case of articles exported to Canada of a kind made or produced in Canada, if the export or actual selling price to an importer in Canada be less than the fair market value of the same article when sold for consumption in the country whence exported, there shall, in addition to the regular duties, be levied, collected, and paid a special duty. Effective administrative machinery has been devised for enforcing this law. It is comparatively simple and in Canada has proved effective. It is, however, inflexible and tends to increase the burden on the Canadian consumer beyond the point necessary to protect the Canadian producer.

Another method for handling dumping is suggested by the inadequate American legislation of 1916. In order to be effective this law should be modified both in substance and procedure. At the present time it prevents only those forms of dumping wherein the intent of the foreigner is to destroy or injure or prevent the establishment of an American industry. It should cover, however, not only such intentional unfair acts of foreign competitors, but also all selling in the United States at prices below those that prevail generally abroad. When an American producer is injured it makes no difference to him what the intent of the foreign rival is. The result only is significant. In procedure, also, this law of 1916 should be more flexible. At the present time the law makes criminal the type of dumping which it prohibits and places its administration upon the Department of Justice. There are objectionable cases of dumping, however, which can not be proved under the strict procedure of criminal law. Nor is it always possible to bring the offending party before our courts, as he may be in another country. The criminal provisions of the law should be supplemented by a law which would authorize the President to levy by proclamation additional duties on goods which are being systematically dumped into the United States, or to prohibit their importation in case he has reason to believe that the result will be to injure, destroy, or prevent the establishment of an American industry. The law might also be made to cover other unfair practices, such as full-line forcing and deceptive labeling, which are only partially provided against now. The United States Tariff Commission, already authorized to investigate dumping, should be designated to hear and consider complaints and to report its findings to the President for his consideration and action. A law containing these provisions would be more flexible than the Canadian method. It could be adapted in its administration to meet effectively every objectionable case. This power to prevent unfair practice by proclamation at the discretion of the President, together with the power of the Federal Trade Commission to prevent all unfair methods of competition done by persons who can be reached by its legal processes, should provide sufficient security for American industry and prevent effectively all unfair attacks upon it.

INVESTIGATIONS OF THE TARIFF COMMISSION.

The new conditions in the chemical industries which confront us require not only a consideration of policy, but, as I have said, an investigation of the facts. The Tariff Commission has undertaken this task. We are collecting and analyzing data on the chemical industries in so far as such information bears on tariff and kindred subjects. We need the cooperation of you and of every manufacturer and chemist. Conditions in the country—both political and economic—led the Tariff Commission, soon after it was established, to give an important place to the investigation of coal-tar products. Our reports, already published, have dealt with two aspects of the problem arising out of the dyestuffs tariff act of 1916. We were directed by the President to take the census of intermediates and dyes, which will assist him in determining whether the special rates provided in the present dyestuffs tariff are to continue in effect after the expiration of the five-year period—September 8, 1921. Our investigations were then directed toward improving the classification and making more effective the dyestuffs tariff act of 1916. Our report on this subject is now before Congress. It discloses many ways in which the obvious intent of Congress in passing the act of 1916 can be evaded. It suggests 45 amendments to the law which we believe will improve the classification, prevent evasions, and assist in curbing unfair methods of competition. When Congress takes up the revision of the tariff on intermediates and dyes, this report will provide the structure of the law framed with scientific and technical accuracy.

The chemical investigations of the Tariff Commission, however, have not been confined to coal-tar products. The wider problem of the reclassification and revision of the whole chemical schedule of the tariff act in order to meet the conditions of the reconstruction period has been constantly before us. We have in our files, available for the use of Congress, valuable information on many branches of the chemical industries. We have prepared for early publication reviews of different phases of the chemical tariff. One of these reports, for example, dealing with a group of acids covered by paragraph 1 of the tariff act is practically ready for the printer. It contains discussions of boric, formic, oxalic, citric, lactic, tartaric, tannic, gallic, and pyrogallic acids.

In the case of each commodity or group of closely allied commodities we have prepared an industrial survey. These constitute the chemical section of our tariff-information catalogue. In each of the encyclopedic units we have attempted to assemble and to edit carefully the available information which is pertinent in tariff making. Statistics on imports, exports, production, and prices are, of course, being arranged in a readily usable form. The nature and sources of raw materials, a brief nontechnical discussion of the processes of manufacture, and the uses of the commodity are stated. In addition, there is a review of the competitive conditions in international trade, a discussion of the tariff history, and a compilation of the Treasury and court decisions relating to each article. A large number of these surveys are completed or in process of preparation, but much remains to be done. Completed surveys include most of the heavy chemicals, chlorine products, fertilizer materials, wood-distillation products, sulphur, barium salts, thorium nitrate, and many drugs.

PROJECTED INVESTIGATIONS.

For many articles these industrial surveys will provide adequate information for the tariff maker. Policy and sometimes the amount of tariff, if any is to be levied, can be determined from the careful analysis of the chief facts of production, trade, and consumption. In the case of other articles, however, these surveys are not sufficient. A more detailed investigation is necessary, particularly on contentious articles. The Tariff Commission is, therefore, taking steps to investigate domestic costs and domestic and foreign prices of certain chemical products. We realize that the problem of coal-tar products—to take a specific case—is not completely solved by showing, as we have done, how the present law may be made more effective. Congress may think that conditions require a revision of the tariff rates. Costs and prices have played a large part in American tariff controversies. I consider the comparison of domestic and foreign costs or of domestic costs with foreign prices of primary value in tariff making, for they enable the rates to be made to equalize effectively conditions of competition between the United States and abroad. The investigation of domestic costs alone, even, has its value. It did not seem wise to the Tariff Commission to undertake during the war extensive cost investigations. Conditions were abnormal and the results would have been of doubtful significance. We are now, however, beginning to make plans for analyzing the basic facts of certain industries by studying costs and prices. Unfortunately, it will not be possible, except in rare instances, to ascertain foreign costs. Although desirable, foreign costs are not indispensable. If we have domestic costs properly subdivided into raw materials, labor, and overhead expenses, including depreciation, they and known prices of raw material, wages, and other expenses in foreign countries may be used as a basis for estimating foreign costs. Then, too, the value in tariff making of a comparison of domestic costs with foreign prices must not be overlooked. It is the foreign price, not the foreign cost, with which the domestic manufacturer has to compete. But we must know the domestic cost in order to know what tariff is necessary to enable the domestic industry to compete on an equality and stay in business. A study of domestic costs will also be valuable in determining the proper relationship of tariff duties on allied products. For example, a cost study will assist in determining the relation between the duties on intermediates and dyes, and it may disclose the necessity of dividing these products into subgroups carrying different rates of duties.

The appropriation of the Tariff Commission is at present on a war-time basis. We hope and expect that after July 1 funds will be available which will enable us to begin cost and price investigations on a fairly comprehensive scale. Much preliminary work, however, may be done in the meantime. It is here we need your counsel and cooperation. You will, of course, appreciate that it is not sufficient to secure merely total costs. It is essential to subdivide material, labor, and overhead costs. Considerable detail even in the cost of materials is essential in many cases where the raw material is an imported article, in order to determine the proper relationship between the duty on the raw material and the finished product. Citric acid is a case in point. Citrate of lime from which the acid is made comes almost entirely from abroad. The tariff duties on these two related products can be determined satisfactorily only when we know the yields of citric acid from a unit of citrate of lime and also the portion of the total cost charged to raw materials. In many cases, such as the manufacture of caustic soda and chlorine, joint products are secured from the same raw materials and operations. The ratio to be used in subdividing the joint costs to the different products is largely arbitrary. We have found that different companies use different ratios. If one of the joint products is sharply competitive in the international markets and the other is not, the ratio used in determining the cost of each becomes of great significance in tariff making.

Still another perplexing problem is the best way to bring the results of our investigations to the attention of Congress without disclosing publicly the cost data of individual manufacturers. We hope to work out a plan of stating the unit costs in the form of averages or ranges without disclosing the figures of individual companies. A general statement may also be made showing the fraction of the total cost chargeable to labor, materials, and overhead. The selection of the products to be investigated constitutes another problem. We are agreed that a representative list of intermediates and dyes should be studied, but which particular intermediates and dyes are to be selected is still an open question. Other products for detailed investigation will probably be chosen from this list: Barium salts, thorium nitrate and incandescent mantles, citric acid, caustic soda, and chlorine and chlorine products.

The Tariff Commission is fully conscious of the difficulties which lie in the path of the proposed investigations of costs and prices. I have suggested only a few of the industrial and accounting questions involved. We need—we invite—the cooperation and active assistance of the chemists and manufacturers, whose closeness to the problems makes their advice invaluable.

A PROBLEM OF THE PRESENT.

Let me, in conclusion, emphasize the pressing importance of the situation in which the war has left the American chemical industries. That it be met promptly and adequately is necessary not only because men have invested, chemists have investigated, and labor forces have been assembled and trained, but also because many of these industries are essential, vital parts of our industrial life. I have endeavored to make clear the measures of commercial policy which should be adopted and the lines of investigation which should be pursued. The determination of the former, I need hardly state, rests with Congress; the latter is the peculiar task of the Tariff Commission. You may be assured that so far as we can we shall do our part in this important work of reconstruction.

Right to Transmit Property Both a Natural and a Constitutional Right.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY J. STEELE,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, September 24, 1919.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, during the recent hearings on proposed railroad legislation before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Mr. Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, in advocating the Plumb bill and describing what he conceived to be an "ideal democracy," said that he did not see any reason "why wealth should pass from father to son." The New York Times editorially discussed this statement as follows:

This theory or doctrine, that wealth accumulated during a man's lifetime should not pass to his children, but should revert to the State or the community, does violence to one of the most powerful of all the impulses of the human heart. The solicitude of parents for the safety, welfare, and happiness of their children is universal, natural, and instinctive. Every father, if he be a natural, normal man, is moved by the desire to make provision for his children. The doctrine enunciated by Mr. Morrison, therefore, flies in the face of nature. What can be its origin? How did it arise? Why is it believed in? Search the records of human thought, of economics, of sociology, and of socialism from the invention of writing until the present day and you are guided inevitably to one source. It is the sentiment proclaimed by Proudhon when he declared that "property is theft."

While the statement quoted may have been a mere chance remark by Mr. Morrison, and which may not have reflected the views of the organization he represented, for it was irrelevant to the subject matter under discussion, it nevertheless displayed a socialistic state of mind. Concretely stated, he advocated the abolition of all right to transmit property after death. This right has existed in every civilized country from the earliest times. It was recognized under the Hebrew, Greek, and Roman laws. We can read in Genesis of Israel's bequest to Joseph. Even intelligent animals display some notions of ownership of property. Herbert Spencer well says:

When we see the claim to exclusive possession understood by a dog, so that he fights in defense of his master's clothes if left in charge of them, it becomes impossible to suppose that even in their lowest state men were devoid of those ideas and emotions which initiate private ownership.

The desire for property grows along with the possibility of gratifying it, and though extremely small among the lowest men, increases as social development goes on. Discussion of the abolition of private property is as old as the Romans, and were it not for its recent revival might well be regarded as academic at the present time. Volumes, however, have recently been published, insisting that all just title to property must come through the labor of the identical person enjoying it, not through the labor of his ancestors. The entire wealth of the country at the outset of the present war was estimated at $250,000,000,000, and it is claimed that one thirty-third of this wealth annually changes hands through death of the owner. It means, therefore, that once every generation the Government would confiscate all the private wealth of the country, and two most interesting questions are raised with reference to the transmission of property: First, is it a natural right? Second, is it a constitutional right?

The law of nature is defined as that law which the Sovereign of the universe has prescribed for all men, not by any formal promulgation, but by the internal dictate of reason alone. This law preceded all organized society or government. The sense of property has always been considered to be a natural appetite and in its nature a great blessing. To suppose a state of man prior to the existence of any notions of separate property, when all things were common and when men throughout the world lived without law or government in innocence and simplicity, is a mere dream of the imagination. The Book of Genesis, the most ancient and venerable of histories, does not show any such state of the human race. The first man born was a tiller of the earth, and the second a keeper of sheep. The earliest accounts of Noah and his descendants after the flood prove that they were husbandmen and planted vineyards, built cities, established kingdoms, and abounded in flocks and herds, gold, and silver. The Ten Commandments are but a concrete expression of the obligations and rights existing between man and his fellow men, including the right of property.

The institution of marriage and the institution of private property and of government and law have been considered by the wisest statesmen and philosophers of every age as the foundation of all civilization among mankind. Chancellor Kent has truly said:

The sense of property is inherent in the human breast, and the gradual enlargement and cultivation of that sense, from its feeble force in the savage state to its full vigor and maturity among polished nations, forms a very instructive portion of the history of civil society. Man was fitted and intended by the author of his being for society and government and for the acquisition and enjoyment of property. It is, to speak concretely, the law of his nature, and by obedience to this law he brings all his faculties into exercise and is enabled to display the various and exalted powers of the human mind. * * * The exclusive right of using and transferring property follows as a natural consequence from the perception and admission of the right itself.

The French Revolution was probably the most dramatic of all revolutions, an explosion which shook the world and gave a new direction to the political development of nations. In the French National Assembly convened at the outset of that revolution a formal declaration of the rights of man was adopted. The second and seventeenth articles of that declaration placed the right of property among the natural rights of man. Many of our State constitutions contain similar provisions. Property is defined generally as "the exclusive right to possess, enjoy, and dispose of a thing." Right of property may, therefore, be subdivided as follows: First, exclusion; second, use; third, disposition. No definition of property can be found which does not include the power of disposition. It is plain that the right of disposition is just as essential a right of property as the right to acquire and enjoy it. Upon whatever principles the right of property is founded the power of giving and transferring follows as a natural consequence.

It has already been stated that the right to dispose of property included the right to transmit it by will or the intestate laws. While this is true, it has also been recognized as within the power of the State to regulate the exercise of these rights, prescribe forms for their exercise, and protect them by positive law. It seems that from this universal power of regulation has grown the theory of the further power to destroy. History fails to record any attempt on the part of any civilized government to deny these rights. The free spirit of the English nation asserted itself in the establishment of Magna Charta in 1215 and its generous provisions for all classes of freemen. Magna Charta can hardly be said to have introduced any new ideas. High historical authority asserts that on the whole "the charter contains little that is absolutely new; it is restorative." In the main it declared what were the laws and customs of a past age and differs only in degree and not in kind from other charters granted by the Norman and early Plantagenet kings. It was intended to assert the native and original liberties of the nation and to protect them against future encroachment. One of the provisions of Magna Charta was "that the goods of every freeman should be disposed of according to his will; or, if he died intestate, that his heirs should succeed to them"; and another was that no person should be "deprived of his life, liberty, or property but by the judgment of his peers or by the law of the land." As stated, these rights were already possessed by all Englishmen as a heritage of the common law. They were brought to this country by our forefathers and were never intended to be surrendered by any grant of legislative power.

Probably the earliest authority to be found denying the right to transmit property as a natural right is in Blackstone's Commentaries, where the learned author says:

The right of inheritance or descent to the children and relations of deceased, seems to have been allowed much earlier than the right of devising by testament. We are apt to conceive at first view that it has nature on its side; yet we often mistake for nature what we find established by long and inveterate custom. It is certainly a wise and effectual, but clearly a political establishment; since the permanent right of property vested in the ancestor himself was no natural but merely a civil right.

This view has been followed by way of obiter dicta by many of our State courts and by the Supreme Court of the United States. For instance, in Magoun v. Illinois (170 U. S., 283), Jusitce McKenna said:

The right to take property by devise or descent is the creature of the law and not a natural right—a privilege, and therefore the authority which confers it may impose conditions upon it.

But this case simply involved the question of the right of a State to levy an inheritance tax and can not be regarded as authority for any other principle. Again, in United States v. Perkins (163 U. S., 625), Justice Brown said:

Though the general consent of the most enlightened nations has, from the earliest historical period, recognized a natural right in children to inherit the property of their parents, we know of no legal principle to prevent the legislature from taking away or limiting the right of testamentary disposition or imposing such conditions upon its exercise as it may deem conducive to the public good.

This case also simply involved the validity of an inheritance tax, and, contrary to the Magoun case, recognized the natural right of children to inherit the property of their parents. In Pullen v. Wake County (66 N. C., 361), the court went the full limit in denying all natural rights of property. It said:

Property itself, as well as the succession to it, is the creature of positive law. The legislative power declares what objects in nature may be held as property; it provides by what forms and on what conditions it may be transmitted from one person to another; it confines the right of inheriting to certain persons whom it defines heirs; and on failure of such it takes the property to the State as an escheat. The right to give or take property is not one of those natural and inalienable rights which are supposed to precede all government and which no government can rightfully impair.

Such dicta frequently expressed without previous argument at bar or much reflection have only that authority which may be accorded to the opinion, more or less deliberate, of the individual judge who wrote it. Error though frequently repeated can not become truth. It is not believed that any case can be found where the legislature has attempted to take away the right to transmit property and where such legislation has been sustained by the courts. On the contrary, there is ample authority to show that this view was always challenged.

In Chief Justice Sharswood's edition of Blackstone's Commentaries, containing a memoir of the learned author of the commentaries, Justice Sharswood says:

He has fallen into some errors and inaccuracies. * * * In fact, these errors and inaccuracies have been for the most part pointed out and corrected in the modern editions.

To the above-quoted citation that the right to inherit is merely a civil right, Prof. Christian, one of the early editors, attached the following annotation:

I can not agree with the learned commentator that the permanent right of property vested in the ancestor himself (that is, for his life) is not a natural but merely a civil right.

I have endeavored to show that the notion of property is universal, and is suggested to the mind of man by reason and nature, prior to all positive institutions and civilized refinements. If the laws of the land were suspended, we should be under the same moral and natural obligation to refrain from invading each other's property as from attacking and assaulting each other's persons. I am obliged, also, to differ from the learned judge, and all writers upon general law, who maintain that children have no better claim by nature to succeed to the property of their deceased parents than strangers, and that the preference given to them originates solely in political establishments. I know no other criterion by which we can determine any rule or obligation to be founded in nature than its universality, and by inquiring whether it is not, and has not been, in all countries and ages, agreeable to the feelings, affections, and reason of mankind. The affection of parents toward their children is the most powerful and universal principle which nature has planted in the human breast; and it can not be conceived, even in the most savage state, that anyone is so destitute of that affection and of reason, who would not revolt at the position that a stranger has as good a right as his children to the property of the deceased parent.

In the earliest history of mankind we have express authority that this is agreeable to the will of God himself—"And behold, the word of the Lord came unto Abraham, saying, This shall not be thine heir; but he that shall come out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir." (Gen. 15th chap.)

Our own great American commentator, Chancellor Kent, in Second Kent, 325, took the same view as Prof. Christian, saying:

Sir William Blackstone considers the descent, devise, and transfer of property, political institutions, and creatures of the municipal law, and not natural rights; and that the law of nature suggests that, on the death of the possessor, the estate should become common, and be open to the next occupant. He admits, however, that for the sake of peace and order, the universal law of almost every nation gives to the possessor the power to continue his property by will; and if it be not disposed of in that way, that the municipal law steps in and declares who shall be the heir of the deceased. As a mere speculative question, it may be doubted whether this is a perfectly correct view of the law of nature on this subject. The right to transmit property by descent to one's own offspring is dictated by the voice of nature. The universality of the sense of a rule or obligation is pretty good evidence that it has its foundation in natural law. It is in accordance with the sympathies and reason of all mankind, that the children of the owner of property which he acquired and improved by his skill and industry, and by their association and labor, should have a better title to it at his death than the passing stranger. It is a continuation of the former occupancy in the members of the same family. This better title of the children has been recognized in every age and nation, and it is founded in the natural affections, which are the growth of the domestic ties, and the order of Providence.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin, in an elaborate examination of the question in Nunnemacher v. State (129 Wis., 190), held that the right to take property by will or by intestate laws is a natural right, which can not wholly be taken away or substantially impaired by the legislature, and set forth its conclusion as follows:

So clear does it seem to us from the historical point of view that the right to take property by inheritance or will has existed in some form among civilized nations from the time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, and so conclusive seems the argument that these rights are a part of the inherent rights which governments, under our conception, are established to conserve, that we feel entirely justified in rejecting the dictum so frequently asserted by such a vast array of courts that these rights are purely statutory and may be wholly taken away by the legislature. It is true that these rights are subject to reasonable regulation by the legislature, lines of descent may be prescribed, and there may be much room for legislative action in determining how much property shall be exempted entirely from the power to will so that dependents may not be entirely cut off. These are all matters within the field of regulation. The fact that these powers exist and have been universally exercised affords no ground for claiming that the legislature may abolish both inheritances and wills, turn every fee-simple title into a mere estate for life, and thus, in effect, confiscate the property of the people once every generation.

The right to transmit property by will or the intestate laws being a natural and common-law right, is it also a constitutional right? Many of us make the mistake of supposing that because the rights of life, liberty, and property are protected by constitutions and laws they must be considered as owing their origin to them. They simply measure, however, the powers of government, but they do not measure the rights of the governed. Under our system the Government is the creature of the people, the product of a social compact. The people, in full possession of liberty and property, come together and create a government to protect themselves, their liberty, and their property. The government which they create becomes their agent, the officers their servant. A constitution, therefore, is not the beginning of a community nor the origin of private rights; it grants no rights to the people, but is the creature of their power, the instrument of their convenience. Designed for their protection in the enjoyment of the rights and powers which they possessed before the constitution was made, it is but the framework of the political government and necessarily based upon the preexisting condition of laws, rights, habits, and modes of thought. From the historical standpoint the idea that all rights of property and rights to transmit the same by inheritance or will have their origin in the positive enactments of law by an established government can not stand the test. From the universal exercise of the right of regulation the idea of governmental right to create and destroy have arisen, and from the failure to keep in mind the radical difference between our republican theory of the origin of government and the European medieval theory. Our theory is that the people, in full possession of inalienable rights, form the government to protect their rights. The medieval idea was that the government, divinely created, was sent down from above, and from it rights and privileges were allowed to flow in gracious streams to the people, who would otherwise not possess them.

The existence of inherent rights in the people was recognized in our Declaration of Independence, which marks one of the greatest changes wrought in human affairs. It was not the mere expression of a sentiment; it was the declaration of a fundamental truth designed to stand for the future as the central object in civil government, and to be a test of the legitimacy of legislative action. "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." Upon that declaration all the constitutions of the land, State and National, have been builded. It marked the beginning of a new era, when those things regarded as essential to life, liberty, and happiness should no longer be subjects of enjoyment by mere sovereign grace, but should have the dignity of absolute rights, regulated by laws reasonably necessary to their preservation and enjoyment; not subject to regulation beyond that boundary and into the realm of destruction. It is true that the inherent rights here referred to are not defined, but are included under the very general terms of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." It is relatively easy to define "life and liberty," but it is apparent that the term "pursuit of happiness" is a very comprehensive expression which covers a broad field. Unquestionably this expression covers the idea of the acquisition of private property, a desire planted in the breast of every person, which will render life more enjoyable, and which he may leave to his children or dependents at his decease. To deny that there is such universal desire or to deny that the fulfillment of this desire contributes in a large measure to the attainment of human happiness is to deny a fact as patent as the sun at noonday.

The contention is made, moreover, that the death of the owner extinguishes his title and ownership, and if no provision of positive law exists for the continuance of the title of the decedent, either by will or the intestate laws, the State becomes the ultimate heir or successor to the property, under the doctrine of escheats. But the title by escheat only applies where there is an obstruction of the course of descent. It signifies merely a falling of a decendent's estate into the general property of the State upon the death of an intestate without lawful heirs. The State takes the property not by succession, but because its ownership has become vacant. It only applies to property without an owner. But property was never regarded as without an owner after the owner's death leaving children. No constitutional provision can be found authorizing the State to make any disposition of the property of a decendent who leaves next of kin capable of inheriting.

In America—

Says Chancellor Kent—

the right to acquire, to hold, to enjoy, to alien, to devise, and to transmit property by inheritance to our descendants, in regular order and succession, is enjoyed to the fullness and perfection of absolute right.

Immediately after the adoption of the Federal Constitution, Mr. Jefferson and his followers, distrustful of the Federal Government, secured the adoption of the fifth amendment, prohibiting the enactment of any law by which any person should be deprived "of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." Immediately after the Civil War, the Republican Party, distrustful of the States, secured the adoption of the fourteenth amendment, providing:

Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

By virtue of these amendments, the Federal Constitution prohibits both the Federal and State Governments from enacting legislation which would deprive any person of his property without due process of law. Is the right to take property by will or by inheritance a right of property secured by these amendments? In Dibrell v. Lanier (12 L. R. A., 70) it was held that—

> The right to transmit property by inheritance to one's descendants or next of kin is "property" within the meaning of the constitutional provision that a person shall not be deprived of property except by the judgment of his peers or by the law of the land.

In this case it appeared that the legislature enacted a statute providing that the personal estate of an intestate lunatic, if derived from an intestate husband or wife, should descend to the latter's next of kin, although they were strangers in blood to the intestate from whom it immediately descended. It was held to be unconstitutional, for the reason that it deprived the decedent of the right to transmit her property to her own next of kin; that such a right is property; that the legislature undertook in effect to take the decedent's property away from her and give it to those who were strangers to her in blood, and, as the legislature could not take private property for private use, the act was void.

In a recent publication advocating the abolition of inheritances, taxation equivalent to abolition was suggested as the remedy, on the assumption that the power to tax is the power to destroy. To this suggestion, the observations of Chief Justice Field in Minot v. Winthrop (162 Mass., 113) may be pertinent:

> We assume that, under the Constitution, this (that is, the taking of all property by the State on the death of the owner) can not be done either direcly or indirectly; that the legislature can not so far restrict the right to transmit property by will or by descent as to amount to an appropriation of property generally; that it can not impose a tax which shall be equivalent, or almost equivalent, to the value of the property, and can not so limit the persons who can take as heirs, devisees, distributees, or legatees that the great mass of all the property of the inhabitants must become vested in the Commonwealth by escheat. The State can take property by taxation only for the public service, and we assume that its right to take property, if any exists, by regulating the distribution of it on the death of the owner, is limited in the same manner, and that this right must be exercised in a reasonable way.

During the period of our active warfare the man power and industries of the country were keyed up to a high state of war efficiency. We are now engaged in restoring the country to a peace basis. This transition period, accompanied by soaring prices of the necessaries of life, has occasioned much unrest among the people. Most of our present ills can, no doubt, be better corrected by the people themselves than by legislation. Many panaceas, however, are proposed in the name of masses of the people, chiefly looking toward State socialism and the abolition of private property. It is not always easy in testing public opinion to distinguish between what is real, growing, and permanent and what is transient, artificial, and declining. It is a trite maxim that "the great art in politics consists not in hearing those who speak but in hearing those who are silent." In this instance those who are silent are undoubtedly opposed to revolutionary changes in our Government and the making of socialistic experiments. Those who consider themselves originators of socialistic theories would do well to remember that "there is nothing new under the sun." Abbé Huc, a celebrated French missionary, who lived for years in China and learned the Chinese language, published a number of works on Chinese history. He tells us of an experiment made in the twelfth century for the betterment of the poor, the conception of which would have been a credit to a modern socialist thinker. The scheme was originated by a Chinese scholar named Wangn-gan-che, who enjoyed the favor of Emperor Chen-tsung. Under its working the State was to control all the resources of the Empire and become the sole, universal employer. Courts or boards were to be established all over China empowered to fix the price of wages, provisions, and merchandise daily. For a certain number of years the rich alone were to pay taxes. The sums thus received were to be kept in reserve in the State treasury to be distributed among the aged, the poor, and those who could not find employment. The State was to be the sole owner of all lands. In every district there was to be a board of agriculture, whose duty it should be to apportion this land among farmers annually, giving them the seed necessary for planting, but only on condition that an equivalent value be returned in seed or other produce. In order to have every part of the Empire productive according to its adaptability the board was to decide what seed should be planted in certain localities, providing the seed. In case of a failure in the crops in any region foodstuffs were to be brought from localities where there was a superabundance.

The advocates of this system believed that by following it comfort and well-being would be assured to all classes in all districts, as this radical reform would cause the crumbling away of large fortunes and the consequent leveling of the rich and the poor. Won over by these plausible theories, the Emperor gave their author full authority to put them into execution. It appears from the testimony of contemporary historians that the enterprise was not successful and the people were reduced to a more miserable condition than before.

The grain given them for seed was diverted from the purpose intended. Some of it was consumed and some of it sold or exchanged for other commodities. Farmers lost interest in their work and refused to toil for what was to be given to others. Then, too, the expenses of carrying on such a system of control were enormous, and it became a subject of dispute as to who should defray them, the State or the farmers.

On the death of Chen-tsung his favorite minister was removed from power and his successor labored to destroy every trace of his government. Eleven years later, on the death of the new minister, the system of Wangn-gan-che was fully tested again, with such disastrous results that his memory was devoted to execration, and the Socialists were driven out of the Empire.

A sentiment of altruism in more or less vague form has long existed, to regulate the activities of our people so as to effect a more general distribution of the products of labor and capital. No satisfactory substitute, however, has yet been found for the wisdom of the ages in basing such distribution upon individual effort. Chancellor Kent almost a century ago referred to such theorists in his day and answered them as follows:

> There have been modern theorists who have considered separate and exclusive property and inequalities of property as the cause of injustice and the unhappy result of government and artificial institutions. But human society would be in a most unnatural and miserable condition if it were possible to be instituted and reorganized upon the basis of such speculations. The sense of property is graciously bestowed on mankind for the purpose of rousing them from sloth and stimulating them to action, and so long as the right of acquisition is exercised in conformity to the social relations and moral obligations which spring from them it ought to be sacredly protected. The natural and active sense of property pervades the foundations of social improvement. It leads to the cultivation of the earth, the institution of government, the establishment of justice, the acquisition of the comforts of life, the growth of the useful arts, the spirit of commerce, the production of taste, the erections of charity, and the display of the benevolent affections.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

[1] Lloyd's Register Book does not include vessels trading on the Caspian Sea nor wooden vessels trading on the Great Lakes of North America.
[2] The figures include all vessels which at the date of the armistice had not been captured or requisitioned by other countries.
[3] In the absence of satisfactory information the records of numerous small sailing vessels (belonging chiefly to Greece, Turkey, and southern Russia) are omitted from the Register Book.
[4] Japanese sailing vessels are not recorded in Lloyd's Register Book.
[5] The figures exclude vessels registered at Finnish and Esthonian ports.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES R. EVANS,

OF NEVADA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, September 27, 1919.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, in 1865, and that was just after a real war, which tried men's souls and put our form of government to the acid test, the workingman was being paid 75 cents to $1 per day. Our condition now is one of ease and plenty as compared to that period. Chicago was paying 29 cents a pound for sugar, $1 a gallon for kerosene. In the city of Washington prices were much higher, meat being from $1 to $2 per pound, and sugar was beyond reach. The recent rise in prices was psychological fear more than dishonesty. Men scared each other into the belief that the supply would be insufficient to meet demands. A great many merchants really believed this a true statement of conditions and thought that the supply would soon be exhausted. We were never one year ahead in foodstuffs, so we are now in that respect as well off as usual, and with the entire world turned to full production we can restore more widely and more rapidly than we destroyed in war.

The world, and particularly the United States of America, is not bankrupt. Even Russia, prostrate, will arise and pay her debts. Germany and the territory which was Austria-Hungary is better off now than before the war. The lives lost do not equal her lives formerly devoted to war, besides their being relieved of sustaining conscription and a standing army; those millions of men are now producing useful things. Her industrial plants are like new, and millions of expert munition workers will turn to the intensive arts of peace. As to America, the war has proven the strength and virility of unity, and our form of government is established beyond all doubt. Our 4,000,000 soldiers and those civilians supporting them—in all, ten or fifteen millions of keenest brains and physically perfect—will turn from the destructive science of war to building great transcontinental highways, modern homes, beautiful architecture, and improved farm life.

The real charity toward unsettled Europe is the charity of knowledge and confidence that they are competent to furnish their own salvation. They are now, and always will be, self-sustaining. Europe must, and will, go to work; that activity will solve their problems. United States of America must have their usual political arguments, but while making them they all realize and agree that our need of homes, clothing, pianos, automobiles, in fact, luxuries and necessaries of all kinds, will require close, hard endeavor from all citizens. Our wonderful past progress is the result of industry, and we are still inclined to work.

Certainly, when you turn ten to fifteen millions of our keenest minds from the channels of production to the science of destruction, you find a temporary, acute, and serious disarrangement of usual expectations of supplies affecting all lines. Naturally production suffered from labor not efficient, and still there is plenty. United States was physically unprepared for war, but ten times more unprepared mentally.

The press, by information and education, prepared our minds to accept and prosecute war to the limit. Then we became prepared physically. Many men have devoted their lives to the press and must have your loyal estimation. The press will now render service to reduce fictitious values by publishing the facts of cost and selling prices. No business, unless upon the firm foundation of honesty in all dealings, can withstand the searchlight of published truth. Turn on the light plainly and prices will find the proper level. The glare of published facts, with penalties provided, will stop food cornerers and hoarders. No business can endure against public opinion, and justice demands truth. If the press can by instruction and direction earn the greatest achievement of record, that is war. Surely the victories of peace will be none less and theirs the greater glory.

Supplies entering storage must be registered, stamped, and dated. Food stored beyond a reasonable time must be sold at reduced rates. The longer the storage the lower the price. Newspapers, as usual, will print the whole truth as to costs. All citizens empowered to file information upon knowledge and belief that improper prices are collected.

Aerial Mail Service.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. C. WILLIAM RAMSEYER,

OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, September 27, 1919.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, on July 25, 1919, I introduced the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to furnish to this House a detailed report on the Aerial Mail Service to date, including the number, make, and cost of all aeroplanes, airships, and equipment used and in use by the Post Office Department; the number of air routes established; the cost of operating such routes; the number and character of accidents and casualties since the establishment of the Air Service; the number of pilots, mechanics, and other persons in the Air Service, and the rules and regulations governing their employment, service, and pay; and the safety appliances with which aeroplanes and airships are equipped to insure the safety of the mails and the lives of pilots.

A copy of this resolution was sent to the Postmaster General, requesting him to furnish information called for in said House resolution 200. The Second Assistant Postmaster General was also called upon for information in regard to a statement appearing in the newspapers. Both the Postmaster General and the Second Assistant Postmaster General answered the same by letters. These two letters contain much valuable information in regard to the Aerial Mail Service. As I believe the information in these letters will be of value and interest to Members of the House, I submit them for publication in the RECORD:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 8, 1919.

Hon. HALVOR STEENERSON,
Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In response to your request for information to the committee on the questions asked in the resolution introduced by Hon. C. W. RAMSEYER and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I beg to advise:

The air mail was established on May 15, 1918. The first route operated was between Washington and New York. During the first year of its operation it scored a successful performance of 92.73 per cent and carried 7,720,840 letters. The net cost of operating this route, including replacements and 6 per cent on investment, was $137,900.06. By the operation of this route approximately 14,000 letters, originating in New England and New York too late for midnight dispatch to Washington, are delivered in the Washington post office daily between 11.30 a. m. and noon, thus enabling the delivery of this entire amount of mail on the 12.20 and other early afternoon deliveries in Washington instead of on the morning delivery of the next day if the mail had been sent by train instead of by aeroplane. On the northbound trip the mail is taken from trains No. 82 and No. 92 and sent by aeroplane, arriving in New York City in time for its delivery on all carrier dispatches that afternoon instead of the following morning if they had continued to New York by train.

The second route was established on May 15, 1919, between Cleveland and Chicago. The cost of operating this route, including replacements and 6 per cent on investment, was $7,514 for the half month of May and $13,304 for the month of June. On this route approximately 13,000 letters are carried in each direction daily. Westbound, the mail is taken from train No. 19 at Cleveland and delivered in Chicago at 1 o'clock or earlier, thus catching the afternoon delivery instead of the delivery on the following morning, and catching westbound connections out of Chicago earlier than if it had continued by train. Eastbound, the plane carries mail for New York and connections, resulting in its arrival in New York between 9 and 10 o'clock in the morning instead of in the afternoon by train, thus greatly advancing the mail.

The third route was established July 1, 1919, between New York City and Cleveland, leaving New York at 5 a. m. It connects with the train bound for Chicago at Cleveland at 9.30 a. m. (central time), thereby resulting in the delivery of the mail in Chicago at 1 p. m. in ample time to catch all afternoon deliveries in Chicago. It also carries mail for Chicago connections, which are expedited considerably over any movement that could be had via all rail out of New York. Eastbound, the mail leaves Cleveland at 8.40 a. m. and arrives in New York at 1.30 p. m. in time for the afternoon carrier delivery. In addition to mail from Cleveland it takes mail from trains leaving Chicago during the night, and effects its delivery in New York City in the afternoon instead of the following morning. This route carries approximately 13,000 letters in each direction daily.

In the entire service there are used and in use 35 planes built for the War Department under war cost conditions, but salvaged by the Post Office Department after the war. The equipment and original cost to the War Department is as follows: Eleven Curtiss R–4 planes, costing $14,500 each; 24 De Haviland–4 planes, costing $10,000 each, together with the necessary engines and spare parts, which in the course of the year average about 20 per cent of the value of the planes; also 2 trucks and motor cycles at each of the principal fields salvaged from the War Department.

Since the operation of the mail service two aviators lost their lives flying the mail; two were seriously injured, but were discharged from the hospital as cured after about four weeks' treatment. One mechanic lost his life by being struck by an aeroplane propeller; one helper on the field sustained a fractured shoulder by being struck by a propeller; and another suffered a fractured leg in a motor-cycle accident. In addition to the foregoing, there were approximately 12 minor accidents sustained in forced landings, which incapacitated the flyers for various periods of from less than one day to four days.

During the entire operation of the air mail service two aeroplanes have been totally destroyed without yielding any salvage whatever. Five other planes damaged yielded between 60 and 75 per cent salvage. All other aeroplanes which suffered damage in forced landings or otherwise have been repaired and are back in service or are now in the process of repair.

There are in the Air Mail Service at this time 23 pilots, 28 mechanics, and 95 helpers, laborers, clerks, and employees of every other character. Chief mechanics receive a basic salary of $2,000 a year; other mechanics from $1,400 to $1,800 a year; and helpers and other employees on the field receive from $900 to $1,200 a year. The entrance salary of pilots is $2,000 a year (basic), with an automatic increase of $200 a year for each 30 hours of satisfactory flying, up to $2,800. After $2,800, the increases up to $3,600 are for meritorious service and special qualifications of the pilots. All appointments are made and referred to the Civil Service Commission under section 2, rule 8.

All planes are equipped with the most reliable instruments obtainable for flying in good and bad weather. They are especially equipped with asbestos fire walls and air-pressure fire extinguishers, as well as with the latest safety devices against back-fire by the engine. The fire walls shut out the pilot's cockpit, the mail, and the gas compartments from the engine completely. Noninflammable canvas bags for the mails are being manufactured for this service. Tests are being made by parachute manufacturers to meet the requirements of the Air Mail Service.

I am attaching hereto copy of the report on the first year's operation of the Air Mail Service and detailed monthly reports for May and June, 1919.

In conclusion I desire to state that the record of flying of the Air Mail Service, as far as casualties, dependability of service, and economy of administration, has not been equaled in any character of aeroplane flying, whether military, exhibition, or commercial. In a newspaper summary of the accomplishments in aviation sent to the Post Office Department by Dr. Robert Peganini from Switzerland full credit is given to the work of the American postal administration, his conclusion being:

"Without going into particulars, in general outline the present status of the air traffic may be regarded as being on a firm footing. At the head of all endeavors of this kind are the United States of North America. From the operations of the American Aerial Mail Service we are enabled to obtain the most minute information and details concerning all postal flights performed. The results are satisfactory in every respect."

The operations of the American Air Mail Service, with its few casualties, could not have obtained the favorable opinion it has won from the leading authorities in aviation if it had not been for the attention given by the department to the maintaining of its equipment in the highest efficiency and safeguarding of its pilots against death and serious injury.

Sincerely, yours,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, July 30, 1919.

Hon. C. W. RAMSEYER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: This is to acknowledge your letter of the 29th instant citing a paragraph appearing in the Washington Post July 25, 1919, as follows:

"The pilots claimed they had informed their superiors that certain planes, repaired many times, were unsafe to travel in. They further asserted they had asked for stabilizers which in a fog would show whether the men were flying on an even keel or upside down. These indicators, the men say, cost $75, but they were informed, they said, by Mr. Praeger that 'they should steer by compass, as the turn indicators are too expensive.'

I beg to state that it was fully answered in the statement to the press on the same day, but apparently not printed in the Washington Post. The paragraph refers to what is known as turn indicators, of which the only seven that are available to the public are the property of the Post Office Department. These indicators are not stabilizers, and they do not tell the pilot whether he is flying on an even keel or upside down. By a gyroscopic device they show when the pilot is turning either to the right or left of the course on which he has been flying. Of course, the pilots have never been informed by me that they should steer by compass, as the turn indicators are too expensive.

The fact is that this is a brand-new device, a sample of which was turned over to the Post Office Department and run in the mails to develop its defects. As the result of these defects the manufacturers are making certain vital improvements. The device is not yet in entirely satisfactory shape, but is better than anything known. Manufacturers do not carry them in stock, and, as I have said, the only seven that were on hand at the factories have been acquired by the Post Office Department for further service tests, and an order to make another dozen has been placed, which the manufacturers say will require two months to turn out.

This represents one of those cases where newspapers mislead the public by printing only one side of a case.

The department has called for reports from the fields to furnish the information called for in the resolution which you have introduced.

Sincerely, yours,

OTTO PRAEGER,
Second Assistant Postmaster General.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM J. BROWNING,
OF NEW JERSEY,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, September 26, 1919.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those Republicans who believe thoroughly in the policy of protection. I would place a duty on all imported goods that can be made in this country and such duty would be high enough to protect the manufacturer and the workingman. I would likewise protect the farmer in everything he produces.

I am not one of those commonly referred to as "standpatters." I do not desire to build a Chinese wall around the United States. Neither do I want a tariff so high that no goods manufactured abroad can enter this country.

As a general proposition I would be opposed to a licensing system, but in the instance of this dyestuffs bill it does not seem possible to fix a tariff high enough to protect the manufacturers while the industry is in its infancy. Therefore it seems that the licensing system in this case must be resorted to.

The users of dyestuffs are opposed to the licensing system, but if the manufacturer is not sufficiently protected the user will be obliged to purchase his dyestuffs from abroad, as they could not be made in the United States.

In the course of this debate much has been said regarding the Du Pont Co., a corporation chartered under the laws of the State of Delaware, with executive offices at Wilmington. This concern has built a plant in the district which I represent, at Deepwater Point, Salem County, N. J., which cost $20,000,000, and at the plant 4,000 men are employed.

At this point I wish to quote from a letter, under date of September 24, 1919, addressed to me by the Du Pont Co.:

The future of America's dyestuffs industry depends on the opportunity which shall be given it to cope during the formative period with the long-established German industry. American manufacturers have made marked progress during the four years they have been trying to establish this business. Color for color and dye for dye, the output is in every way equal to the prewar German product, but there is still much to be done; and without legislation, which will regulate the importation of such dyes as are not yet made in this country, we can not hope to complete the upbuilding of a self-contained dye industry here.

The regulating feature of the Longworth bill, we believe, will give the dye industry the needed protection until such time as it shall be fully established and able to compete, commercially, with the German trust. At the same time this regulating feature will protect the American consumers of dyes in the conduct of their business pending the production of full lines of dyes here.

The Du Pont Co. has invested $20,000,000 in its dye plant at Deepwater Point, N. J., and is now employing about 4,000 men in that industry. If given an opportunity it will have, in the near future, a dyestuffs plant which will go far toward making America forever independent of the German monopoly, whose completeness and power were shown as soon as the war shut off the importation of dyes.

The establishment of a dyestuffs industry here, as has been demonstrated by the war, is vital to the Nation from the standpoint of chemical preparedness for future wars. It will open up the development of the vastly important field of synthetic medicinals which also was in the hands of the German chemists before the war.

From the facts set forth in the communication I have quoted, it appears to me not only necessary that the manufacturers be protected by a tariff but that they also must have the benefit of a licensing system for at least a short time, and as the bill before us is limited to a period of two years I feel that in justice not only to the Du Pont Co. but to all other manufacturers of dyestuffs it is my duty to vote for the Longworth measure, and I trust it will pass including the licensing provision.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROSCOE C. McCULLOCH,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, September 30, 1919.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, having secured unanimous consent, I publish the following correspondence with the Secretary of War and the report referred to in the correspondence:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 29, 1919.

Hon. ROSCOE C. McCULLOCH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to your remarks on the floor of the House of Representatives, as reported on pages 4378 to 4389, inclusive, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, dated August 26, 1919.

I note that you referred to and had printed my letters of February 25 and 28, 1919. These letters contain the information which the War Department then had concerning conditions in the Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry, which information was the preliminary reports submitted by Gens. Pershing and Treat, and in my letter of February 28 I informed you that the full report would be forwarded as soon as the investigation had been completed.

On June 16, 1919, I wrote you another letter, a copy of which is inclosed herewith. No reference was made to this letter or its inclosures in your remarks on the floor on August 26, and I am therefore led to believe that it was never received by you. If such is the case and you will advise me, I will be pleased to furnish you a full copy of the report of the inspector and the other papers which were sent as inclosures to the letter in question.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

(One inclosure.)

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 16, 1919.

Hon. ROSCOE C. McCULLOCH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of June 10, 1919, requesting that you be furnished a copy of the report of the investigation of conditions in Company H, Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry, which was located at Cattaro, Dalmatia.

An investigation was made covering conditions not only in Company H but in all units of this regiment, and in order that you may be fully advised I am inclosing a full copy of the report of the inspector.

I am also sending you a copy of letters from the various commanders of the allied troops which served with the Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry in Italy. These letters show the esteem in which the officers and enlisted men of the regiment were held by the officers of the allied forces, and I think that after reading them you will agree with me that the Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry acquitted itself in a manner of which we may all be justly proud.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

SEPTEMBER 26, 1919.

Hon. NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: On my return to my office I find your letter dated August 29. I received your letter dated June 16; also the report to which you refer.

I examined the report very carefully when received and I made reference to it in my remarks on the floor of the House on August 26, 1919. I did not put the report into the RECORD for the reason that it was very voluminous and because of its almost entire lack of reference to the subject in controversy, namely, the charges contained in the letter of Homer E. Black in regard to Company H of the Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry, stationed at Cattaro, Dalmatia, Austria. The report details with great particularity the result of investigations made of other companies of the regiment, about which no complaints had been made so far as the records show, and only contains meager references to Company H.

In view, however, of your letter, I have decided to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the correspondence to which you refer, together with the full report, and for that purpose I have secured unanimous consent to-day.

Sincerely, yours, ROSCOE C. MCCULLOCH.

GENOVA, ITALY, April 7, 1919.

From: Col. J. A. Baer, Inspector General.
To: Inspector General American Expeditionary Forces.
Subject: Investigations of charges of improper conditions in Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry.

I.

This investigation was made February 23 to April 6, 1919, pursuant to paragraph 76, Special Order 48, General Headquarters, American Expeditionary Forces, dated February 17, 1919.

II.

1. Charges have been made on the floor of Congress, based upon letters alleged to have been written by members of the Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry, an Ohio regiment. In these letters it is stated that:

a. Soldiers are insufficiently fed.
b. Soldiers are insufficiently clothed.
c. Soldiers have been driven to stealing food in order to subsist.
d. Soldiers have subsisted on horse meat.
e. Clothing of some men was so badly mended and patched as to scarcely hold together.
f. Commissioned officers are drinking to excess, are drunk practically all of the time, and their actions are so disgusting and so disgraceful that allied officers look down upon them with disgust.
g. Soldiers have not received any pay for a number of months.

2. Additional letters, alleged to have been received from the same sources, state that:

a. Enlisted men of Company F, Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry, at Cattaro, were receiving improper food; bread coarse and not worth eating; some food full of worms.
b. Some men almost skeletons; many men down with severe colds as result of working in rain.
c. Men exhausted on long marches court-martialed for falling out and subjected to severe discipline.
d. Entire company (F) is discontented.
e. White bread was offered but the offer was refused.
f. When men complained about the meals the company (F) was prevented from witnessing a football game.

III.

All noncommissioned officers were questioned, and all soldiers of the regiment who wished to make complaints were heard. All members of one company were questioned, and nearly all of the officers of the regiment were cross-examined. All officers in the American Expeditionary Forces in Italy connected with supply or administration were questioned.

IV.

1. (a) When it was decided to send troops to Italy, it was first intended to ration them from France. The length of the line of communications and the scarcity of rolling stock, together with the small number of American troops in Italy, brought about the decision that these troops should be rationed by the Italian commissary. An issue table was made converting the American ration as issued in France into the Italian weights and measures, the only difference being that jam was left out. Later a ration table was made in which an extra allowance of sugar was added to make up for the lack of jam.

The Italian officials accepted these ration tables and agreed to add to the ration, as issued to their troops, the additional articles required on this table. As far as was in their power, this was done. Some articles they did not have, such as candy and lard; and in some localities, during certain periods of the operations, potatoes were scarce; but substitutive articles such as canned peas, corn, and beans were issued in lieu thereof.

Butter was an article very hard to obtain in Italy, and at one time the issue of sugar was cut down, but even when cut down this issue was from five to seven and one-half times the sugar allowance of every adult man or woman in Italy.

At the times when the Italian commissary did not supply some of the ration articles the commanding officer of the supply depot, American Expeditionary Forces, Italy, would take up the matter with the chief of the Italian military delegation for British and American troops, and the issues would again approach normal.

(b) At the commencement of the drive, October 28, 1918, the supply depot, which had been located in the forward area at Villa France, was withdrawn to Alessandria—a position well in the rear—by orders of the Italian supremo commando. This was done as Villa Franca was needed as a supply base of the First Italian Army, and no other forward area was available owing to congestion of this area with allied troops. This caused a delay of eight days in the shipment of supplies. However, a small subdepot for rations and sales articles was established at Treviso.

(c) Up to the period of the commencement of the offensive the regiment was well fed and supplied, the only complaint justifiable being the sameness of the ration and the fact that frozen Argentine beef was sometimes unavailable and fresh beef supplied instead to the extent of 40 per cent of the issue in August and practically 100 per cent in October. The issues of potatoes and sugar were practically normal.

(d) The period of the offensive can be taken from October 28 until the middle of November. During this period iron rations were all that could be supplied on account of the rapidity of the advance and the breakdown of bridges. Before the advance every man was equipped with a new uniform and two suits of underwear. The extra suit of underwear was ordered carried in the packs. Many men threw away their packs during the advance, and these men are the ones who complained of having but one suit of underwear.

(e) At the end of this period the regiment was split up into three battalions and sent to separate stations. Brig. Gen. Charles G. Treat was put in command of base section 8, which was organized about November 21. The ration situation was brought to his attention November 28, and the quartermaster of the base section was directed to take up immediately the supply of better rations. The United States Army Ambulance Service had brought overseas, at the time it was given to the Italian Army, a large supply of American rations, articles which it used in conjunction with the Italian ration. These supplies were stored at Mantova and Genova. The First Battalion of the regiment was stationed at Treviso, and the Second Battalion at Cattaro, and the Third battalion at Fiume. The First Battalion was reported short of potatoes; the Third Battalion was reported as being on the straight Italian ration with no additions.

2. (a) On November 30 the quartermaster of the Ambulance Section was ordered to supply articles of the American ration to the First Battalion at Treviso. These rations were shipped on December 2. Owing to freight congestion they were not delivered and issued until December 11, from which date this battalion was adequately supplied with American rations, except at times a shortage of potatoes, which was made up in substitutive articles, and in the occasional issue of fresh Italian beef for frozen Argentine beef.

(b) When the Austrians retreated they broke down the railroad bridges and wagon bridges over the Piave and Tagliamento Rivers. As the armies were advancing rapidly, train loads of supplies were rushed to Treviso and later to Undine waiting for the repair of the bridges. These bridges were not repaired until the middle of December, and a tremendous congestion of loaded cars resulted at the above-mentioned points. The Adriatic was sown with mine fields, and there was a shortage of ships. The channels through the mine fields were known only to naval pilots. Admiral Bullard, in command of the American vessels in the Adriatic, promised to get a supply boat to supply his own naval stations and to allow the troops at Fiume and Cattaro to be supplied by this boat. This boat was never supplied. A destroyer was assigned to make trips with supplies, but before it could make its first trip it was relieved from the Adriatic station and ordered to the United States. The American Food Commission at Trieste promised to supply a boat to be used in the Adriatic, but this boat has never been supplied.

(c) The Second Battalion of the Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry left Ippiis on November 13, via Mestria and Venice, for Cattaro, at which place it arrived November 21. It was rationed upon its arrival by the Italian commissary. The Italians had great difficulty in keeping up their own supplies, as they lost on an average one supply vessel a week by mines, and on two occasions their commissary was down to half a day's supply. Notwithstanding these difficulties, American troops at Cattaro always received preferential treatment in the matter of issues.

(d) The vessel which took the troops to Cattaro took a small shipment of supplies which was sent from Treviso November 15. An attempt was made to send the barracks bags of this battalion on a later naval vessel shipment, but no vessel could be supplied and the Italians requested that the supply of this battalion be made by rail to Brindisi and from Brindisi by boat, but that no supplies be shipped from Treviso by rail until the port at Brindisi was ready to receive and forward them. In the meantime, arrangements were made by which the U. S. destroyer Gregory took clothing and supplies from Venice on December 23 to Fiume, the extent of its run. These were later transshipped to Cattaro on the U. S. destroyer Birmingham, which arrived on January 9. In the meantime a flour vessel, the Western Plains, had arrived at Cattaro on January 2 and had left there a quantity of white flour.

(e) Arrangements were finally made for the regular shipment of rations via Brindisi, shipments starting January 10, January 17, and February 5. After Brindisi had been declared open four cars were procured to take barrack bags. Although convoyed, the convoy was broken, two cars arriving at Brindisi, two other cars being lost, which, after eight days, were found at Verona. The Italians held the other two cars at Brindisi until the two lost cars arrived, and these were shipped to Cattaro and arrived about January 31. The second shipment of clothing also arrived about January 31. From the receipt of the first shipment of these supplies the troops at Cattaro received the American supplement to the ration until they were relieved on March 5.

(f) The Third Battalion, Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry, arrived at Fiume on November 19. The food conditions at Fiume were reported on November 28. Order was issued to supply these from the United States Ambulance Service storehouse, but the Italian railway officials requested that the cars should not be loaded until the railroad bridges were open and there was no danger of the cars being caught in the traffic blocks. These cars were ordered loaded on December 11 and shipped on December 14. They went to Treviso, where they were to receive some additional articles of the ration which could not be supplied at Mantova. These cars were caught in the traffic block, and on the advice of the Italian railway officials were unloaded, and the supplies placed in the warehouse at Treviso. Upon the resumption of traffic over the Tagliamento the Italians notified the quartermaster in time so that these cars, containing 17 days rations, including flour and bacon, crossed the bridges on the second day that traffic was resumed and arrived at Fiume on January 2.

(g) The Italian commissary at Fiume was supplying potatoes regularly, and an additional amount of flour was sent from the American Food Commission's store at Trieste on January 17.

Orders had been issued to withdraw this battalion from Fiume at the end of January, therefore as the Italian commissary was being supplied by rail at Fiume and had received its full ration complement, no further shipments were made from Mantova to Fiume, and the battalion left that station of February 12 for Genova.

3. (a) The repeated issues of rice and macaroni were tiresome to the men, and the mess sergeants soon commenced trading macaroni and rice for potatoes, cabbages, turnips, and, wherever available, for eggs and honey. In this way the ration was varied. Even at such out of the way places as the stations of the Second Battalion at Dalmatia the mess sergeants were able to commence this bartering of rations within two weeks of their arrival.

(b) The main difficulty with the ration supply was the sameness of the ration, and during some few short periods of campaign or of transport difficulties, the fact that the men were rationed on the straight Italian ration. During these latter periods the men did not deem the quantity sufficient. With these exceptions the ration has been ample and the men appeared will nourished.

4. STEALING OF FOOD.

The cases complained of as to men stealing food consisted:

(a) Of their taking turnips and cabbages from abandoned fields during the advance.

(b) In some few instances of men taking corned beef from their company kitchens.

(c) Of men collecting flour from the ground spilled from broken sacks in the unloading of flour ships at Zelenika, and cooking pancakes in their barracks.

(d) Of grapes taken from vines in the fields which afterwards were paid for by an assessment made on all members of the regiment.

(e) And of one man who stated that he always needed lots of sugar and would steal it from his company kitchen whenever he had the chance.

No other instances of the stealing of food were disclosed.

5. HORSE MEAT.

Frozen Argentine beef was not always available, and fresh beef was supplied instead. The cattle were not of the best quality and were frequently old mountain cattle and, in cases, draft cattle. The Italians allowed our inspectors to pick out the best and to apply the American test for tubercular cattle. This meat was butchered and on account of the absence of ice was issued to the companies the same day. It was sometimes cooked by uninstructed company cooks before it had hung 24 hours, and it was the appearance of this beef that caused the men to think they were being fed horse meat. There was no horse meat ever issued.

6. WORMY FOOD.

Several times worms or weevils were found in the cooked rice, but most of the men testified that they had actually seen them not more than two or three times Weevils were also found in the macaroni about as often as in the rice.

7. REFUSING WHITE BREAD.

When F Company first went to Dalmatia, it was issued bread made from white flour taken from a captured Austrian magazine. When the Serbians found that this was the only store of white flour in sight, they stopped the issue. No offer of white bread was ever "refused."

8. BREAD.

Owing to the scarcity of flour, Italian bread was made of a combination of whole-wheat flour, rice flour, and frequently corn meal. This made up into dark bread, which the men did not like. Italian corn meal, even when fresh, has a pungent, oily flavor, which the men, being unaccustomed to, took for must. This flavor remained in the bread when it was made of part corn meal. At times Italian bread was received with mold on the outside. This occurred frequently with the white bread baked by the American bakers in France and shipped to the front. After the drive it was first arranged to have the bread supplied by the Italians without the corn meal, our supply officers receiving a smaller quantity in proportion to the amount that was left out and receiving the corn meal to be used as mush. Later, white American flour was obtained from the American Food Commission ships and the bread was excellent.

9. CLOTHING.

(a) This regiment arrived in Italy on July 27, 1918, fully equipped, since which time every man has been reequipped completely twice and some of them have been reequipped completely three times. The first complete reequipment was made just before the drive. Every man was issued a complete new uniform and two suits of wool underwear. The extra suit of underwear was ordered to be carried in the packs. During the march a number of men threw their packs away and thus lost their extra suit of underwear.

(b) This regiment has been extremely wasteful with clothing. I examined a large pile of salvaged clothing and found many articles of uniform that had been absolutely unworn, but which evidently had not been of the proper sizes. The majority of the articles were merely soiled. There were many pairs of new shoes and many pairs of muddy serviceable shoes in the pile. In the matter of shoes, the leather appears never to have been greased, as the men did not like the brand of white dubbin that was issued to them. The company shoe-repair kits have never been used and were turned in as salvage.

(c) Many men, instead of wearing their new uniform during the drive, put this uniform in their barrack bags and wore old uniforms. The march was hard on clothing. At the end of the drive the Second and Third Battalions were sent immediately to Cattaro and Fiume.

(d) The Second Battalion did not have time to get its barrack bags, but did receive a small shipment of clothing before embarking at Venice. The first shipment of clothing for this battalion started, as stated above, December 24, and reached Cattaro January 9. The second shipment, with the barrack bags, arrived January 31. In the meantime the clothing of some of the men, especially breeches, had become badly worn. The men mended and patched their clothing, and in one company five men had their clothes so badly worn that they were not assigned to outside duty. All men had overcoats to wear on the outside, which hid the patched condition of their clothing.

Shoes were in bad condition, but Companies E, F, and G, and the machine-gun platoon were able to find tools and extemporized shoe repair kits with which they repaired shoes. They also borrowed shoes from the Serbian magazine for the men to wear while their own shoes were being repaired. Company H did not do this, and seven men had shoes in such condition that they were excused from guard duty.

(e) The first shipment of new clothing to the Third Battalion at Fiume was made by the first available sea transportation which left Venice December 24. The barrack bags had been shipped by rail and arrived the day before Christmas.

10. BUNKS.

At Fiume and Cattaro straw was very difficult to obtain. The one shipment of straw for the men to sleep on which was started for Fiume was lost or taken by the Italians, and it took some time until a second shipment could be obtained. At Cattaro two companies obtained straw and one company obtained an extra issue of two heavy Serbian blankets to be used as mattresses, but Company H did not obtain these blankets, nor did they obtain straw until shortly before their departure from Cattaro.

11. PHYSICAL CONDITION.

(a) During the drive the men made long marches. Company F, upon its arrival at Cattaro, was ordered to Cetinje, a march which included a hard climb over the mountains. Upon their return to station at Teodo many of the men looked worn and thin. They rapidly picked up, however, with the slackening of work and put on flesh. Upon arrival in Genova, Italy, the entire regiment was a hardy, stocky lot of men, and most of them had gained in weight.

(b) With regard to working in the rain, Company F was unloading ammunition from captured battleships, together with British, French, and Italian troops. They were doing the same work as the others, and when caught in the rain they were generally worked under cover. The distance to barracks made it better to work under cover than to march back to barracks in the rain.

(c) The average number of men who reported to the surgeon at sick call from the entire battalion was 33 men daily. The average number placed in quarters was 11. The greatest number in any one day in any one company, sick from any causes, was 10.

(d) The total hospital cases for the entire battalion from November 26 to March 5 was 94. The maximum number at any one time in the hospital was 17, and the minimum 9. Of these 94 hospital cases, 40 were influenza cases, slight colds, and slight fevers. This record is an exceedingly good one.

(e) The sick report of Company F from December 1 to March 5 shows the total number of cases in quarters 57, in hospital 3. These 3 appear on the record a second time. During the time of unloading shells from the captured warships, December 5 to January 4, only 38 men were on sick report from all causes.

12. MEN EXHAUSTED ON LONG MARCHES COURT-MARTIALED FOR FALLING OUT.

On the march Company F made from Cattaro to Cetinje, mentioned above, 91 men fell out on the first day. The company reached camp on the second day and was ordered to return on the third day. Most of the men who fell out on the first day rejoined the company that night, but six men who fell out on the first day had not joined the company by the time the company was on its way back toward Cattaro. These men were met by an officer of the company, who told them to go back down the hill, that the company was following them and was marching back. They were to join the company that night. These men spent the night in a house a short distance from the road. They did not make an effort to join their company. They did not get up in time in the morning, and were still cooking their breakfast at 11 a. m., when their company passed them, and they allowed it to pass them without joining it. They followed the company down hill, and were making arrangements to spend another night without joining the company when they were found by officers who had been sent back to search for them. They were court-martialed, not for falling out, but for being absent without leave.

13. WHEN MEN OF COMPANY F COMPLAINED OF MEALS THE COMPANY WAS PREVENTED FROM WITNESSING A FOOTBALL GAME.

This incident complained of was supposed to have been on Christmas Day, 1918, at Teodo. A game of baseball had been arranged with the sailors of the U. S. destroyer Luce, to be played Christmas morning. The Luce was ordered to sail Christmas morning, and on Christmas Eve it was announced that there would be no game. Late Christmas Eve the sailing was delayed until Christmas afternoon, and at reveille Christmas morning the men were notified that there would be a game on Christmas morning, which was played (resulting in a victory for Company F, 9 to 6). Company F was not prohibited from attending this game.

14. PAY.

Up to the time of the drive payments were regular. The troops started the drive on October 28, and the drive was considered ended about the middle of November. The First Battalion was paid November 19, and the Third Battalion November 23. The Second Battalion had left for Cattaro on November 13, and the paymaster who paid the other two battalions missed this battalion by two days. He started for Cattaro, and arrived there on December 9, and paid the Second Battalion for October. It took 17 days for the paymaster to make the trip. The November pay rolls were not figured out until later, as the signed pay rolls were not all received until December 22. The First Battalion was then paid for November on January 6, and the Second Battalion on January 12, and the Third Battalion on January 11.

The December pay was received by the First Battalion January 26, by the Third Battalion January 30. The Second Battalion was not able to get their signed December pay rolls into the hands of the paymaster until January 26, therefore it was decided to pay for both December and January together, and this was done in February.

The Second Battalion's pay for October, November, and December was one and one-half months late for each payment.

15. COMMISSIONED OFFICERS DRINKING TO EXCESS.

(a) To understand the reports about officers drinking to excess, the conditions under which this regiment served must be understood. It was used for purposes of propaganda. Practice marches were arranged for the regiment in country where it would be seen by Austrian airplanes. They were sent to various Italian cities where they were hailed as the "ultima Speranza." Officers and men were entertained and feted by the Italians, British, and French. It is the custom for southern Europeans to drink wine at all meals except breakfast. Their wine is light and pure and is drank instead of water. Wine was served at the dinners given to the regiment. No testimony whatever showed that any American officers were ever seen in an intoxicated condition at them.

(b) To return this hospitality it was decided to give one big party at Valleggio. A minstrel show was arranged and was given in a roped-off inclosure. Besides light refreshments, wine and some champagne were served. There were several hundred foreign officers present and the officers of the regiment, and from the amount of wine served there was not enough to go around and put anyone under the influence of liquor. See evidence of Lieut. Col. William Graham Everson, Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry, a minister of the Baptist Church, page 117.

Two enlisted men report that four American officers on this occasion walked down the street singing on their way home, but they did not know their names, as they belonged to a different battalion from that of the soldiers. A sentry also reported an unnamed officer as crossing his post into camp under the influence of liquor.

(c) At Fiume on New Year's Eve the dentist of the Third Battalion is alleged to have been under the influence of liquor. The testimony would not sustain charges of intoxication.

(d) From June 8, 1918, to March 31, 1919, there were only 83 cases of drunkenness in the entire regiment of 4,000 men.

(e) At Cattaro testimony discloses the fact that at times there was considerable drinking. Capt. Wallace W. Johns, Company H, Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry, appeared several times under circumstances in which the men thought he had been drinking. First Lieut. John F. Quensen, Company H, Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry, appeared once under the influence of liquor. In the mess, of which Capt. Johns was senior, on one occasion a naval officer knocked down a mess attendant and struck the sergeant of the guard. No action was taken on this beyond a verbal report made Capt. Johns to the senior naval commander at the station. On two other occasions officers appeared when men thought they had been drinking, but except in the case of the naval officer there was not sufficient evidence brought out to convict on charges of intoxication.

Capt. Johns and First Lieut. Quensen have been relieved from duty with their company.

(f) The attitude of foreign officers toward the officers of the regiment has been complimentary in the extreme. The Italian and British generals under whom the regiment has served have been loud in their praises, both of the quality of the troops and of the efficiency and gentlemanly conduct of the officers. Our officers have been decorated and feted by the foreign officers, which would not have been done had our officers been looked upon with disgust. (See commendatory letters, pp. 93–103, Ex. VIII.)

(g) Numerous trivial complaints were made, extracts of which appear in Exhibit VII. These show by their captiousness the extent to which members of this organization are given to complaining of trivialties.

16. ADMINISTRATION.

(a) Capt. James B. Ettridge, commanding officer of supply depot, American Expeditionary Forces, Italy, should have seen in September that the Italian commissary had difficulty in supplying the additional articles required for our ration. He did not avail himself of the power conferred by Army Regulations to make open market purchases in order to complete the ration. He contented himself instead with stirring up the Italians. When orders were given to supply American rations to the regiment, Maj. McSweeney was to supply all articles except potatoes and onions, Capt. Ettridge to supply potatoes. Capt. Ettridge's attitude is shown in his sending a letter suggesting that no shipment of potatoes from France be made unless on order of the commanding general, base section 8. (See p. 43 of Ex. III—L.)

This would make the commanding general act as supply officer of the regiment and would relieve Capt. Ettridge of all responsibility for any failure of supply.

(b) Capt. D. R. Poston, regimental supply officer Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry, from September, 1918, to the end of January, 1919, busied himself with the supply of matériel more than with that of rations. The ration situation was reported to him frequently and he should have known of it as supply officer, but it can not be found that he did anything to remedy the failure of the Italian supplies.

His attitude in regard to salvage was wasteful. From the piles of salvage I have seen he evidently received anything turned in, whether serviceable or not, and issued new in its place. He has been discharged from the service of the United States, leaving the regiment January 26, 1919.

(c) Col. William Wallace, commanding the Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry, did not attain the excellence of administration in his regiment of which it was capable. The regiment was well instructed but it was not held up to the minor details of sanitation of billets or messes. The men are not well set up, nor smart nor military in appearance. Its equipment was not properly taken of, especially the shoes, which were not oiled, the shoe-repair kits issued were not used, but were turned in and when the emergency arose in Dalmatia the organizations had to find tools and extemporize shoe-repair kits. He allowed serviceable clothing to be salvaged unduly. His attitude toward his men was that of sneering criticism and he has not succeeded in making of the good material at hand a regiment of good soldiers.

V.

CONCLUSIONS.

(a) For a large part of its service in Italy the Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry was fed on the Italian ration, to which additional issues were made to bring it up to the value of the American ration as issued in France. The Italian Government made all the additions in its power. The ration did not have sufficient variation and the men did not like it, especially the macaroni. The soldiers did receive sufficient food and were as well fed as any of the organizations in the advanced area in France.

(b) During the period immediately after the drive some of the soldiers' clothing was badly worn. Due to difficulties of transportation, new clothing did not arrive for one and one-half months in some instances. No one suffered from lack of clothing.

(c) No soldiers were driven to stealing food in order to subsist.

(d) No horse meat was ever issued to members of this regiment.

(e) Not more than seven or eight men had their clothing so badly worn that it could not be mended, and these were relieved of outside duty, although they had serviceable overcoats with which to hide the condition of their clothing when they went outside.

(f) Commissioned officers did not drink to excess. No testimony could be obtained which would sustain charges of drunkenness against any officer of this regiment. Allied officers have been friendly and complimentary toward them in the extreme.

(g) The Second Battalion, stationed in Dalmatia, received pay for October, November, and December one and one-half months late. Except during the month of November, soldiers received pay during each month.

(h) The food of Company F, at Cattaro, was the same as that of the other organizations there. Some macaroni and some rice issued all organizations contained worms or weevils at times, but very few men personally saw these in their food more than three or four times.

(i) Some men were thin after the exertion of the marches during the drive. They rapidly picked up and are a hardy, healthy lot.

(j) Men were not court-martialed for falling out on account of being exhausted on long marches, but six men who fell out and did not make an effort to join their company were tried for absence without leave after they were absent more than three days.

(k) Only a few men in Company F are discontented.

(l) No offer of white bread was ever refused in Company F.

(m) Company F was not prevented from witnessing a football game on Christmas day, but instead had a baseball game provided for them. No football game was ever scheduled.

(n) Although the service of the Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry was under unusual conditions of transportation and dispersion of command, if due foresight and systematic care had been exercised in the period before the drive some of the conditions would have been greatly alleviated.

(o) The conditions existing after the drive were due to difficulty of transportation, and everything possible was done to ration and equip the regiment with the exception of early procurement of potatoes.

(p) That Capt. D. R. Poston was not efficient in the administration of his office as supply officer, Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry.

(q) That Capt. James B. Ettridge, Quartermaster Corps, commanding supply depot, American Expeditionary Forces, Italy, has not shown due energy and initiative in bettering the ration conditions of the Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry, especially in the procurement of fresh vegetables.

(r) That the administration of the Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry in Italy under Col. William Wallace was not efficient, and if the regiment were to remain in service the best interests of the Government would be attained by relieving him from command and assigning a new commanding officer.

(s) That Brig. Gen. C. G. Treat, commanding base section 8, did everything possible under existing conditions to relieve the situation.

VI.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

(a) In view of the fact that the supply depot, American Expeditionary Forces, Italy, is no longer supplying troops and that the supplies now there are being disposed of, that Capt. James B. Ettridge, Quartermaster Corps, be allowed to continue to close out the depot.

(b) In view of the fact that the Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry is on its way to the United States for muster out of the service, that Col. William Wallace be allowed to continue in command until it is mustered out.

CATTARO, March 4, 1919.

DEAR MAJOR: In the moment that you and the battalion under your orders are leaving Cattaro I warmly wish you good fortune. It is spontaneous with me to express to you my strongest and most cordial satisfaction that certainly you will extend to each officer, to your excellent troops, the worthy representatives of the great American people.

To all, dear Major, I wish only what a soldier can wish to a friendly and valorous soldier; and I send you also in the name of my officers and of my troops the expression of my cordial sympathy.

Receive, dear Major, the wishes of good fortune.

(Signed) Gen. CHIODI,
Commander of Italian Troops in Cattaro.

CATTARO, March 4, 1919.

To the COMMANDER OF THE AMERICAN TROOPS IN CATTARO:

On occasion of your departure from our town I feel it my duty to express to you and to your officers and soldiers the best and sincerest thanks for all the help you gave us during your stay among us.

Your officers and soldiers have won the esteem of the whole population by their gentlemanly and friendly behavior, for which we have only words of praise.

With the best wishes to you and to your troops on your return home, I am, sincerely, yours,

Prof. R. PERUCCIO,
Member of the National Committee for the District of Cattaro.

CATTARO, February 28, 1919.

COMMANDER OF ALLIED TROOPS IN MONTENEGRO AND CATTARO:

At the time when the American battalion is leaving Cattaro for home, the general, commanding the allied troops in Montenegro and Cattaro, wishes to thank them for the services they have rendered during their stay and for the part they took in reestablishing order during the troubles, of January, 1919.

The general addresses to Maj. Scanland, and to the American officers and soldiers, his best wishes for their happiness.

Gen. TAHON,
Commander of Allied Troops in Montenegro and Cattaro.

CATTARO, March 3, 1919.

OFFICER COMMANDING AMERICAN TROOPS IN CATTARO.

SIR: At the moment when the American troops are to leave the Gulf of Cattaro, I consider it my duty to express to you, your officers, your noncommissioned officers and men, my deepest consideration for all services which you have rendered to me and my regiment during your sojourn in the Gulf of Cattaro.

At the time when, for nonsufficient number of soldiers, I could not safely guard various stores and deposits in Cattaro and neighborhood, you, with your men, volunteered to come to help me, and enabled me to guard safely these stores.

Your officers and men have carried out their duty to my satisfaction.

I have no sufficient words to express my feelings to thank you for all you did.

I am, sir, yours, faithfully,

GIGOURI RISLILISII,
Licutenant Colonel commanding Second Jago-Slav Regiment.

FIUME, February 9, 1919.

MY DEAR EVERSON: I hear with much regret that your marching orders have come. During your stay in Fiume I have got to know a little of the American which has played such a decisive rôle in the war and which has been such a faithful and loyal ally. It is a privilege which I value highly to have been so intimately associated with you and the officers and men of the American contingent.

I wish to express to you and them on behalf of the British contingent the great pleasure it has been to us to have had you as our comrades here, and our sincere regret that the time has now come when we must say good-by and each go his separate way. I know that both Col. Wallace and you share with me the hope that the sentiments of mutual appreciation and affection which animate our respective contingents are the emblem of the lasting friendship of our great countries.

Let me say how much I appreciate your personal work here in the difficult situation of Fiume, and I thank you sincerely for the loyal and straightforward way in which you have always acted toward me in the spirit of true comradeship.

Good-by, my dear Colonel, and Godspeed you and yours.

Yours, very sincerely,

H. GORDON.

HEADQUARTERS 332D INFANTRY,
AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES, ITALY, A. P. O. 901,
February 24, 1919.

I have never seen a more enthusiastic ovation than that given the American troops upon their departure from Fiume.

The British, French, Italian, and Serbian officers and soldiers marched to the station. The civilians of all the political factions turned out en masse. British, French, and Italian sailors vied with the soldiers. The railroad yards were packed with people, all expressing admiration for our officers and soldiers. There were three bands—one British, one Italian, and one civilian. Lieut. Gen. Brazioli and staff from the Italians, Lieut. Gen. Traine and staff from the French, Brig. Gen. Gordon and staff from the British, all remained for nearly two hours.

I was told by the Spanish consul that there had never been a finer bunch of soldiers in Fiume than the American troops. Mr. Rolland, director of the Adria Steamship Co. (an Englishman), told me, "I am proud to have some part in honoring your splendid soldiers. This is the greatest gathering I have seen in Fiume during my 30 years' residence here."

I am sure our soldiers have made a splendid record and that we have the friendship of all the allied officers and soldiers, together with the admiration of all the civilians.

WILLIAM G. EVERSON,
Lieutenant Colonel Three hundred and thirty-third Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS INTERALLIED FORCES OF OCCUPATION,
Fiume, February 8, 1919.

To Lieut. Col. EVERSON,
Commanding American Troops in Fiume:

The departure of the battalion is a cause of sincere regret. I, and with me the entire Italian presidio of Fiume, were very happy because of the presence of these bold soldiers in arms who had proudly divided the fatigue and the honors of the last great victory.

I beg you, Colonel, to express to all your officers and soldiers my hearty good-bye. Tell them that they go back to the great and strong America, having nobly accomplished their mission. They leave in our heart an indelible gratitude and admiration.

HEADQUARTERS INTERALLIED "M. P."
Fiume, February 10, 1919.

To Lieut. Col. EVERSON,
American Battalion in Fiume:

In the moment in which the fine and valorous American troops leave this town, allow me, Colonel, to give my best thanks for the valid and conscientious cooperation that I had from the detachment of American soldiers in the delicate and difficult service of military police in Fiume.

With real regret I see the departure of these soldiers, and to them I present my best salute and those of the Italian Carabinieri.

Yours, truly,

AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
A. P. O. 901–E, Italy, January 30, 1919.

The following correspondence exchanged between the Italian Ministry of War, Rome, and the commanding general American troops in Italy, eulogistic of the services of American troops while on duty in Italy, is published for the information of all concerned:

* * * * * * *

"ROME, January 24, 1919.

"The Minister of War to Gen. Treat, Chief American Military Mission to Italy, Zone of War.

"MY DEAR GENERAL: The supreme command will have already advised your mission that both the Government and this ministry—although viewing with sorrow the prospective departure from Italy of the magnificent American regiment up to now on our front—have readily agreed to your proposal that steps be taken for the repatriation of the regiment itself.

"Nevertheless, I desire to add the expression of my admiration for such well-deserving troops, who, in a noble and generous show of enthusiasm, rushed to the side of our soldiers in the solemn hour when the destinies of the country and humanity were being accomplished.

"May it be your pleasure to extend to the officers and enlisted men of the regiment which is being repatriated the cordial and grateful greetings which the whole Italian Army addressed to them through me—an army which is happy and proud of having fought and conquered, having at its side such a noble and illustrious representation of the powerful American Army.

"May it be your pleasure to repeat to them that this necessary separation will not destroy the bonds of fraternal comradeship which the soldiers of America and Italy learned to form between themselves on the battle fields in the glory of a great victory.

"May this mutual understanding and these common intentions, which to-day unite them during the war, find them to-morrow and forever fraternally bound together in the no less glorious conquests of work, progress, and civilization.

"With these wishes and this confidence, I repeat my expressions of highest consideration.

"Sincerely, yours,

"S. E. Lieut. Gen. E. CAVIGLIA,
"Ministro della Guerra, Rome, Italy.

"DEAR SIR: Your letter of January 24, 1919, relative to the repatriation of American troops serving in Italy has been received. The instructions of the commando supreme referred to therein will be complied with as soon as transmitted to me.

"Every American officer and soldier who has had the privilege and honor of serving in Italy will take home with him an indelible recollection of the considerate and generous treatment accorded him on every hand.

"History is sure to recognize the trials and difficulties under which Italy has labored and the far-reaching influence of her glorious victory.

"America's heart and soul was dedicated to the end that righteousness and justice should prevail on the earth, and if by their presence American troops in Italy have added to the moral and physical strength of the Italian Army, it is a source of great satisfaction.

(Memorandum for Col. Joseph A. Baer, 332d Infantry, Italy.)

MARCH 28, 1919.

1. I have recently been informed that the Second Battalion of the Three hundred and thirty-second Infantry has been under criticism. For your information I wish to state that I was with this battalion off and on for nearly a month, while on detached duty in Dalmatia and Montenegro. During this time I lived with some of its officers and had considerable association with the men. I was greatly impressed with the general caliber of its rank and file.

2. I inspected this battalion, and my opinion is that its officers are an able and efficient group of men. Its morale was excellent—good discipline and everything running smoothly.

3. Splendid work was being carried out in numerous lines, in repair shops, reconstructing cable railroad lines, rebuilding automobiles, etc., showing marked versatility among the personnel.

4. The entire battalion was held in the highest esteem by the people of Montenegro and Cattaro Bay, and by the officers and men of the Allied troops with whom they worked or were associated.

5. The rumor of the splendid record of this battalion had reached me before my arrival, and I was so impressed with the way in which its work had been done, and the high record for American honesty, efficiency, good judgment, and sobriety, which it has undoubtedly left there, that I feel this battalion should receive special commendation for the splendid record which it has made in Cattaro Bay and Montenegro.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM H. HILL,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, September 30, 1919.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, the animated discussion of the cold-storage bill and the success with which the gentlemen of the Committee on Agriculture have met the criticisms of the measure have impressed me that they have given the problem very thorough consideration. It seems to me that they are offering a measure which fairly and fully meets the requirements of control in interstate commerce of foods that are susceptible to preservation by cold storage. But I do not believe that this bill when enacted will, or that any other measure designed to control the interstate traffic in cold-storage foods could, appreciably lower the cost of food to the consumer. Causes both physical and psychological underlie the present-day conditions due to which the dollar has steadily grown less valuable in exchange for those things which the people must have. Hoarding of food in cold-storage warehouses is but a trifling element in the world-wide condition which has followed the orgy of destruction of wealth through which we have passed.

I say this with no thought of defending the profiteer who uses the cold-storage warehouse as an instrument to enable him to take advantage of the food necessities of the people, and to exact from them tribute beyond a conscionable and legitimate profit. The Congress has provided, I believe, adequate laws for dealing with the profiteers, and if the administrative branch of the Government does not drag violators into the courts and put the fear of the law into their hearts, then it is for the people to put into power an administration which will enforce the laws.

In New York State, my home State, because of the great concentration there of population, we are more deeply interested in cold storage than any other State. I believe that more food is held in storage there than in any other State. Public necessity requires that the men who have to do with the distribution of food take advantage of this means of equalizing the supply to the market through seasons of production and nonproduction. Scattered throughout New York State are cold-storage warehouses to which are brought food supplies from all parts of the country—fruits from California, apples from Oregon, poultry and eggs from Iowa. The warehouses are owned and operated by local business men who rent storage space to the owners of food supplies, and contract to maintain a certain degree of temperature in the space rented for the period during which the foods are held there. The responsibility of the warehouseman is limited to maintaining storage space in sanitary condition at the degree of temperature specified by the owners of the commodities stored. The owner of the food may be a private individual who has in his back yard an apple tree which produces a few bushels of apples for his family use during the winter, and which he protects from deterioration by placing them in the cold-storage warehouse. Or he may be a wholesale egg merchant whose agents scour the Middle West during those seasons when the industrious and beneficent hen is most active, collecting the fruit of her involuntary labors and shipping them by the carload to cold-storage warehouses convenient to the great centers of population in the East, there to await the requirements of the market.

There is such a warehouse in the largest city in the district which sent me here, at Binghamton, N. Y. And it is my observation that this is a very useful institution, both locally and to the great cities which are half a day's freight shipment distant. The thrifty housewife who buys eggs in the public market during the season of plenty finds space here to store the eggs and thus to protect the family purse from the high prices of the winter season. I know of other housewives who join together in the battle against the general high cost of living by raising a neighborhood pig. They put into cold storage the meat when the pig is slaughtered, and at intervals during the months following they go to the warehouse for the Sunday roast. Thus, when utilized by old-fashioned thrift, the cold-storage warehouse affords a very practical solution of the problem we all are wrestling with of making both ends meet.

Through this warehouse passes a constant stream of food products on its way to the markets in New York. Supplies are brought here from other cold-storage warehouses more distant from the market, and shipments are made from this warehouse direct into the city of New York, crossing the boundaries of three States en route, as the demands from the city call for supplies from this reservoir of food.

The cold-storage warehouse is an institution of the greatest practical usefulness. It is essential in the process of the orderly and economical distribution of food supplies. The business should be developed and encouraged. In my locality the business is under the direction of capable, progressive, honest business men. They are entitled to the protection that this measure will give to the industry. They should have the benefit which will accrue to the industry from the supervision which the bill provides and which will prevent misuse of cold storage, which is becoming increasingly important in food distribution.

Comparison of Observations Made on Visits to Japan, China, and Shantung—Matured, Waiting, and Eagerly Expecting Further Development, More Than One-Quarter of Globe's Inhabitants Constitute the Far Eastern Question—Course of the World May Be Vitally Changed in Less Time Than Visits Cover by Events Occurring There.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ERNEST R. ACKERMAN,

OF NEW JERSEY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, September 27, 1919.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege and pleasure to visit China and Japan on three different occasions, and I appreciate the opportunity afforded me by the House to lay before it some observations made on those visits. They were made during the last 20 years at about a decade apart, thus enabling me to notice the rapidity with which the customs and ideas of the Occident are being adopted by those residing in the Orient.

Upon the occasion of my first visit to Japan, when over a dozen cities were included in my itinerary, I found that it was truly oriental in every sense of the imagination. The jinrikisha, or "man-power" carriage, was much in evidence. In fact, it was practically the only means of land transportation outside of the railways.

The dress of the natives, the curiosity the people displayed when Americans stopped at their shops, and the quaint, naive ways of the people were particularly noticeable.

When I returned in 1905 street cars were in operation in many of the large cities, and even a few automobiles had begun to make their appearance.

In 1914, revisiting many cities and adding new ones to my list, although the old picturesqueness still remained I noticed that electric trams ran everywhere and the increase of automobiles was very marked. Excursions were being made by them to many points radiating from the big cities of Yokohama, Kioto, Tokyo, and Kobe, and there was much agitation that the streets be widened and paved in order to permit of the smoother passage of these vehicles.

In 1895 the dress of the Japanese women conformed to the lines which undoubtedly had been pursued by them for many years, the old quaint and attractive customs being adhered to religiously. By 1914 it was quite apparent that the growing acquaintance with the fashions of London and Paris had resulted in changes in the dress of the ladies, and the prevailing modes as adopted by the ladies in England and France could already be noted in large numbers, although the colors were rather more vivid and orientally inclined than those to be seen in the capitals of Europe.

Trains de luxe, having dining cars patterned after the European or American models, were to be noted on the occasion of long journeys, and every inducement was being offered by means of the Travel Society, a national society for the promotion of sight-seeing, for travel in Japan and to induce Japanese to see not only their own country but to extend their visits far beyond the boundaries of the home country.

While earthquakes are still almost a daily occurrence, so much so that newspapers joke about the "real estate market being unsettled," yet the fear of these earth tremors has not prevented substantial buildings, exceeding two stories in height, from being erected in many of the large cities, thus changing in some instances most markedly the ancient character of the Japanese sky line.

The progressiveness of Japan has had its influence upon its big neighbor, China. It is but a 36-hour sail from Nagasaki, the great Japanese coaling port, to the mouth of that mighty river upon which Shanghai is located, the Yangtze. Large seagoing steamers of 20,000 tons can not anchor off the Bund of Shanghai itself, but at Woosung, a suburb, a launch is boarded which lands you at the city of Shanghai, 6 miles distant. However, vessels of lesser tonnage and smaller draft steam up to the city and discharge cargo at the wharves.

Outside the ancient walled city of Shanghai a very large metropolitan center exists. Separate concessions have been given to the Germans, English, Japanese, French, Russians, and Americans. Separate post offices, operating under the direct supervision of their respective countries, were set up in each one of these concessions, and after the Chinese had perfected a postal system of their own they also performed similar services for those who would patronize the city.

The train de luxe which runs twice a week from Shanghai through Nanking and Tientsin to Peking, leaves, or did leave, in the early part of the afternoon. From the Astor House, in Shanghai, 10 minutes' ride by carriage or jinrikisha, or 5 minutes by automobile, brings you to the eastern station, from which the train departs.

While the capital which furnished the means to construct the roadbed and the rolling stock was furnished by Englishmen, yet, as far as I was able to observe, the employees, the engineers, the brakemen, and the attachés in the dining and passenger cars were all Chinese. A better roadbed I never traveled over, and while the cars were of the English corridor type, having small compartments in which four people could be seated, but which for first-class travelers were generally limited to two, they were most comfortably upholstered. Chinese attendants, speaking perfect English, at the proper hour presented you with a menu and saw that a table was brought into each compartment, where the food was served; and although I have had the experience of traveling on almost all the principal railways of the United States, besides practically all of the trunk lines in Europe, Russia, Egypt, and nearly all in India, it is no exaggeration to say that the meal on the trip between Shanghai and Nanking was one of the best that I have ever enjoyed. That was also the opinion of the ladies who were in our party on that occasion.

From Shanghai you go through Soochow and Chinkiang to Nanking, a distance of 193 miles, which is accomplished in a little less than 7 hours. From Nanking large palatial river steamers are available to take you to Hankow, up the Yangtze, a distance of about 400 miles.

Nanking is reached about 7 o'clock in the evening. The train, after stopping at the town station, proceeds to the ferry side, where you transfer to a ferryboat to cross the Yangtze, whose mighty waters in impressive volume are flowing on their way to the sea. After a water trip of half or three-quarters of an hour you land in Pukow, and the sleeping car is available for your 36-hour ride to Tientsin. Through Shantung this portion of the road was owned by the Germans.

The railroad tracks in the terminal yards are numerous, and there was ample room for extension of the then growing business for many years to come. Large classes of commodities of all kinds were piled up in the "godowns," or warehouses, for transmission to points in the interior. The cars from here on are not quite equal to those on the line between Shanghai and Nanking, but they are of a type similar to those that have been used for many years on lines in Germany, say, between Hamburg and Berlin or Dresden and Munich. The fault was not so much with the character of the cars or their general usefulness as it was with the lack of attention that the cars seemed to receive; they were dusty and dirty. The Chinese were much more cleanly, as far as their care of the cars was concerned, as compared with the amount of care evidenced on the part of those trusted with the custody of the cars as you enter them at the Pukow station. Evidences of inattention were numerous, and while the fact that there had been a heavy drought in the immediate vicinity might have contributed to the reason for their being so dusty, yet if painstaking care had been used by the car cleaners they could have been put in more presentable and comfortable shape for the passengers. German cars, German locomotives, German employees of every kind, were here in evidence, although as far as the laborers along the tracks were concerned a number of Chinese were seen mixed in with those who had evidently been born in the fatherland.

The train ran smoothly during the night, and in the morning we were about one-third of the distance to Tientsin and near the port of Hsu Chow Fu, where a branch line runs to Ching Chow, a junction point on the main line between Hankow and Peking. From Chinkiang the Grand Canal of China, which serves as a great artery of commerce, runs in a northwesterly direction, emptying into the Yellow Sea at Tong-ku on the Gulf of Chi-li.

During the day we went through large fields of corn, which appeared in a splendid state of cultivation. We also saw numerous fields of wheat everywhere. The coolies were busy looking after their crops, and the whole geographical appearance of this section for hours and hours reminded us very much of traveling through Illinois, Kansas, Iowa, or Minnesota at the time of their respective harvests.

The meals served on the German part of the line were not quite equal to those served on the lines between Shanghai and Nanking, but they were palatable in spite of the fact that a majority of the passengers had not been accustomed to the heavy fare served in the Far East.

Twenty hours after leaving Pukow you reach Tsinan, where a branch line of 245 miles runs to Kiaochow or to the port of Tsingtau. Tsinan is on the Yellow River and a night's ride from Tientsin. In the early morning the train reaches Tientsin, having traveled in a northerly direction through 500 miles of the Province of Shantung.

Outside Tientsin a change of cars is made for Peking, which is 87 miles distant. The through train from the Trans-Siberian Line comes down from Harbin, Changchung, Mukden, and Shan-hai-kwan and joins the road at Tientsin, and as the sleeper is shunted from the Trans-Siberian train at Tientsin, travelers must content themselves with an ordinary first-class Chinese car, which, however, is not at all uncomfortable, for the ride of less than three hours from Tientsin to Peking.

From the encyclopædias we learn that the Province of Shantung has 56,000 square miles of territory, or is approximately about the same size as the State of Illinois, while the population consists of 36,000,000 people. In Shantung also are located the birthplaces of the sages Confucius and Mencius, whose memories are highly revered by 400,000,000 of Chinese. Could anything be imagined to excite a people to a greater degree of resentment toward a proposition, or to a greater feeling of animosity, than taking away from them, even temporarily, first, the place from which their distinguished religious teachers emanated, or, second, limiting their sovereignty over an exceedingly rich and fertile agricultural territory?

It has been rumored that the Japanese are not entirely satisfied with the net result of the peace conference as far as they are concerned. China, they claim, invoked the aid of the great powers in times past to make Japan relinquish the rights to the Liaotung Peninsula after the Chino-Japanese war, and succeeded in so doing. China also, it is alleged, sided with Russia at one time and with Germany at another, in order to bring pressure on Japan so that Japan was robbed of the fruits of victory during a certain occasion, but that was when she was under a monarchial form of government. Since she has been a Republic no acts of this kind are properly chargeable to her. Japan says she is surprised that anyone doubts her honesty in her statement that she will return the Province to China in the near future, and from newspaper accounts she certainly is moving toward that end, but from an acquaintance with the Japanese people, and especially with those of the higher business classes, I feel sure the pleasant relations between Japan and the United States will be diminished if too much pressure is put to bear on her to give up prematurely the Province of Shantung, which she considered, with reason, a legitimate compensation for the military aid which she has incurred in behalf of the Allies and associated powers.

Since Japan was made to renounce monetary compensation from Russia in the Russo-Japanese war, she has been very sore, especially toward America. I know this is so beyond question, for when conversing with reflective, thinking Japanese they tap their heads and say in picturesque language, "You have hurt us here," meaning that their pride has been hurt; that they were not recognized as being worthy of the reward that their arms had obtained for them, albeit that they are friendly disposed, and would have liked to have retained their regard for America.

The railroads in the Far East are, of course, in their infancy, but the possibilities for their rapid extension are tremendous. In fact, the entire country is gridironed with projected lines, for which large tonnage is predicted. Great extensions are contemplated, and by reason of the fact that vessels of great draft can load at the quay at Pukow, on the Yangtze, the Germans had provided liberally for a large system of docks and quays in order to meet the traffic of the future, which they anticipated obtaining.

As an instance of the vision displayed by the Japanese, we can point to Mukden in Manchuria, which has been laid out as if to take care of the demands of commerce a hundred years from now.

If Shantung is economically dominated by the Japanese, it seems to me that they will possess what might almost be termed the heart of China in so far as the facilities for competing with the rest of China are concerned, and this will additionally contribute toward making them still more formidable competitors of the Chinese Nation, thus sowing the seeds for possible future misunderstandings which might serve as pretexts for less friendly relations.

The city of Peking is progressing by leaps and bounds. By cutting off their queues the Chinese have discarded the badge of servitude which the Manchus imposed upon them, and with their short black hair are hardly to be distinguished at first glance from the Japanese. One is astonished at the progress that has been made during the last 20 years in Peking. What will it be in the next 20? The streets of the city are being improved and widened, sewers are being put into service, the city is well lighted at night with electric lights, the people are well clothed, orderly, and all hard at work. In the new part of Peking very substantial houses and godowns are being constructed.

The buildings are being laid down on modern lines, street railways are being contemplated, and automobiles in the capital city of China are now quite numerous.

From Shanghai to Hongkong by sea occupies from 48 to 60 hours, according to the steamer you engage passage on. Hongkong is a small island, colony of Great Britain, the capital of which is Victoria. Mountainous in aspect, it is of strategic importance, for it lies at the mouth of the Pearl River close to the mainland of China and 60 miles from the city of Canton, with its 2,000,000 of inhabitants and not a street in the city over 10 feet in width. Twenty miles across the bay is the settlement of Macau, where early Portuguese navigators endeavored to create a rival port.

That the trade of the Orient will be a great factor in the future will be more readily understood when it is authoritatively stated that there is more tonnage going in and out of the one port of Hongkong than out of the ports of either New York, London, or Liverpool, said Hongkong tonnage amounting to 17,000,000 tons a year. In fact, it is the greatest port for shipping in the world, without exception. Do we in America realize this? Should the Japanese hold on to Shantung, with the ports of Kiaochow and Pukow, they will in time be great trade rivals, for they will make strenuous efforts to obtain for those ports the trade that now goes to Hongkong, and with the system of railways leading to the interior through Shantung they will be advantageously situated, perhaps more so than the British, for although the railway now runs only from Hongkong to Canton it will soon be connected up with lines running into the interior from that point.

Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored briefly to give an outline picture, imperfect though it may be, of a situation which is claiming the attention of the public to a degree, but not to the extent I think it should be, considering the far-reaching consequences involved. If, therefore, there has been made by these observations, inadequate though they are, a contribution to the occasion that may somewhat assist in reaching a fortunate and happy conclusion for the principles involved, this opportunity which the House has so graciously placed at my disposal for presenting these personal experiences may not have been spent entirely in vain.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, September 30, 1919.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
McVEY POST, No. 16,
Mansfield, Ohio, September 27, 1919.

HON. WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of this post September 25 the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas press reports have been appearing from time to time, particularly in Harvey's Weekly, to the effect that insane soldiers confined in the Government hospital at St. Elizabeths are not receiving the merciful and generous care to which they are rightfully entitled: Be it

"Resolved, That this matter be brought to the attention of the Senators from Ohio and the Member of Congress from this district, and that they be requested to cause an investigation to be made and full publicity to be given regarding these alleged abuses;

"That if the alleged conditions be true, they cause steps to be taken to have same corrected and the agents thereof punished;

"That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the committee on resolutions at the coming State convention and that the delegates from this post be instructed to use their best efforts to secure the adoption by the State convention of resolutions in this sense."

"Whereas certain Members of the House of Representatives have introduced bills providing for the payment of bonuses to service men, ranging in amount from $100 to $1,000; and

"Whereas these Members of Congress apparently feel that they are acting in accordance with the desires of service men; and

"Whereas it appears to us that these efforts are not made in good faith, but rather in the effort to court favor and obtain votes: Be it

"Resolved—

"(1) That in giving our services to our country we were animated by patriotism and not by the desire for gain.

"(2) That the effect of such a policy, if adopted, being to add from $400,000,000 to $4,000,000,000 to our national debt, to still further increase taxes and the cost of living, to depress the value of Government bonds, and to seriously handicap our future prosperity, we therefore oppose such efforts as uneconomic and unwise.

"(3) That instead of bonuses given to all we urge the elimination of red tape in the administration of relief to deserving men entitled to compensation.

"(4) That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Senators from Ohio and the Member of Congress from this district, and that it also be presented to the committee on resolutions at the coming State convention, and that the delegates from this post be instructed to use their best efforts to secure the adoption by said convention of resolutions in this sense."

We will be pleased to receive an expression of opinion from you.

Very respectfully,

A. I. HARRINGTON,
Post Commander.

SEPTEMBER 30, 1919.

A. I. HARRINGTON, Esq.,
Post Commander, McVey Post,
Mansfield, Ohio.

DEAR FRIEND: Yours of the 27th received, inclosing copy of resolutions adopted by your post, for which I thank you.

So far as your resolutions relate to the treatment of soldiers at St. Elizabeths, this is the first information I have had to this effect. If the conditions are correctly reported, those in authority should be at once investigated and removed. I will endeavor to stir up some activity along this line.

I think the third "whereas" of your resolutions tells the whole story, and I am glad indeed that your post takes the position it does. I have been known as a friend of the soldier, I believe, and have worked zealously in the interest of liberal pensions for Civil War soldiers, because they are now all old and the great majority in straitened circumstances. I feel that all of the soldiers of the late war who were in any way disabled should be given the most generous and indulgent consideration, but I do feel that those soldiers who are to-day in as good health as they were when they entered the service should not expect the Government to at once begin to give liberal pensions. When the old days or disease come it will be time to then provide for them.

I assure you that I appreciate more than I can say the action taken by your post on this question.

With kind regards, I am,

Very respectfully,

———.

I also desire to have printed in the RECORD the following splendid editorial in the Mansfield (Ohio) News of September 27:

[From Mansfield News, Saturday, Sept. 27, 1919.]

SHOWING A FINE SPIRIT.

It's a fine spirit shown by McVey Post, No. 16, the local organization of the American Legion, which has adopted resolutions in opposition to measures that have been proposed in Congress for the giving of bonuses of from $100 to $1,000 to all service men in the late World War and advising, rather, the elimination of red tape in the administration of relief to deserving men entitled to compensation.

The memorial further states that the men sponsoring it gave their services to their country through patriotic and not through pecuniary motives.

Those resolutions have the right ring.

Every American with red blood in his veins—but included in that category are no profiteers and no war-time holders of bullet-proof jobs at top-notch wages who would now plunge the country into disaster through their greed for more—knows that no monetary consideration can repay the supreme sacrifice of the soldier, no financial remuneration can atone for the permanently crippled body, and that no pay, however great, is to be considered as full equivalent for service of the man who faces death that others may live.

It is entirely fitting that the wealth of the Nation should be drawn upon freely and fully to care for the dependents of slain soldiers, to give to disabled veterans whatever may be needed for their reconstruction, and to place them in position to care for themselves. Neither could too much be done for any and all men of the service, in financial way, in testimonial for their grand work.

But it exalts the opinion of everybody for the stalwart sons of America when those who may have escaped all disabling wounds and weakening disease of war time—even though they may have sacrificed personal interests and ambitions and lost business opportunities—speak out against personal pecuniary award and insist that more and better things be done for those who may have come out of the conflict with disabled bodies and handicapped by debilitating illness.

All glory and credit to such men!

They are made of the same kind of stuff as the men of 1776, the veterans of 1861–1865, and all the heroic soldiers of all of our wars who have bared their breasts in defense of national honor, preservation of the Union, and the dictates of humanity.

They set a splendid example which may well be followed by all citizens, and particularly by those who show disposition to sacrifice everything and everybody in pursuit of their selfish purpose to serve themselves alone even at the sacrifice of the interests of the entire country.

Shame upon those, whoever they may be, who would do aught to injure or destroy that splendid Americanism which is shown by the World War soldiers who are saying, "Don't give bonuses to us, but make greater and more effective the work in behalf of those less fortunate than ourselves, those who may really be in need of assistance."

Let Us Place Country Above Everything Else.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ISAAC SIEGEL,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, September 30, 1919.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, the House has responded to the President's request for legislation which may bring about a reduction in the cost of living by passing the so-called cold-storage bill. I have grave doubts as to whether it will have that effect. If the States adopted similar legislation, it might aid in that direction.

In the midst of plenty our people seem to be filled with the strike fever. The minority everywhere by agitation seems to be capable of bringing that condition about, but everywhere, when our people commence to think, they realize that the need of the hour is the exercise of common sense by both laborer and manufacturer.

Return of the Railroads to Private Ownership.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MARTIN B. MADDEN,
OF ILLINOIS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, September 25, 1919.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, under authority granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the question of the return of the railroads to private ownership I wish to insert my testimony before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, September 5, on H. R. 376, which was introduced by me and intended as an amendment to the proposed railroad legislation, as follows:

"Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I compliment the committee on the patriotic work it is doing and appreciate the difficulties of the task it has before it. I am sure the country generally is watching the work of the committee with a great deal of interest. Everybody in the United States has come to recognize the patriotism of the men who sit on this great committee, their fairness, their Americanism, and their devotion to the enormous tasks that have been imposed upon them by reason of their assignment to this duty.

"My purpose in appearing before the committee this morning is to call your attention to a bill (H. R. 376) which I introduced on May 19, 1919. The bill is an amendment to the act to regulate commerce approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and proposes further to amend the act as follows. I will read the bill into my statement.

"The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

"Mr. MADDEN. Section 1:

"That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any owner, operator, manager, trustee, receiver, or lessee of any transportation system or systems, by land or water routes within the territorial boundaries of the United States of America and engaged in or soliciting interstate commerce under a common control, management, or arrangement, or any servant, employee, or agent of such owner, manager, trustee, receiver, operator, or lessee, or any other person having connection therewith, to deny or to refuse to furnish, by any device or method whatsoever, equal and identical rights, accommodations, and privileges to any person who shall pay, or offer to pay, the uniform charge made for such equal and identical rights, accommodations, and privileges in interstate transportation, when such refusal is on account of the race, color, or previous condition of servitude of the person so applying.

"And it shall hereafter be further unlawful for any owner, operator, manager, lessee, trustee, or receiver of any system or systems of transportation within the territorial boundaries of the United States of America and engaged in or soliciting interstate commerce, or any servant, employee, or agent of such owner, operator, manager, trustee, receiver, or lessee, or any other person connected therewith, to operate upon any part of their transportation system or systems any car, vessel, train of cars, or other conveyance in and upon which any person, being transported to a final destination beyond the boundaries of any State or Territory of the United States of America, or beyond the boundaries of the District of Columbia, and paying, or offering to pay, the uniform charge made for transportation in interstate transportation, shall, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude be separated from any other passenger or be denied equal and identical rights, accommodations and privileges accorded any other passenger paying or offering to pay such uniform charge for interstate transportation, or be permitted to be assaulted, molested, or in any other way injured or oppressed by reason of the exercise of any right herein granted or protected.

"SEC. 2. That any owner, manager, lessee, operator, trustee, or receiver of any system of transportation as set forth in section 1 of this act who shall violate or connive at the violation of any of the provisions of section 1 shall, for each such violation or connivance, forfeit not less than the full sum of $5,000, to be recovered in a proper United States court, in an action on the case, to the use of each person aggrieved by such violation, together with costs and reasonable counsel fees, to be fixed by the trial justice; and all other persons guilty of such violation or participation therein shall, upon conviction in a proper United States court, be fined $1,000, or imprisoned in a Federal prison for one year, or both.

"SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall apply to the interstate operation of transportation systems under Federal control, with like penalties and punishments for its violation.

"SEC. 4. That all acts, parts of acts, statutes, regulations, and orders not in conformity herewith are hereby amended, altered, or repealed.

"It occurred to me, gentlemen of the committee, that while the Congress of the United States is considering the propriety of transferring the railroads back into the hands of the owners under such terms as the committee and the Congress may think proper, it would be entirely appropriate to embody a provision in the legislation which would recognize the equal rights of all American citizens. I have always maintained and I maintain now that the Government has no right to draft its citizens in defense of its flag and compel them to yield up their lives that the country may be able to live, and at the same time say to those people that their rights are inferior to those of other citizens of the United States.

"There has never been a time in all American history when the loyalty of the negro has been called into question. There has never been a struggle either for the liberty of the country or for the protection of its institutions that the people of the Negro race have not in common with the people of every other race joined in the country's defense. We have just closed the greatest war in history; 3,670,000 American citizens were drafted or volunteered for service in the Army, 200,000 in the marines, 560,000 in the Navy, and of the number who served under the colors in defense of America's liberty 367,000 were negroes; 10 per cent of all of the men in the Army.

"Mr. WEBSTER. How many did you say, Mr. MADDEN?

"Mr. MADDEN. Three hundred and sixty-seven thousand.

"The life of the negro is as important to him as the life of any other man, and when he volunteers or is conscripted, with a probability that his life may be yielded up to his country, he has a right to expect his country to be sufficiently appreciative of the sacrifice he makes to do him justice, and unless the Congress does the simple act in its legislation now pending provided for in this bill it will be one more evidence on the part of the Government that the negro need not apply, except in case of need.

"I was over in France. I visited every battle field. I went into every dugout. I saw the wonderful sacrifices made by our men over there, and while I was at Romagne, in the neighborhood of the battle of Argonne-Meuse, in the valley of the Aisne, close to Montfaucon, I saw the most wonderful devotion ever displayed by any people displayed by the negro soldiers. We had 26,000 men killed in that neighborhood. They were buried where they fell in their uniforms, thrown into open trenches, side by side, without any attempt being made to cover them up, except in the uniform they wore, buried under about 2 feet of earth. The War Department at the close of the war decided to establish a national cemetery at Romagne, in which it is proposed to bury all the men who fell in that neighborhood. A cemetery in which about 26,000 of our men had been temporarily buried as they fell in battle was situated at a place called Cunel, about 6 miles away from Romagne. I was there on the day that they began to take up the bodies from the Cunel cemetery after they had been buried three or four months, and I remained to watch the process of removing the bodies. It was a terrible task. The bodies had become putrid, and the stench was almost unbearable, but the negro soldiers who were charged with the task of removing these bodies went forward to the performance of their task with loving hearts and gentle hands, dug the earth from over the remains of the dead soldiers, went into the graves in which they lay, lifted them out tenderly, and placed them on stretchers.

"Four big men had all they could do to carry one of these bodies, which had become much heavier than when placed in the grave on account of the water penetrating the clothing and the putridity of the body itself. They took them up, laid them on a stretcher, threw a piece of tarpaulin over the face, carried them down about 1,000 feet to the roadside, and placed them in pine boxes for burial in the National Cemetery. I have heard about valor, bravery, patriotism, and devotion, but no greater valor or more devoted patriotism was ever displayed by any men than the men who performed this loving task, and they were negroes. They were not removing the bodies of their own men; they were removing the bodies of American soldiers, regardless of their color. It was a terrible job, but they went at it as tenderly as a mother would provide for the care of her new-born babe.

"Will anyone say that men who performed this sort of public duty in the face of the appalling conditions are not entitled to ride on an American train between two American States without having to change cars when they reach the border line of another State? There are 10,000,000 of these people in this country. No one has ever been able to question their loyalty to the Government. They have stood loyal and devoted always. They are entitled to every consideration of the laws that is accorded to every other people. We make no distinction in the travel of the Japanese. If a man of Japanese birth boards a train anywhere in the United States he can ride anywhere else in the United States without being transferred from one car to another at a State border line. If a Chinaman, to whom we refuse to accord citizenship—and in this case the Japanese as well—goes on a train anywhere in the United States he can ride anywhere else in the United States without being compelled to change cars at the border line of a State. If 10,000,000 people, loyal always, devoted, ready to sacrifice their lives whenever need be, shall not be given the consideration for which we have always contended, then it may be truly said that we are not a nation in the sense that we all like to apply it.

"Why should we have segregation and discrimination? Why should not a citizen of the United States, when people who are not eligible to citizenship are permitted to do it, be permitted to participate in the simple privilege of travel? We have no such discrimination in the Northern States. If a man of any other race can go on any train and ride through as many States as he pleases in any coach that he has the money to pay for, provided he is a gentleman and behaves himself, no matter what his color may be, I contend that the 10,000,000 people who have always proved themselves worthy to be drafted into the country's service to defend its rights are entitled to be defended in their rights by the country they have helped to preserve.

"I think that this committee can do no more patriotic service to the people of America, they can do nothing that will bring greater honor to them, than to so draft the law which they are now considering as to prevent forever in the future any discriminatory action in the right of travel as between Americans, for, after all, if we have in America any Americans the Negroes are the Americans. They have been here longer than most of the other races. It is true they did not come here of their own volition, but that is all the more reason why now they should be treated with every consideration.

"They have men among them who have won fame in literature, in art, in letters; they have mechanics, bankers, merchants, lawyers, doctors, farmers, agriculturists—they are engaged in every activity that the other people of America are engaged in and successfully engaged in it. There is less illiteracy among them than in many sections among the white people of the country. They have made the most marvelous advance of any people in all time under all circumstances, and we who are in the majority in this country can afford to be just, for, after all, the exercise of power, unless it is justly exercised, is a menace to those who are affected by it. They are entitled to the protection of every law of the land. They are entitled to every consideration of justice.

"The mere fact that a great many of these people are humble and inconspicuous is no reason why they should not be given the consideration to which they are entitled. Everybody must realize that they are entitled to every consideration that any citizen of the United States is entitled to. No man in the land should be either above or below the law. This should be a nation of laws and not of men. Every man in the land should be subject to every penalty of the law and all the protection of the law. He should be entitled to the protection of the Government under the law. It will not do to say that a man can be made subject to the rigor of the Government in time of the Government's greatest danger, it will not do to say that a man shall be compelled to offer his life in the country's defense, and at the same time say that he is unworthy of consideration in other respects.

"Mr. RAYBURN. Is he not given due consideration in other respects?

"Mr. MADDEN. He is not given due consideration in other respects. He should have the right that anybody else has under every law of the land. Every law of the land should apply equally to every man.

"Mr. RAYBURN. What law does not apply equally?

"Mr. MADDEN. The law of travel does not, for one.

"Mr. RAYBURN. You think not. Where is that?

"Mr. MADDEN. That is everywhere in the South.

"Mr. RAYBURN. They all have the right to ride on the trains.

"Mr. MADDEN. They have the right to ride on the trains, but they are compelled when they get to the border line of another State to retire from the car in which they are riding and to enter such car as may be placed at their disposal.

"Mr. RAYBURN. You are not complaining about their not having the right to ride on the trains, but are complaining about not having the whites and negroes ride in the same car?

"Mr. MADDEN. There ought not to be any special accommodations for any one class that is not furnished all classes. There ought not to be any segregation as between people in a given car.

"Mr. RAYBURN. You want to force the negroes to ride in the cars with the white people when the negroes themselves would rather ride in separate cars than to be mixed up with the white people?

"Mr. MADDEN. I deny that the negroes themselves would rather be in separate cars.

"Mr. RAYBURN. I deny that you understand the negro.

"Mr. MADDEN. Of course, that is the contention of the gentleman, that nobody understands the negro except the people who live in a certain section of the United States. My contention is not for the negro as such, but it is for Americans as Americans. I maintain that every citizen of the United States ought to have equal rights under the law.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. You understand, Mr. MADDEN, that the white man is prohibited from riding in the negro coach?

"Mr. MADDEN. He does that as a matter of choice, of course. I do not think the gentleman would deny that.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. You understand that the law prohibits the white man from riding in the negro coach?

"Mr. MADDEN. I understand that. That is in order to prohibit the negro from riding in the coach where the white man is, of course.

"Mr. DEWALT. May I ask you a question, Mr. MADDEN?

"Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

"Mr. DEWALT. We have in the regulation of traffic two authorities, one the Federal authority and the other the State authority, which is exclusive with reference to intrastate commerce, that is, travel within the State.

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. DEWALT. We have also the situation that the United States Government has no police power except that which was granted to it by the States, and all other police powers not granted to the Federal Government are reserved by the States. With those two items let us come to a conclusion if we can. In the first place, if it is true that intrastate traffic is subject to regulation of the respective States, and if it be true that the Federal Government has no police power except the powers granted to it by the States, and that all other police powers not having been granted are reserved to the States themselves, how can you consistently say that it lies within the power of the Federal Government to nullify those two propositions?

"Mr. MADDEN. Well, I might ask the gentleman a question.

"Mr. DEWALT. Perhaps you had better answer my question first.

"Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question as a lawyer, and then perhaps he can answer his own question.

"Mr. DEWALT. All right.

"Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania contend that a passenger entering a coach in Pennsylvania for transportation to Birmingham, Ala., should be compelled by any law of any State to retire from the car in which he began his journey, assuming that that car was going all the way through to Birmingham?

"Mr. DEWALT. No; but I contend this, Mr. MADDEN, that whilst it is true that a passenger who buys his ticket, such passenger being a negro, in Philadelphia for Birmingham, Ala., is really an interstate passenger, and the company that carries him is engaged in interstate traffic, and that the Federal authorities would have the right to say that the companies thus engaged in carrying that passenger are subject to such regulation as the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Federal Congress might provide, nevertheless I do say, as a lawyer, that the State authority, to wit, the State of Alabama, to which the passenger was destined, would have the right under the police powers of the State to say that when he got to the edge of Alabama he could be requested and compelled to vacate the car in which he then was and take a car provided for him according to the regulations of that State.

"Mr. MADDEN. I know; but the gentleman will not contend, as a good lawyer—and I know he is a good lawyer—that it is within the power of the State to say to the Federal Government that the Federal Government has no power to regulate travel in interstate commerce.

"Mr. DEWALT. No; I do not go as far as that.

"Mr. MADDEN. I maintain that when the Government of the United States, speaking now of the authority of Congress under the commerce clause of the Constitution, says that travel shall be equal, without discrimination, without separate facilities, that it is not within the power of any State in the land to say to the contrary when the passenger is traveling between one State and another. In intrastate travel I concede the right of the State to say what the conditions of travel shall be, but immediately the passenger gets beyond the boundaries of the State on a passage that involves the transportation beyond the boundaries of that State, and enters another State, I maintain that it is within the power, and only within the power, of the Government of the United States to say what the conditions of travel shall be, and that no State in the Union has the right to interfere.

"Mr. SIMS. If a colored man is traveling and within a coach where he receives just as good service and just exactly the same service as the white people, but it is in a coach set apart for colored people to ride in, and he wants to leave that coach and go into the coach where the white people are riding, is he not in effect discriminating against his own race by his action of wanting to travel by preference with the white people, when they both have the same service and accommodations?

"Mr. MADDEN. If we go on the assumption that the bill proposes to go on, there would not be any separate coaches, and the condition the gentleman from Tennessee describes would not exist.

"Mr. SIMS. Would it not seem that people of the same race would want to travel together? When a white man wants to leave a white coach to go into a colored coach he expresses a preference for colored company, and when a colored man wants to leave the colored coach and go into the white coach, does he not by his action show discrimination against his own race?

"Mr. MADDEN. But why do you raise the color question?

"Mr. SIMS. You are raising it.

"Mr. MADDEN. The only reason the bill raises it is that discrimination already exists against the colored race when it does not exist against the Chinaman or against the Japanese.

"Mr. SIMS. There are some things that we would like to change, but can not, in the very nature of things——

"Mr. MADDEN. But we have the power to change it.

"Mr. SIMS. In Chicago does a first-class hotel take colored people indiscriminately and put them on the same floors with white people?

"Mr. MADDEN. I do not run a hotel in Chicago, and I do not know what they do.

"Mr. SIMS. Oh, I know, but you are a man of information, Mr. MADDEN.

"Mr. MADDEN. I know this much, that in the State of Illinois, in the State of Indiana, in the State of Michigan, in the State of Wisconsin, in the State of Pennsylvania, in the State of New York, in the State of Massachusetts, in the State of Connecticut, in the State of Vermont, and other States, if a man travels on an interstate ticket from any one of those States, or through all of those States, he can not be disturbed in the position he occupies in a coach which he entered until he reaches his destination.

"Mr. SIMS. I think Congress has power——

"Mr. MADDEN. There is no doubt about that.

"Mr. SIMS. I think Congress has the power to do the very thing you want, but I am speaking about the action of the colored people in avoiding their own kind and discriminating against their own color. If they prefer to travel with other people than their own race, then they are discriminating against themselves. You speak of the white people discriminating, but in that case the colored people do it themselves.

"Mr. MADDEN. We do not have any trouble about that. We do not find any difficulty in getting along under that situation. I have been traveling back and forth over the various States of the North for years and years and years. I have occasionally found a black man in a sleeping car and a black woman in a sleeping car, and I find that they get along very well with the people of other races. I find there is nobody objecting to them being there, and there is no discrimination in having a separate coach for them.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Do you not know that that condition exists in the South to-day with regard to buying a Pullman ticket from points in the South to points in the North?

"Mr. MADDEN. I do not know that it does, but if I knew it obtained universally I would not be here contending for what I am contending for.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. If you do not know that that is the condition, then you do not know why you introduced this bill.

"Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes; I know why I introduced this bill; at least I think I do.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. As a matter of fact, the last time I came up from New Orleans I was told that there was a colored man in the sleeper ahead of me all the way from New Orleans to Washington and beyond.

"Mr. MADDEN. I am glad to hear that. I am quite sure that the governor would get along very well with anybody anywhere.

"The CHAIRMAN. This same matter was brought up in 1902, in the Fifty-sixth Congress, by a bill introduced by Congressman Morrell, of Pennsylvania. One of the witnesses who appeared before this committee in the support of that bill was George White, a Member of Congress from the State of North Carolina.

"Mr. MADDEN. I recall that, Mr. Chairman.

"The CHAIRMAN. White was a colored man.

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

"The CHAIRMAN. He was the last negro Representative that ever sat in the House. He testified that he was down in the State of Georgia at one time and wished to take a trip to come to Washington, and that he was not permitted under the laws of Georgia to buy a Pullman ticket; that they would not sell Pullman tickets to the Negro race in the State of Georgia. So he had to sit up at night until 3 o'clock in the morning, until they crossed the North Carolina line, before he could get a Pullman berth. That was in 1902. I do not know whether the statute of Georgia with reference to selling Pullman tickets has been changed since that, but that was the law at that time.

"Mr. MADDEN. That is a condition that should not exist. Here was a man who was elected to the Congress of the United States, with equal rights to pass the laws for all the people of the United States, and the authorities of a single State were able to say to him, to humiliate him and say that he could not come to Washington in a Pullman in order to discharge his duties; that he could not come to Washington in the manner in which he should have been permitted to come.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisana. Do you think that your bill, if Congress should pass it, could interfere with purely intrastate traffic?

"Mr. MADDEN. No; I do not make any such contention.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Your contention has to do with the man who buys an interstate ticket?

"Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. And that is as far as your bill would go?

"Mr. MADDEN. Surely. I do not pretend to say that Congress can control the police powers of a State within its own borders.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Suppose a man buys a ticket in one State and crosses the border line into another State. Does he not become amenable to the police regulations of that State with regard to segregation, health, quarantine, etc.

"Mr. MADDEN. I do not think the State should have the right to refuse to sell him a ticket for the accommodations that they are offering to their other passengers if the destination of a proposed purchaser of a ticket is beyond the State line in which he has attempted to buy it.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. But as soon as he crosses the border of a State, does not any passenger, white or black, or any other color, come at once under the jurisdiction of the police regulations of the State which he enters?

"Mr. MADDEN. I assume if he violated any law within the State he would be subjected to punishment by the State authorities; but if he was behaving himself as a gentleman should, and violating no law, then it would not be within the right of the State—it might be within the power of the State, but it would not be within the right of the State—to treat that man as if he were a criminal.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Suppose he is violating some police regulation, irrespective of color. Isn't he subject to the police regulation of the State and amenable to the laws of that State?

"Mr. MADDEN. I maintain it is not within the power of the State to make police regulations that are in contravention of the law of the land. If the Government of the United States has power to pass law, it has equal power to enforce the law and to protect its citizens under that law wherever they may be——

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. I grant that. We are talking about the law.

"Mr. MADDEN. I am talking about the law.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Isn't everybody obliged to obey the police regulations of the State in which he resides?

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. And if it is the law——

"Mr. MADDEN. The State can have no law that will set aside the Federal law. The gentleman assumes the State has such power.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. No; I do not assume anything. I have asked you whether he would be subject to the laws and would have to obey the laws irrespective of color, previous condition of servitude, or anything else. Isn't everybody obliged to obey the law?

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I think he would be obliged to obey the law, of course, if the law was not in conflict with the law that gives him the right to travel.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Then he would have to obey the law. I do not say act; I say law. If it is the law of the land, doesn't it bear equally upon all?

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. And that is what you are contending for?

"Mr. MADDEN. Surely; but the law of a State in contravention of the law of the land is a different proposition.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. That is where we get into a very serious constitutional question as to whether the law of the land stops at the boundary of the States. That is not for you and me to decide. That is a question for the Supreme Court of the United States.

"Mr. MADDEN. We will not make any progress in such a discussion as this. I came here to present the reasons why this legislation should be enacted.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Do I understand you to favor the abolition of what is commonly known as segregation of the races in separate coaches?

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. You are in favor of that?

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Do you favor all other segregation of the races which have grown up either by custom or by law?

"Mr. MADDEN. I favor equal opportunity for every citizen of the United States under every law of the land.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. That is not answering my question, Mr. MADDEN.

"Mr. MADDEN. Why not?

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. I asked you if you were in favor or are you against segregation of the races that has grown up in this country through custom, habit, and law?

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I am against it.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. You are against all of it?

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. You do not believe that the negro has any rights at all that the white man must respect?

"Mr. MADDEN. I think every right accorded to one citizen under the law of the land should be accorded to every other citizen.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. In my State we have a very heavy negro population, and we set aside separate coaches for the negroes to ride in. We keep the white people out of those coaches under our law.

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I know that.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Would you be opposed to that or in favor of it?

"Mr. MADDEN. Of course I am opposed to it or I would not be for this bill.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. You said that we people down South did not seem to know much about the negro. We rather think we do.

"Mr. MADDEN. I did not say that. You have said that.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. You answered Mr. RAYBURN just now to that effect?

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Down where we live we believe, and we think we know something about the Negro race, that they prefer separate accommodations.

"Mr. MADDEN. Of course I do not know what they prefer down there, but I do not think any man will prefer to be distinctively set apart and only used when his Government needs him as gun fodder and never given any privileges which he has the right to exercise as a citizen.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Our negroes down South know that they are not welcome in the white man's coach, and they do not want to go in there.

"Mr. MADDEN. That is their business, of course.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Any more than the white man knows that he is not welcome in the negro coach, and he does not want to go in there.

"Mr. MADDEN. I do not know as to that.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. You admit that the overwhelming majority of the negroes live in the South?

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I admit that.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. You admit there is nothing in the law of the land, either State or National, which makes them live in the South?

"Mr. MADDEN. No; and a good many of them are moving away.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. And a good many of them are coming back all the time.

"Mr. MADDEN. A good many are making efforts to bring them back after they have moved away, but without success.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. They are moving away and coming back. And in spite of the fact that they are moving away, the overwhelming majority of the Negro race to-day lives in the South.

"Mr. MADDEN. Of course; everybody admits that.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. And they live there under the laws and conditions that exist.

"Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes; but they can not get away.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Why can't they get away?

"Mr. MADDEN. Those that can get away are getting away.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. There is not a negro to-day in the South who can't get away if he wants to get away.

"Mr. MADDEN. He can get away if he has means.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. They have the means. And, if they have not the means, there are plenty of people in other States who will furnish them transportation to get away.

"Mr. MADDEN. I don't know about that.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. You ought to know about it.

"Mr. MADDEN. I don't know about it.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. If you are employing labor, you ought to know about it.

"Mr. MADDEN. We do not have any trouble about labor. We do not import labor, and we do not pretend to go out and subsidize labor. We take the labor that comes along.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. As a matter of fact, if you keep up with current affairs, and I know that you do, you know there has been for years an effort to get the negro to move from the South to the North.

"Mr. MADDEN. During the war, of course, conditions were such industrially that we had to make war supplies. A number of men were taken out of industry in the North, and that required them to come from other sections where they were not engaged in making war supplies, and where they could not make them; and I suppose there was an effort made to bring a great many negroes from the South to the North.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. You speak about the war, but don't you remember the great exodus of the late seventies?

"Mr. MADDEN. Every once in a while people move from the South to the North. They are moving from the South toward the North as fast as they can, because industrial conditions are much better and they are treated more like men.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Notwithstanding the exodus that began in the late seventies, and that has been going on ever since until a few months ago, still the overwhelming majority of the negroes live in the South.

"Mr. MADDEN. Still, I do not know what that has got to do with the bill. Even if they live in the South, they ought to be treated like the people who live in the North.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. They are.

"Mr. MADDEN. I am glad to hear you say that, but I doubt it.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. They are treated a great deal better in my section of the country than they were recently treated in Chicago, where you live.

"Mr. MADDEN. Of course, the Chicago situation was one of those unfortunate things that nobody could account for. It has happened here, there, and everywhere. Nobody knows what brings it about; nobody can tell. I deplore it.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. They are treated better in my section of the country than they were in East St. Louis, another city in your State.

"Mr. MADDEN. There was another case that can not be explained.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. They are treated better in my community than they were treated in Springfield a few years ago, the capital of your State.

"Mr. MADDEN. Those things have nothing whatever to do with the merits of the bill that I am proposing.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. They have everything to do with it, in my opinion.

"Mr. MADDEN. No; not anything to do with it.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. In other words, you bring in a bill here which, in effect, would force the negro into social equality with the whites, something that the very best thought of the negro race does not want.

"Mr. MADDEN. I am bringing a bill here to give the negro, as a citizen of the United States, the same privileges under the Government under which he lives as are given citizens of other races.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. No; you do not. You bring in a bill to force the negro to ride in the white man's coach, and force the white man to ride in the negro's coach, irrespective of the wishes and desires of either race.

"Mr. MADDEN. That condition already exists everywhere in the United States except in a few States.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. It exists everywhere in the United States except where the overwhelming majority of the Negro race lives.

"Mr. MADDEN. I want to see the laws of the United States uniform in their treatment of all citizens of the United States.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. I beg your pardon. You did not want to see them so applied very recently.

"Mr. MADDEN. I do.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. But you did not. You absolutely opposed prohibition, which we made uniform throughout the United States.

"Mr. MADDEN. I was opposed to it, but I want the laws made uniform throughout the United States.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Yes; you wanted them uniformly wet, because you voted wet.

"Mr. MADDEN. I voted wet.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Then you wanted them to be uniformly wet.

"Mr. MADDEN. I voted wet.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. And you wanted to force us in my country to be wet.

"Mr. MADDEN. You wanted the people in our country to be dry.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Yes; and we have forced you to be dry.

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes; and that being true, right from the logic of your own reasoning, you can not take away the rights of these people; you can not deny the rights of these people——

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. We forced both white and black to be dry.

"Mr. MADDEN. Then you can not deny the rights of these people to equal treatment in travel.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. We are not denying them any rights.

"Mr. MADDEN. You deny them the equal right of travel. The very statement you have made commits you to the justice of the proposition presented in this bill.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. You were not in favor of uniform laws on the prohibition question.

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I am in favor of uniform laws.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. But you absolutely opposed that proposition.

"Mr. MADDEN. You are mistaken about that. I deny the right of the gentleman to make that statement. I have my views as to what the uniform laws should be, and the gentleman has his views as to what the uniform laws should be. Now, the mere fact that the gentleman was on one side of the case and I was on the other is no evidence that either one of us was opposed to uniformity of law.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. I understand that you are in favor of uniform wet laws throughout the country.

"Mr. MADDEN. That has nothing to do with this case. I do not think the gentleman has any right to interrogate me along this line.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. I have the right not only to interrogate you on this bill, but I have the right, and it is my duty, to find out your viewpoint on all these questions, so as to make up my mind as to the underlying motive of the bill.

"Mr. MADDEN. The underlying motive of the bill is just what I have said it is. I have expressed my view, and I do not think anybody will have much doubt as to what the gentleman's views are.

"Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Not the slightest in the world.

"Mr. RAYBURN. Do you believe in absolute equality between the races as far as travel is concerned?

"Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. RAYBURN. Do you believe in absolute social equality in everything, social and otherwise, between the whites and the blacks?

"Mr. MADDEN. I believe the races can settle the question of their own social affairs, and that they will settle their own social affairs to their own satisfaction. This is not a social function. This is a public function performed by the common carriers of the United States, and as common carriers the question of social rating does not enter into their functions.

"Mr. RAYBURN. Well, it is the very meat of what you have been talking about. You are forcing them to ride in the same coach, whether they want to or not.

"Mr. MADDEN. They do it now everywhere except in a few States.

"Mr. RAYBURN. I understand, and I know the sections of the country where they do not ride in the same coach. But you are forcing them on equality, social and otherwise. Do you believe in social equality between the races in all things?

"Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman understands what my position is.

"Mr. RAYBURN. I have never heard the gentleman state.

"Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman has just heard me state it. That is a question now that does not enter into this contention.

"Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman refuses to answer the question?

"Mr. MADDEN. I have answered it. Mr. Chairman, there are three or four people here who will take up but a very short time before the committee. I would like to remain, but it is necessary for me to take a train to New York.

"The CHAIRMAN. We would like very much to have this matter concluded this morning, because there are other out-of-town witnesses who will appear this afternoon.

"Mr. MADDEN. I desire to thank the committee very much for its courteous hearing and trust that when the railroad legislation now under consideration is formulated it will contain the provision embraced in the bill I have been discussing.

"As the proponent of this legislation and member of that party which, through the exercise of the collective wisdom of the Nation, has become the dominant power in our legislative branch, the splendid example of that party as a minority group in submerging party interests in nationalism may well find an equally splendid parallel from the minority group in postwar legislation. We abandoned our traditional policy of international isolation as a war measure in order that we might present with our gallant allies closed ranks to a common enemy of freedom. As a result America has become a world power with all the responsibilities and dangers which such a position entails. We gave the best blood and treasure of our Nation, black blood and white, to confer upon the peoples of Europe freedom from the ruthless, crushing, soul-deadening blight of "kultur." I take it that it will require no great sacrifice for us to lay down our prejudices in order that the peoples of our own country shall be made politically free. We have vanquished the enemy in the field of force; we have yet to vanquish him in the more subtle field of government. He is at our throats with his insidious, pernicious doctrines. He is ready to seize upon those phases of our national life which most logically offer points of attack, opening dangerous salients and trusting thereby to weaken with one stroke our position in international politics and destroy our internal political cohesiveness.

"Our most adequate weapon of defense is our Americanism; an Americanism which knows no man politically by the color of his skin or the race of his forbears; an Americanism which puts the ideals of his country above his personal prejudices; an Americanism which does not corrupt the pure stream of our national life by the enactment of social theories, in which every man is admittedly a law unto himself, into public statutes."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES R. EVANS,
OF NEVADA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, October 1, 1919.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, House bill 9521 is supported by men who hire fine writers and keen lawyers, the expense of which is charged to advertising, and is justified by what they would term good business, which seems the inspiration of this measure that it will promote trade. The American public upon whom is designed shall consume the food are lulled into the delusion that Congress has taken steps to protect them against deleterious and decaying fruits and vegetables, while the sole object is to build up trade.

We have had periods of time in our national life when laws sanctioned and protected what were termed necessary evils; a few of those evils have just been found unnecessary and relegated to history. It will be safe to call cold-storage food a necessary evil; but, gentlemen, where whisky has slain hundreds, cold-storage food will lay thousands in a place that is ever green.

Why can not we plan good health instead of good business; substitute simple living for strife of traffic? Who can find in this bill where anyone has sought to breathe humanity into its provisions? It is time that we consider measures for protection of physical and mental vigor, instead of stubbornness of purpose to propose enactments stimulating intensity of trade. There is no further time to admonish against the danger to health always lurking in aged food, but if my words will cause some persons to exercise the care of caution and convince them that this bill is not meant to protect but to promote, my words will not have been in vain.

Cold-Storage Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. J. CHARLES LINTHICUM,
OF MARYLAND,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 3, 1919.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the passage of this bill to prevent hoarding, deterioration of and deception with respect to cold-storage foods, and to regulate their shipments in commerce. There is no question which confronts the world to-day which more closely touches the people in respect to their comfort and convenience than the question of the high cost of food products.

We have endeavored by previous legislation to prevent profiteering and the hoarding of those things so essential to life. Provision has been made for the punishment of those guilty of such acts. To-day we consider an act which I believe will tend largely toward the better distribution of food products by preventing their hoarding in cold-storage warehouses. We will at the same time benefit the health of our people by preventing these goods from remaining in cold storage for an unlimited time, and thereby becoming unwholesome, unhealthy, and injurious to the human system. The bill will enable persons to ascertain when the particular article was placed in cold storage and thereby better judge as to whether it is wholesome food.

We must not forget, however, that we can not legislate cheap food during these times. We can by proper legislation, such as we have been passing, control the distribution of food and make it more equable throughout the country. We can punish profiteers and hoarders of food and thereby eliminate that willful class of our citizens. We can prevent the hoarding of food in cold storage for too long a period, to its injury and loss. There are other elements which enter into the high cost of food which we can not legislate out of existence. We must realize that several millions of our people have been taken from the producing class during the last few years to fight for their country and to produce those things necessary to win the war. We know that many people formerly producing food products felt it their duty to enter the large cities of our country and to give their time, attention, and labor to the production of those things necessary to carry on the war to a successful conclusion. Since the signing of the armistice the soldiers have been demobilized as fast as it is possible. Many of those who entered the cities for work have returned to their homes in the country, but there is a vast number of our people who, though discharged from the Army, have not as yet had time to enter again upon their previous work of producing. Many of those who entered the large cities have found the life congenial, have made new friends, and are remaining in those places, thereby becoming consumers and not producers.

The great question of supply and demand must eventually solve the question of high cost of living. I believe that as soon as our country settles down again and can produce as it did prior to the war we shall find food products tumbling in price. We must not, however, look for food products at prewar prices, not because the production will not be large but because the purchasing value of the dollar has been cut in two and the dollar only purchases to-day what 50 cents purchased prior to the war. This is not alone the condition in our country, but throughout the world. Governments are prosecuting hoarders and profiteers for their wrongful acts in holding up the cost of food beyond a reasonable profit. In France, England, and Germany, which it has been my pleasure to visit in search of information as to conditions that I might use as a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, I found prices exceedingly high. I say "prices" were high; perhaps, however, it would be more accurate to say money was low. In France the franc had dropped from its original value of 19 cents to 12 cents; in Germany the mark had dropped from its value of 25 cents to about 5 cents; and in England the shilling from its original value of 24 cents to 21 cents. I am estimating these values in American money, and when you realize that the American dollar has depreciated in purchasing value to half its original worth, we can at once see the real value of money and why prices appear so high.

There is another element which enters largely into the cost of food products, clothing, and so forth. Just so long as our laboring people—the workers and producers, the corner stone of all industry—are discontented and strikes prevail, just so long must we expect high prices. The unsettled conditions of a vast proportion of our population naturally affect the producing in its every branch. The agitation by certain statesmen against the ratification of the peace treaty is largely responsible for the unsettled condition of our population. When once we can dispose of the peace treaty and allow the minds of our people to revert to peaceful pursuits, then shall our producers go to work with an energy and a zeal to produce more food products, more clothing, blankets, and all those things which go to make up the necessaries and comforts of life. There must be a cooperation on the part of our people to reduce the cost of living. I am told by the slaughterhouse people of my city that a quantity of meat not of the very best cuts goes to waste because the people do not want the cheap cuts any longer. We must find a way to profitably use this part of the slaughtered meat so that it will be not only cheaper food but that it will be just as palatable and nutritious as the finer and more expensive cuts. The experienced cooks of the land must solve this question.

I have always believed that the practice of England of keeping some essential food product cheap went a long way toward reducing the cost of all other food products. If we could in some manner by governmental purchases or otherwise make the cost of bread lower other food products would necessarily become cheaper, because our people would purchase more bread than they would the other products if it were cheaper and just as wholesome. England kept her bread at a reasonable price, and all other food products clustered around in price, so that the cost of living did not soar.

I am a strong believer in the education of our girls in housekeeping and in teaching them more about how to conduct a home and purchase the food than to teach them Latin and Greek—dead languages which they will never need—or some other subject equally as useless to them. Under present changed conditions it will be found that it is just as essential that the girls should have an education in how to conduct a home, how to prepare the food, how to make purchases, how to keep accounts, as it is that the boys should be taught trades and professions. The women do the vast amount of purchasing for the homes of our land, $9,000,000,000 being spent by them each year in providing the home and the comforts thereof. To do this they should be educated along the line which will best fit them to perform it most economically and well. I am glad that many of our schools—and public schools in particular—are devoting considerable time to teaching home economics. They do not, however, go far enough. They do not teach sufficiently the various degrees of nutrition of different foods. The girls are not sufficiently taught home bookkeeping and the purchasing of foods. They should be more largely taught how to prepare food for home consumption than they are at this time. If they are fortunate enough not to be compelled to do it, they will be prepared to superintend it. When the young man marries, he should have the same guaranty that his wife knows how to conduct the home as she demands that he should know how to conduct his business and provide money upon which to live. The women have always helped us solve our problems, and I am sure they will do it in this.

If we will but cooperate in the reduction of the cost of living and reduction of waste from various sources, we will have gone a long way toward reducing high prices so far as they concern us. I am glad our people are awake to the danger of high cost of living, the most serious question before the country, the solution of which will dispel strikes and all disquietude throughout the land. We have a great country, wonderfully productive, the admiration of the world. There is an abundance for all. By wise legislation and cooperation we shall again reach the contentment and abundance which prevailed before the World War.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GUY E. CAMPBELL,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, October 4, 1919.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in connection with current discussions of industrial unrest and the rights of labor, and the widespread controversy over the question of whether or not police officers or other public officials whose sworn duty it is to uphold the law should affiliate with any federation or association which approves the strike as one of its tenets, I desire to call the attention of the House to a unique organization formed in the city of Pittsburgh, which, to my mind, successfully answers that question so far as police officers are concerned.

I refer to the Fraternal Order of Police, which had its origin in Pittsburgh, Pa., on May 14, 1915. It is an organization strictly of police officers which since that time has spread to 20 other cities and now has a membership including a preponderant majority of the police of Pittsburgh, Scranton, Erie, Altoona, Reading, Wilkes-Barre, Harrisburg, York, Lancaster, the Beaver Valley, Easton, Chester, Bethlehem, Hazelton, New Castle, and Greensburg, Pa.; Detroit, Mich.; Fort Wayne, Ind.; Youngstown, Ohio; and Jamestown, N. Y.

This organization, the Fraternal Order of Police, is not inimical to the public interest, does not indorse police strikes, and has the approval, active indorsement, and friendship of the present and former mayors of the city of Pittsburgh and numerous other public officials in the cities where it is represented. In order that Members of Congress may be fully informed of its history, purposes, and achievements, I present herewith a brief statement prepared by the officers of the order, as follows:

The Fraternal Order of Police was organized at Pittsburgh, Pa., May 14, 1915, its object being to better existing conditions of policemen, to create harmony and social welfare among all its members, to weld together a feeling of friendship whereby each one will render assistance to a brother in time of sickness or distress, to be fair and truthful in all their dealings with their fellow men, to teach and practice that which is honorable and just, to bear in mind that intelligence, industry, and moral worth is the true standard of greatness, to promote the facilities for mutual interchange of thought whereby the ideas, information, and experience of each becomes common to all, resulting in a higher development of our intellectual, moral, and social faculties that enables us to share in the gains and honors of advancing civilization, to hold sacred the trust and confidence placed in them by those whose lives and property it is their duty to safeguard, to instill efficiency and discipline into the minds of the men in whose hands lies the happiness and welfare of a nation.

There are many organizations in existence to-day who through the above teachings have cemented together a feeling of friendship and brotherly love which reaches out into all corners of this land of liberty made possible by unity, a feeling which prompts them to extend the hand of friendship and jealously guard the happiness and welfare of each other.

The Fraternal Order of Police is a national organization, and it is this feeling that they hope to instill into the minds of those men comprising the various police divisions of this Nation, to draw them together in unity whereby the interest of one will become the interest of all to install lodges in the various municipalities of this country by which the policemen while traveling in other cities may visit their lodges and receive the mark of friendship as in other fraternities, to eliminate the feeling of prejudice which ofttimes exists between police of neighboring towns through which the criminal many times escape, defeating the ends of [illegible]

The Fraternal Order of Police in its present youthful state has done much to improve the working conditions of the policeman; it has promoted efficiency and discipline and wonderfully increased the feeling of harmony and sociability among all those with its jurisdiction; it has succeeded in passing through the State Legislature of Pennsylvania, as well as through municipal councils, laws which greatly improve their working conditions as well as rendering their service more valuable to the public. We are not affiliated with any other organization and have no grievance committees.

That ends the statement of the character of this organization as set forth by its own members.

Copies of the foregoing presentation have been placed in the hands of Maj. Raymond W. Pullman, superintendent of police for the District of Columbia, and distributed to police and public officials in many of the large cities of the United States. It was issued primarily in response to an invitation from the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce and other civic bodies, at the time of the Boston police strike, calling on the police of Pittsburgh to define their affiliations. Their statement has proven satisfactory to all of these bodies and unquestionably will be approved by any fair-minded citizen or official who reads it.

Illustrating the loyalty and good citizenship of the Fraternal Order of Police as expressed through the action of its officers, I quote a letter addressed under date of September 20, 1919, to all officers and members of subordinate lodges of the order by the president and treasurer of the grand lodge:

SEPTEMBER 20, 1919.

To the officers and members of subordinate lodges of the Fraternal Order of Police.

DEAR SIRS AND BROTHERS: The executive officers of the grand lodge advise that the members of our order use every means within their power to uphold and enforce the laws of the Nation, State, and municipality at this time of unrest in our country, as we are obligated by our oath as police officers to enforce the laws impartially under all circumstances.

We do not feel as though it is necessary to remind you of your duty, but owing to existing conditions we feel it is our duty as your duly elected officers to call the above to your attention.

We all know the eyes of the Nation are on the police officer at this time and his actions and works will be noted the world over.

Let us make an impression that will be lasting and a credit to our organization for all time.

Fraternally, yours,

W. J. MILTON, Grand President.
P. E. DIXON, Grand Treasurer.

When a Senate committee was investigating the Boston police strike it was testified by labor leaders that if the police of that and other cities did not join the American Federation of Labor there "would be no place for them to go but to the I. W. W." I do not indorse that sentiment nor concur with that view. I have only the kindliest feelings for the American Federation of Labor and men who, like President Samuel Gompers and Secretary Frank Morrison, have by their caution, conservatism, and common sense, coupled with their splendid public service during the war, earned both the confidence and lasting gratitude of the country at large. But on the question of police affiliation I desire to cite the Fraternal Order of Police, a "going concern" with a larger police membership than any other organization of its kind, not affiliated with any labor organization, and thereby not subject to criticism from those who object to such affiliation by public officers, as clearly providing a haven for police officers seeking an expression for their ambition to fraternize for the good of the individual and the community. That is the place for them to go. I am convinced that no municipal official scrutinizing the objects and purposes of the Fraternal Order of Police could find cause for objecting to the affiliation of the police of any city with it.

Emphasizing the approval of Pittsburgh officials I quote the following letters addressed to the officers and members of the Fratenal Order of Police by Mayor E. V. Babcock and former Mayor Joseph G. Armstrong, the latter of whom has been called the "father of the organization":

CITY OF PITTSBURGH, PA.,
September 25, 1919.

MY DEAR SIR: Let me congratulate you and Secretary Dixon for your commendable step in issuing your letter of September 23, 1919, copy of which was sent me relative to the patriotic position held by your organization. The sentiments therein expressed tally closely with those which you outlined to me during our recent conversation regarding the attitude your organization takes as a fraternal body, whose members are pledged to do their duty in the enforcement of law.

Be assured, Mr. President, that you and your organization have the full confidence of the mayor of the city of Pittsburgh.

Very respectfully, yours,

E. V. BABCOCK, Mayor.

Mr. LOUIS LEIBOLD,
President Fraternal Order of Police, Pittsburgh, Pa.

MAYOR'S OFFICE,
Pittsburgh, Pa., July 24, 1917.

To the Officers and Members of the Fraternal Order of Police, Pittsburgh, Pa.

GENTLEMEN: I wish to congratulate you upon the manner in which you have associated yourselves together for the purpose of placing the police officer in the position which he is entitled to hold in life. The boys who wear the civic uniform were more or less looked down upon by the public for many years, because their work was not understood or appreciated. Your organization, its fraternal meetings and proceedings, especially your considerate and charitable treatment of those who have needed a helping hand in their performance of duty, have been a great factor in bringing your bureau in this city to its present high standing.

It should be a matter of pride with your members, as it should also be with the public, that Pittsburgh's police compare favorably with those of any city in this country. I believe this condition has been largely brought about by cooperation and good fellowship between officers and men, and a better understanding with the public resulting from the efforts and activities of your association. In addition to increasing public confidence in the force, promoting fraternity and good feeling among your members, inspiring all to more zealous and earnest work, your organization has been able to exercise a strong influence with the legislature in obtaining the necessary and merited recognition for your police pension fund. This is desirable for the reason that local authorities often fail to grasp the importance of reasonably providing for the men in your ranks performing dangerous and disagreeable duties. The same may be said in reference to numerous other advantages you have secured through the council and mayor of the city in recognition of the usefulness of your organization.

While I was impressed at the inception of your association, with its purposes and objects and its prospect of doing much good, I am now, when nearing the end of my official term, thoroughly convinced of its utility to the members and the public, and that it promotes efficiency and good work in all directions. This being the case, your organization will be in a position to obtain just recognition of your claims from time to time from those in authority.

As the mayor of the city of Pittsburgh, I wish to extend my heartiest congratulations for what you have already done, and my best wishes for the growth and prosperity of your association to the point where it meets my expectations; that is, that the police force would deserve and obtain the same respect as is granted to our Army and Navy officers, and for the same reason, that their lives are devoted to the safety and protection of the people.

Respectfully, yours, JOSEPH G. ARMSTRONG, Mayor.

America's Legions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT,
OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 6, 1919.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following extracts from a newspaper account of an address to the Nation's soldiers delivered by myself at Marysville, Pa., September 27, 1919:

On last Saturday the citizens of Marysville and surrounding townships gave a monster patriotic reception to the soldiers of all our wars. In fact, the exercises extended over Saturday and Sunday the 27th and 28th. The event was similar to those held in almost every town and community in the country, and reflected in the arrangements and united patriotic interest of the people the nationalism of the masses who constitute the bulwark of the Republic.

Congressman BENJAMIN K. FOCHT was invited to speak on the occasion, and came from Washington for that purpose. His remarks are, in part, as follows:

"We rejoice over the fact that on this occasion we celebrate victory and not defeat. Some of the flower of the young manhood of Marysville was left to sleep under the sods of France, and to them we send a message of love and deathless adoration, but there is no gloom here, for the sacrifice was made for a noble, holy cause. And so we to-day rejoice and do not sorrow, we exult and acclaim the triumph of right before which tears and shadows must vanish.

"This day we are overwhelmed with things we are proud of and thankful for.

"We find America still favored as no other land and to be more than ever the land of destiny.

"This occasion may never have its counterpart, for one of the prime objects of crossing the s[illegible] to fight and win battles, was to end war as the arbiter of men's quarrels and the differences between nations.

"Therefore the welcome accorded you soldiers to-day and the honors which are justly and proudly yours, can never again fall to other men, for by achievements of unparalleled glory you have stricken dead for all time the consuming monster war.

"Soldiers stand apart from other men, and must be honored and held distinctive, for they took the chance of the supreme sacrifice. You young men taught the world a new lesson in warfare, an entirely new thrill in armed conflict.

"At the battle of Wargram Marshal Ney stood at a point of observation watching the French youth charge the Austrians and Russians, and as they did so they sang and cheered and for them there could be no resistance. In ecstacy Marshal Ney exclaimed, 'See them charge, see them charge, it's in their blood.' Of course it was in their blood, just as it was in the blood of the Civil War veterans, 1,000,000 of whom enlisted at 21, and 640,000 from 16 to 21, and 1,000 at 10 years of age.

"And it was in the American blood from the Marne to Chateau-Thiery and the Argonne. The Yankee-Doodle spirit was there, and when the word came, like the quick, sharp snap of a rifle, the boys were over the top and met their foes face to face and their wounds always toward the enemy.

"No less than during the Civil War and the Spanish-American War did Perry County do her share. Then she gave in full force of the heroism of her sons, greater indeed than was offered by any county of equal size in America. There is therefore particular and abundant fitness in this celebration in Marysville, this outpouring of the people, this honor bestowed upon her worthy sons.

"In a pagan era Alexander always looked well to the comfort of his Macedonian troops, and when sick or wounded he sent them home with orders that they be specially honored and given the best seats at public places. Napoleon, when a prisoner on the barren rock of St. Helena, wrote in his will that the French soldiers be liberally pensioned, and although he had not a dollar himself to give his will was obeyed by the French people.

"Now we, a Christian people, in justice as well as in gratitude, will see no soldier or dependent suffer, for by congressional enactment we will be liberal and preferably give too much than not enough.

"What a wonderful country to live in, to talk about, and when necessary fight for. It almost staggers belief to contemplate our achievements. Think of the nations of the world, bringing here every kind of religious belief and racial hatreds, different in dress, custom, and speech, and yet quickly becoming assimilated and amalgamated to achieve that one object most cherished to the soul, that crystallization of the struggle of the ages—human freedom!

"Our forefathers beat back the savage and conquered the wilderness, and in doing this there was a reaction which forged a new type of men, and that is the type that inherited its valor from the men of '76, 1812, 1847, 1861, and 1898 and went to Europe and amazed the world by performing deeds that will be eternally enshrined.

"In this country we have settled more complicated and complex questions of internal economy during our less than 150 years of existence than have been settled in Europe during 2,000 years of boasted civilization.

"It is startling but true that at no time before this country was set up were any rules able to give the people any such thing as freedom of speech, religious liberty, freedom of the press, civil liberty, security of vested rights, public schools, and the franchise. But just as soon as the Revolutionary War was won and our Constitution was adopted these new elements automatically started to function.

"Where the European kings and conquerors, statesmen, and philosophers failed the great common sense of the American people has triumphed and been vindicated before God and man. We have a standard government operated by a people who don't love their country on the installment plan—a little now and then and here and there—but with eyes afire every American loves his country all over and all the time with a burning, passionate patriotism.

"But to create a government like this and perpetuate it was no easy task. We have passed through four great crises. To achieve independence took years of weary war; to forge out a constitution took many more years; and to save the Nation and uphold and defend the Constitution took a bloody war extending over four years. This last task was to let the world forever know that our rights must be respected on land and sea, and to extend freedom and guarantee future peace. We have seen nearly every nation of consequence, excepting Russia, try to dismember us, but their scheming and conniving was always fruitless.

"That the Governments of Europe are failures is self-evident from the fact that for 1,000 years they have been at war 50 per cent of the time, and racial hatreds are as bitter as when the Master came to preach peace and good will.

"Realizing the feeling of European monarchies toward our Republic, there came a day that was the one proudest and most satisfactory in all my life. In our historical research we had read and made note of the brutality of foreign powers and of their designs upon us as a nation, but as your Member of Congress there came an hour when every trial and every sacrifice to make this country was vindicated and justified. That hour was when on the floor of Congress I saw the proud head of the British Empire bowed low in beseeching help from America to save from wreck and ruin their island kingdom. And others were there also, even now a king is on his way here to ask help. But for me, I would help all kings off their thrones and the masses of Europe yet known as subjects to become citizens and their own rulers, and the owners of the land they till, with the noblemen put to work, and justice and equality substituted for class and privilege.

"This appeal to America for help which was quickly given and with a free and lavish hand, is a complete acknowledgement of the breakdown in European methods of government, and a vindication of our forefathers in what they did to create such a beneficent system, as well as glorification and exaltation for the men who preserved the Republic and their sons who carried our banners in triumph beyond the seas.

"I would not feel that I had quite discharged my duty to-day if, as your Representative in Congress, I did not give you my conclusions respecting the question which at present transcends all other questions of interest to the American people.

"In this county and elsewhere in the State my father, as a preacher of the gospel during the Civil War faced bitter opposition in upholding the cause of the Union and the abolition of slavery. But he was sincere and so earnest that he went with the emergency men to the mountains to assist in intercepting Gen. Lee when he invaded Pennsylvania, and whose forces were not far from this town. This expedition caused his death when I was 1 year old. He plead for his country one and insperable. To-day I would not be worthy of him nor true to you if I did not bring to you some message from Washington on the subject of the league of nations. My conclusions have been reached by reading every line on the subject I could find, by listening to most of the speeches delivered in the Senate, and conversing with hundreds of soldiers, newspaper men, and Congressmen who have been on the other side.

"Therefore, ringing true to my inherent and inherited predilections, supplemented by the direct information I have gathered in Washington, I stand for America first as against any complicated contrivance called a superstate or league of nations as brought to this country for ratification.

"Probably America's most brilliant living Democrat is United States Senator JAMES REED, of Missouri, whose speech I heard on Monday and which will forever live as a burning expression of true Americanism and an answer to every exponent of the plan which would rob us of our sovereignty and independence.

"It is needless to say that every sane man wants peace and deplores and deprecates war as uncivilized, though to preserve our American birthright we will engage in it if necessary, although by this time the war nations and the booted and spurred braggarts of the world, barring none, must know what an impossible task it would be for a united world to attack us here and attempt to dim the blaze of a single star in that field of blue.

"This advertised fear of other nations or more war is nothing short of counterfeit propaganda. Every last nation in Europe is flat on its back financially and the people are sick of war. Certainly after the trouncing we gave Germany no trouble will come from there, while surely after saving England and France from destruction they are not going to war upon us. What America did in Europe in jig time is notice to all aspiring nations around the belted globe that we have the fighting goods along with charity, benevolence, and good will; and, believing in the nation's destiny, let us do our part first, but then also trust in Great Jehovah, for we believe that should tyrants or autocrats ever attack this great-hearted, Christian Nation, that power which sends the thunder and lightning across the heavens will write in letters of living flame their eternal doom and destruction.

"In conclusion, let us feel the certain assurance that our institutions are erected upon indestructible foundations, that we have high ideals in front of us and deep-seated and abiding faith within us. Our love for those who suffered and those who died that freedom might be far-flung to the world's oppressed will never cease to glow as the love that was tested by trial and welded by fire.

"It has been my official province to endeavor to be of service to thousands of soldiers and their dependants during the war just ended and to come in contact with many of the brave boys who went with enthusiasm to the front. As indicating the spirit of the American youth, when I visited the Brooklyn Navy Yard in company with Lieut. Joseph Arnold, of Waynesboro, I was confronted with a flash of Yankee purpose. He is a gallant young naval officer and it was my privilege to appoint him to the Annapolis Naval Academy. He took me over the great dreadnaught, the Wyoming, and when he pointed out his station of action far down in the hold of the great sea fighter, I inquired how in the world he would get up and out of that place in case they got the worst of a fight, and his thrilling American reply was, 'Sir, we do not figure on getting out, we either beat and capture the enemy or go down, sir!' That has the Paul Jones jingle to it, and the reflected spirit of Perry, Farragut, Dewey, and Hobson.

"The first sad news of war's tragedy I had to verify was the loss of that brilliant young lieutenant, Earle Childs, of Lewistown. Appointing him a few years ago to Annapolis we met him several times just before the war, and he was so much of animation and the ardor that inspires confidence and scatters hope and cheer, that a fate at the bottom of a fathomless sea was farthest from our thoughts. But he did his part nobly and fearlessly, and while hearts bled at the irreparable loss, there is the solace and comfort in the reflection that his life was given in liberty's cause and for the Nation's honor.

"With the spirit of helpfulness and broad Christian humanity which largely actuates and inspires the medical fraternity in the daily practice of their profession, the first physician to seek my assistance to enter the service was the first to perish at the front in the battle line in far-off France. Dr. James M. McKibbin, of Fulton County, buoyant and enthusiastic, conversed with me the last time on the steps of the War Department, and just naturally enough much he said was of his home and loved ones. Many others from the towns and valleys of the counties I represent shared the same fate for their country, and for them all we to-day vie in paying tribute to their matchless bravery and priceless offering.

"We gathered here to-day to exalt the deeds of the living and speak reverently of the dead, but how are we to translate into something practical our interpretation of what a soldier's self-denial or a soldier's death is presumed to have been made and given for? What we are doing, in demonstration and praise, inspires applause from every man and woman of tender human impulse and emotion. The soldiers of Marysville sacrificed much and some died that we might be a better and stronger people, and that year by year the world may grow safer with wide abounding brotherhood. Lincoln said, 'We can afford to die, but we can not afford to lose,' and 'these men must not have died in vain,' and again, 'We shall nobly save or meanly lose the last, best hope of earth.' Therefore that we may be sure we have gained and not lost in this war, let us succor the weak and unfortunate, let us have an outstretched hand in helpfulness, and this in remembrance of what our soldiers did for us, and which must be our expression of appreciation.

"Let us win our victories in peace as in war, as the Greek sprinter sought the goal, not only to reach it with torch held aloft but held aloft and still burning.

"May our lighted torch ever typify and symbolize charity and justice and equality, and upon and over all may Christianity ever stand. Let us win for these attributes, then indeed will that purest emblem ever unfurled in the march of the centuries, the Stars and Stripes, lead the way to freedom, peace, and happiness throughout all the uncharted years to come."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FREDERICK N. ZIHLMAN.

OF MARYLAND,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, October 2, 1919.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the question of labor and its relation to the great industrial problems of the present era of reconstruction, of readjustment, and of America's participation in the marts of the world, her utilizing to the fullest the opportunity which knocks at her door to-day, is one of the most vital which has ever confronted the American people during the past two and one-half years.

More progress has been made along the lines of collective bargaining, of cooperation, of mediation, and conciliation than in any similar period in the history of the Government.

This was, of course, due in a large part to our participation in the war, the necessity of increased production, and the construction of camps, cantonments, shipyards, and factories.

The lesson of England's mistakes loomed before us, a danger signal as to what we should and should not do.

The British Empire attempted to determine her labor and industrial policy without taking into account in any way the men who were the recognized leaders among the laboring people of England. As a result there was dissension and dissatisfaction, resulting in decreasing production and bitter animosity as well.

So that the first step taken by the Council of National Defense in the early days of the war, in issuing a statement that existing standards should not be lowered, that no advantage should be taken of the abnormal and unprecedented conditions prevailing to establish new standards which existed prior to our entrance in the war and which they were unable to change in normal times, and the giving to labor of representation in the new order of things which had been brought about to stimulate production, laid a foundation which should have been beneficial in all our future dealings with this great problem.

The President stated this very clearly at Buffalo in November, 1917, when he said:

> The Government has declared its purpose to see to it that the conditions of labor are not rendered more onerous by the war, but also we shall see to it that the instrumentalities by which the conditions of labor are improved are not blocked or checked.
> Nobody has a right to stop the processes of labor until all the methods of conciliation and settlement have been exhausted. * * *
> The fundamental lesson of the whole situation is that we must not only take common counsel but that we must yield and obey common counsel.

Let us determine whether organized labor kept the faith during the weary months of war and all its attendant uncertainties.

I contend that labor showed itself just as willing to forego temporary advantage as the employers were willing to forego temporary and abnormal profits.

It will not answer to point to large increases received in wages by some classes of employees, in some instances working long hours and in dangerous and unhealthful surroundings.

As well point to the income-tax returns of a few manufacturers whose profits increased almost beyond belief, and who manned the front line of the chairs in Washington hotel lobbies during the war, as typifying the attitude and returns of all manufacturers.

Generally speaking, labor was patriotic, was loyal, fought a good fight for their country and its institutions.

Probably one branch of industry in which opportunity was greatest during the war was that of mining, and more than 30,000 of the members of the mine workers' organization were in the service of their country, to say nothing of the thousands of miners who were not members of organized labor.

Much has been said about the high wages paid in the shipyards, but little has been heard of the men who worked in the zero weather of 1917 and 1918, without shelter, with crowded and unhealthful lodging and boarding houses, of the necessity of maintaining a home elsewhere for their family, and who did their part in meeting the Nation's need of ships and more ships.

I could take the organized workers of America, trade by trade and calling by calling, and show that, notwithstanding the increase in wages, they are to-day in a more uncertain and more critical economic condition than they were before our entrance into the world struggle.

And the employers also showed, in the majority of instances, their patriotism, their Americanism, their loyalty, and their willingness to submerge personal advantage and profit for the common cause.

They served on boards of conciliation and arbitration. Their sons carried arms side by side with the sons of their employees, their plants were offered to the Government, they gave their own ripe experience without pay, and the Nation was aroused and militant, each vying with the other to contribute their utmost to the early winning of the war.

We had hoped that because the employer and employee had during the war a common interest, and many times a common sorrow, because of the added fact that their boys were fighting for their country ofttimes in the same company, and were thus able to serve one another, bringing the capitalist and the laborer in closer contact, that it would be a return to the days when employee was no longer known by a number—a return to those days when they lived on the same street, their children going to the same school, and the employer knew his employees by name, and their interests were in common and were not subject to the manipulations of a board of directors concerned only with the stock market.

However, instead of this spirit of helpful cooperation which we had hoped for, we find large numbers of workers advocating Government ownership of public utilities, and in some instances all the machinery of production; and, on the other hand, we find the employer in many instances proclaiming the divine right of property, and that he has an inalienable and vested right to run his own business in his own way and without taking into consideration the needs or conditions under which his employees live.

Each day since the armistice was signed they have drawn farther apart; each day widens the gap which we had hoped was closed forever, notwithstanding that both are dependent and interdependent upon the other, and that the markets of the world are open before them to a larger degree than ever before, with domestic competition almost eliminated for a time at least from the source which has chiefly menaced our standards and shown itself to be a factor in American markets in former peaceful times; we find both capital and labor approaching our industrial problems as though the chief aim and purpose was not to start to increase and stimulate production in order to seize the opportunities ready and at our doors, but as though their chief aim was to destroy the other.

As one who has had practical experience, covering a period of many years, I want to submit briefly my views as to the duty of both labor and capital at this time, a subject which I feel sure will receive the most careful consideration at the conference now being held in the city of Washington.

The need for patriotism and loyalty to the Government is as great now as it was during the war.

That he who casts aside all semblance of the spirit of sacrifice because of the signing of the armistice is untrue to those who made the great sacrifice during the war; that if organized labor, or any other organization or institution, attempts to force upon this country a system of governmental control, that day such organization ceases to be a cogent factor in our national life.

If organized labor disregards its agreements and contracts which have been solemnly entered into by its representatives it can not exist in our modern industrial life.

Labor must purge itself of all radicals and extremists who would tear down the present structure of government and set up a new order in its stead; and it must build upon the foundation of a constructive and broad-minded policy, administered by honest and fair-dealing men whose Americanism is above reproach and who will meet the problems confronting them on a business basis and with modern ideas.

Labor must continue to agitate, but for education and enlightenment, not for a soviet system founded upon the rule of force.

Labor must make loyalty to our institutions and our system of government, with such changes as are necessary to meet changing conditions, and these changes to be made by such means and manner as is provided by the laws of the land, a part of their teachings and tenets and one of their qualifications for membership.

On the other hand, capital has no inherent nor vested right in labor; they are colaborers and copartners in the industrial struggle.

It has been established through years of litigation and sacrifice that labor has the right to organize just as capital has, and which right is exercised by almost every industry and profession in America.

Labor has a right to a hearing and to counseling with their employers.

There should be no question about this after two and one-half years of war, in which the Government laid down the duty of arbitration to both employer and employee, and when an ex-President of the United States, who had held very strong views upon this subject when a judge on the bench, was willing to give of his service to the Nation during the war in order to contribute to industrial peace.

The day has passed when one man, sitting as the head of an industrial corporation, can by the grace of a board of directors say that they will not counsel and will not discuss with their employees the conditions under which they work and live.

I contend that during the critical times through which the country is now passing that he who deliberately precipitates an industrial conflict rather than counsel with the men who man his factories and furnaces is equally to blame with those who preach a doctrine of industrial revolution and who hope to bring about chaos, in the hope that thereby they will be elevated to positions of power and responsibility.

I hope, therefore, that out of the round-table conference called by the President and now meeting in Washington that there will come an agreement between employer and employee which will make it possible for them to adjust such differences as may arise, having in mind that the advancement of the country's interests are paramount, and that by elevating the humblest of our citizens we help to build up this Nation and enable it to continue its march down the highway of time, the envy of every other nation on the globe to-day.

I trust also that this conference will consider and bring to the attention of the legislative bodies of State and Nation the questions of sanitation, of unhealthful and dangerous surroundings in shop, mill, and mine, which are of paramount importance to the country and its upbuilding.

In this connection it is interesting to note that many of the States are enacting laws which will protect the human resources of the Nation and build up our industries on a sound and humane basis.

It is to be regretted that in my own State of Maryland the Democratic platform this year is absolutely silent on this great and grave question, and that the men attending their convention evinced no interest in the problems of labor. The Republican Party in Maryland put into its platform this year the following pledge:

We pledge the Republican Party to a more efficient enforcement of all laws passed for the protection of labor; to safeguard the industrial and human resources of the State by remedial legislation in behalf of our men and women, to the end that we may obtain the fullest efficiency and production consistent with their welfare, safety, and health.

Believing that sanitation and healthful surroundings are essential to the welfare of labor, and that the fullest production can not be obtained in unsanitary, unhealthful, and dangerous surroundings, we pledge our party to the enactment of such additional legislation as is needed to provide for the safeguarding of life, health, and limb in shop, factory, and mine; we pledge ourselves to such amendment to the compensation law as will provide proper protection to those injured in the course of their employment.

The men who make this pledge are men of responsibility and honor, and will aid in the enactment of such legislation as will provide for the enforcement of existing laws and the passage of additional legislation.

The humanitarian spirit of this day insures the cooperation of men in public life, and it is to be hoped that the industrial conference will outline a program upon which all broad-minded and public-spirited citizens can agree, which will insure its enactment into State and Federal laws.

A nation is no better nor worse than the people who make up its citizenship. This is a fundamental truth which has been handed down to us through the years, and out of the caldron of this Great War should come a new spirit, founded upon equal rights and justice to all men.

The Metropolitan Police Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BURTON L. FRENCH,

OF IDAHO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 13, 1919.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, if I were a member of any trade or craft whose members were organized into a union that looked to the betterment of their conditions, I would join the union, and if there were no union, I would proceed to organize one. I am in sympathy with labor unions and I recognize that so long as capital may organize itself in industry, men whose capital consists of their strength and skill and proficiency in a given trade must have the same right of organizing themselves.

It is for the most part through definite labor organizations that the intolerable conditions of 50 and 75 years ago that surrounded labor have been eliminated largely, and that the conditions that surround labor to-day have been attained.

So much for that.

The bill that we are considering provides for fixing the compensation of the members of the police force of Washington on a better basis than has existed heretofore. I am in favor of it.

The bill, in section 2, provides that no member of the police force shall be or become a member of any organization or any organization affiliated with another organization that holds, claims, or exercises the right to strike. I am in favor of that section of the bill.

There is absolutely no analogy between the members of the police force or the members of a fire department and a trade group. There is absolutely nothing to compromise or to arbitrate between the employees of the Federal Government or the State or a municipality and the organization to which they have sworn allegiance and are responsible to. I have no more respect for the members of a police organization or fire department who would go on a strike than I have for the soldiers of our country who before the enemy would go on a strike, and if members of such organizations can not themselves see it in this light then it becomes to the extent that Congress has jurisdiction its duty to provide by law that men who entertain such notions as the right of policemen or members of the fire department to strike shall not be members of an organization that exercises or claims to exercise a right to strike.

In Boston some days ago the policemen of that city went on a strike and before another adequate police force could be installed I believe that five human lives had paid for the folly of the strikers. The papers on the first day following the strike reported that the loss of property by theft and destruction aggregated $300,000, and I understand that property stolen and destroyed the next day was greater still.

Gentlemen, if we are to have orderly government, there can be no such thing as recognizing the right to strike upon the part of the Army or the Navy, or the right to strike upon the part of the members of the police and fire departments, or, so far as that is concerned, upon the part of any employees of the Government.

The other day we considered the bill fixing a duty upon dyestuffs. In the bill, as it was reported from the committee, it was provided that certain powers touching importation should be delegated to a group of men representing the manufacturers of dyestuffs in the United States. I was one of the Members who opposed that provision in the bill. I did so for two reasons: First, I believed that it was unconstitutional in that we could not delegate legislative authority; and, second, I did not believe the Government should delegate any of its authority to any group of manufacturers, no matter how high-minded they may be.

This last would be wrong for two reasons: First, it would be difficult for men having personal interest to be fair to themselves and to the public, no matter how much they might want to be; and, second, no matter how fair they might be, the public would never accept their conduct as being in good faith. We struck from the bill the provision and instead of a group of persons interested in the dye business we substituted the Tariff Commission—a Government institution. I believe we did right.

To-day we are face to face with another proposition: Shall the members of the police organization have the right to strike against their Government or be affiliated with any organization apart from the Government, exercising the right to strike in civil industry? There can be but one answer. Such a course can not be tolerated for one moment.

First, it is inconceivable in an orderly government that any employees should place themselves above government by striking on their own account or by engaging in a strike at the behest of any outside group.

Second, admitting that they would never strike, membership in such organization would be wrong, because, first:

It would be difficult for the members of the force to do their duty when their associates from trade crafts were involved in a strike; and, second:

Even if the members of the police force did their duty fearlessly and absolutely, the public would never be convinced of the fact, and with two bad results—private individuals would endeavor to take the enforcement of the law into their own hands, and lawless elements would go the limit of their daring, both feeling that the police force had broken down.

Now, let us notice the language of section 2. It is provided that no member of the police force of the District of Columbia shall become a member of any organization or of any organization affiliated with another organization which holds, claims, or exercises the right to demand of any of its members obedience to an order to strike.

This paragraph is not aimed at any organization or at any group. It comprehends any and all groups that might hold to the right to strike. There are some who have said that the parent organization might deny that it has the right to demand that its membership strike, and that if it did there would be nothing to prevent the District police force from being members of a union that would be members of this parent organization, albeit that other units affiliated with the parent organization might have the right to strike in their own power. Gentlemen, this can not be, and no fair interpretation of the language as I see it would permit of that construction. The first words of the paragraph say that no member of the police force shall be or become a member of any organization which holds or exercises the right to demand of any of its membership obedience to an order to strike. Then under that language any police union could not strike or could not hold to the theory that it had the right to strike. But the following language says that no member of the police force shall become a member of an organization that is affiliated with another organization which holds, claims, or exercises the right to strike. Now, that language is all embracing. It means that the police union of the city of Washington could not be affiliated with any other organization that itself holds, claims, or exercises the right to demand that its members strike or that itself has among its units any organization that holds, claims, or exercises the right to demand of its membership obedience to an order to strike. All such units are affiliated and must be so regarded.

There is no other reasonable construction to this language, and for that reason amendments that have been proposed should be voted down and the language of the bill should be incorporated into law.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWIN B. BROOKS,
OF ILLINOIS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 6, 1919.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, under the Constitution the President, in time of peace or war, is the head of all the departments of the Government, including the departments of the War and Navy, in that executive departments are subject to the President, who is operating now with Army and naval forces in Europe. It is generally understood in foreign countries that we have been permitted by our Executive to administer affairs in Armenia and protect that country against the Turk. The Secretary of War has, according to press reports, estimated that it will require 150,000 American troops to protect Armenia. Senator NEW, about the middle of September, in the Senate stated that the Military Committee had knowledge at that time that two regiments were being recruited for foreign service. He did not know where. I have a letter from Thomas Rinaker, of Carlinville, saying that Lieut. Steward was there on a visit, just before leaving with his company as part of two regiments ordered to Silesia, leaving early in October. Silesia is referred to in article 88, page 47, of the treaty. A plebiscite is to be taken in that country. In plain English, this is a vote of the people. It is a part of the self-determination referred to by our President. It is provided in article 88, both by the Polish and German Governments, that they will not interfere with this election, the purpose of which is to find whether the people want to belong to Poland or to Germany. It seems necessary to have two regiments of United States soldiers to preserve peace at the polls, or on the boundaries, or to have handy some place, in case the Poles and the Germans do not get along amicably. I commend this to our Democratic brethren in the cotton belt, who are worked up every once in a while by the fear of having troops at the polls.

The landing of naval forces on the Italian frontier dispute is another instance of interference. Just why we should be made the umpire between the new Slav State and Italy is difficult to understand. England and France are interested in the affair, but seem to wish us to settle all the troubles and let Europe have the benefits. We not only have loaned $10,000,000,000 to the Allies, donated hundreds of millions to Red Cross and other charitable work, appropriated $100,000,000 of foodstuffs distributed by Mr. Hoover last summer, sent 2,000,000 to help defeat the German, but we are to be the cat's paw and umpire for all the troubles between the several European and Asiatic countries. We will be about as popular as a baseball umpire with the losing side when the game is over. These quarrels are made in Europe. They ought to be settled in Europe. There is no good reason why the young men of our country should be drafted into the broils of the Old World.

It will not be long until China will rebel against the Shantung outrage. Japan is now conducting herself there as if she intended to stay until the crack of doom. She is building heavy fortifications, strengthening every military point, exercising governmental power, policing and ruling the country. When China rises against foreign aggression our young men will again be drafted to fight with Japan against the Chinese Republic, to war under the colors of an absolute despotism. The Mikado is supposed to be descended directly from the Japanese gods. His person and family are sacred, and his word is to be obeyed as a decree from Jehovah. This will help make the world safe for democracy when we fight under Japanese colors to hold the plunder we are asked to give her under the German treaty.

Others of our soldiers are in Siberia guarding box cars, protecting its railroads, and doing police service. How long this will continue depends upon the supreme council sitting at Paris, which in turn means as long as England and Japan order it done. This is the first tangible result of the operation of the league of nations. If it burns this way in the green wood, what will it do when it is dry and the fire well started?

When our soldiers, sailors, and marines were called into the service it was understood and proclaimed far and near that they should be permitted to return to their homes and private affairs promptly upon the conclusion of war. The armistice was signed on the 11th day of last November. Nevertheless, on the 24th of last September the armed forces of the United States were landed on the Dalmatian coast against a friendly nation, without any authority whatever from the Congress of the United States to wage war against Italy. Our soldiers have been used in Siberia and elsewhere in Russia without any constitutional warrant, making war upon the people of a nation with which we have not been at war.

Let it be distinctly remembered that the Congress of the United States, the sole constitutional authority to declare war, has declared war only against the German Imperial Government and the dual monarchy of Austria-Hungary. With every other nation on the face of the earth we have remained at peace, so far as a legal declaration of war is concerned. Without regard, however, to the explicit terms of the National Constitution, the armed forces of the United States have been repeatedly used to wage war against the people of friendly nations. It is also proposed that we should enter into an agreement by means of which we would join Britain, France, Italy, and other countries in preserving the territorial integrity and political independence of the remaining Germany of the earth—Japan—in her hostile action toward the dismemberment of the territory of China, a friendly nation which we induced to go into the war on the side of the Allies. We are urged to pledge the lives of our best young men and pour out our billions of treasure to uphold Japan in that wicked course.

Are we to be involved in war with Italy, in war with Russia, in war with the Balkan States without any declaration by the Congress of the United States? How much further will such actions go to engulf the people of this Nation in still greater sacrifice of the lives of its young men and its treasure?

Without absolute proof, ocular proof, if you please, that such things have been done, how can we believe that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and the President of the United States would commit such acts without full authority to do so?

To what limit may such entanglements go in a quarrel with all the nations of the world? If these examples point the way and reveal to us what we are expected to do, no shifting of responsibility can deny the ocular proof that stands before us now as to the tremendous danger of the hour. We are told in one moment that the league of nations will preserve peace, while the very people who have drawn the league of nations are crowding us toward the verge of war. What would be our inheritance in that organization if such leadership is to represent us in the league of nations? Are we to be involved in war without our national consent through constitutional channels? If so, how far are we from the pitfalls of anarchy and Bolshevism now? We look toward the future with bated breath, and with intense anxiety we ask the question, What next?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIS J. HULINGS,
OF PENNSYLVANIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 13, 1919.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I have but a few words to say concerning this bill.

I have always believed in the labor unions and collective bargaining and the right of men to quit employment for any reason sufficient to them.

This right is incontestable, and alongside of one man's right to strike is the other man's right to work if he chooses.

Every man's brain and his brawn are his own, and no man has any right by threats, intimidation, and violence to interfere with him in the lawful exercise of his powers.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are some occupations and employments that in the very nature of the case require a surrender of the right to strike by the man who undertakes such employment. The soldier obviously surrenders his right to strike, and it is unnecessary to cite other examples.

The policeman, pertinently described by the gentleman from Illinois as "a civil soldier," is an officer of the law; he is the arm of the government by which he is employed. In times of disturbance or riot his duty is to enforce the law. All his personal sympathies must be suppressed; but without fear or favor he must enforce the law, with allegiance to or sympathy for no other power or organization than the government whose public servant he is.

His natural right to strike, like the soldier's, is surrendered to promote the peace and security and welfare of the public.

Clearly, then, the policeman should not have the right to "strike."

And for the very same reasons he should not ally himself with any organization which in the exercise of its right to strike would be likely to command his sympathy, even though he himself should not strike.

Holding these views, I favor the bill as reported by the committee.

Theodore Roosevelt.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BENJAMIN G. HUMPHREYS,

OF MISSISSIPPI.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 13, 1919.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, a campaign is now on to raise a fund wherewith to build a memorial to the late Theodore Roosevelt.

Shortly after his death memorial services were held in his honor by the Y. M. C. A. in the Liberty Hut in this city and I was invited to make an address upon that occasion.

I asked consent yesterday to extend my remarks in order to print that address in the RECORD, my purpose being to have it put in pamphlet form for use in this campaign in Mississippi.

The address follows:

ADDRESS DELIVERED BY BENJAMIN G. HUMPHREYS AT THE Y. M. C. A. LIBERTY HUT, WASHINGTON, D. C., ON THE OCCASION OF THE MEMORIAL SERVICES HELD IN HONOR OF THE LATE THEODORE ROOSEVELT JANUARY 12, 1919.

Ladies and gentlemen, I shall say nothing of Theodore Roosevelt dead that I have not said of him living. He was one of the foremost men of all the world—one of the choice and master spirits of his age. In common with his kind, which is all too rare, he won and held not only the love of his friends, but the ill will of his enemies, and he was provided abundantly with both. His friends loved him for what he was and sometimes in spite of what he did. "To err is human," and they loved him for his human qualities. His enemies disliked him not alone for what he did, but sometimes for the mere manner of his doing it. In my opinion he was the most forceful personality in all the earth during his stay upon it, and that force was always a force for righteousness.

He was a great writer. No man can read his "Winning of the West" without gaining a most wholesome regard for the moral quality of the young author. He was a ranchman in the days when the "wild and woolly west" was a turbulent fact. He lived and walked and had his daily being with the cowpunchers—he shared their hard lives, "busted" their broncbos, heard their ribald songs, and conquered their unfaltering friendship, sometimes with hard knuckles—and yet the "Hunting Tales of a Ranchman," written at the time, are neither stained by vulgar word nor tainted by coarse suggestion. The proprieties of this occasion will not permit me to relate some of the stories and tragic incidents of his life on the plains—stories which I have from first hand—and yet, were they told, they would all be set down to his credit. They were but the early outcroppings, the strenuous—perhaps I may be permitted to say the tumultuous—manifestations of the spirit which possessed him, that spirit which was the guiding star, the box and compass of his virile and dynamic life; a thoroughgoing and never-wavering detestation of evil practices.

He was a great phrase maker. Somebody has said that he was a phrase "taker." Be that as it may, the material inquiry is not: Where did the phrase come from, but, rather: Where did it point? That alone gives the insight we seek. "Fight fair; hit the line hard," was one of them, and even his critics will agree that he lived up at least to the last clause—whether the line was of cattle thieves or malefactors of great wealth.

In his proclamation a few days ago President Wilson said: "As President, he awoke the Nation to the dangers of private control which lurked in our financial and industrial systems. It was by thus arresting the attention and stimulating the purpose of the country that he opened the way for subsequent necessary and beneficial reforms." He was hitting the line hard then.

"The way to parry is to hit," he said, and according to the President's proclamation, which I have just quoted, it has been vouchsafed to few men to hit so effectively for political righteousness.

He quoted with approval the old adage, "Speak gently and carry a big stick—you will go far." After that he was caricatured sometimes as the "scriptural lion," going up and down the earth seeking whom he might devour; sometimes as the "Rough Rider," booted and spurred, threatening to annihilate the earth. And yet he, alone, of all Americans was awarded the Nobel peace prize as having actually done more than any other man in all the world to establish peace on this turbulent earth. Nevertheless, we are told that he was pugnacious. But where and how did he manifest that quality? Fighting cattle thieves as a Montana ranchman, fighting vice and political corruption and evil mongers as police commissioner of New York, fighting Spaniards on the battle fields of Cuba.

Andrew Jackson said he would have peace if he had to fight for it. Theodore Roosevelt among the first, I repeat, if indeed not the most potent force for righteousness of his generation, shaped his philosophy by that square. I do not believe that he fought merely from love of that turbulent enterprise, but rather because, as he viewed the particular situation which confronted him, it indicated to him that the world was out of joint. It must be admitted, I confess, that there is little evidence that he shared Hamlet's regret that he was born to set it right. But he did not win his spurs fighting windmills; his foes were not phantom men in buckram—they were live, pulsating, virile institutions which denied the philosophy of the square deal and challenged social justice to the ordeal.

He occupied the most exalted station that can be won in the world, yet no man kept more steadfastly to the simple life. He preached no rule of conduct which he was unwilling to adopt. He did not point others the straight and stony way and take the primrose path himself. He ordered the Army officers to ride 90 miles in three days and when the hue and cry against this order was raised throughout the country he left the White House one morning in the snow and rode 100 miles in one day.

He urged our entrance into the World War from the day the Lusitania was sunk and in his characteristic style berated those of us who clung in vain to the shadow of peace. When war came he made but two requests of his Government—that he be sent as a soldier to the battle fields, and later, when his four sons had been commissioned, he asked the War Department to send them to the front.

In what we thought was the very prime of life he was taken. Strong, robust, virile, strenuous—we could not bring ourselves to think of him in terms of physical feebleness—but he is gone, and the Young Men's Christian Association does well upon this holy day to pay this tribute of respect to his memory, for "take him for all in all, we shall not look upon his like again." Brave, aggressive, pugnacious, if you will, he was none the less a sturdy illustration of Bayard Tayor's verse, "The bravest are the tenderest," for despite his strenuous and aggressive personality—

> His life was gentle, and the elements
> So mix'd in him that Nature might stand up
> And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES R. EVANS,

OF NEVADA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, October 7, 1919.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, we feel that now our Government should proceed to preserve one of the unique show places of this favored land, entirely different from any exhibit which our Nation has placed in reserve to be enjoyed by generations yet to come, who may be wiser, but no more loyal to dear old United States of America than this Congress, because upon both sides of this House is evidence from esteemed Members that all legislation must measure up to our high standard, and ring true. Until recently this portion of rugged mountain, rock, and canyon, owing to no road, was denied to the tourist, but lately transportation is furnished by the most progressive citizens of any country. The citizens of Utah, who have by faith, hope, industry, and natural resources, restored to civilization a storehouse of wealth, as a reward for unusual hazard and labor of pioneering, nature has placed within her boundaries and contiguous to that magic and permanently growing city of Salt Lake, with her railroad terminals, immense financial institutions, and unsurpassed climate, a natural park which we desire to establish for more complete preservation as a national institution. No present appropriation is desired.

Embracing, as it does, 76,000 acres, within which are many gorges and canyons of indescribable beauty, colorings of rock in hues of red, brown, white, and black, in layer upon layer of variegated shades, waterfalls, and ancient cliff dwellings, causing visitors to proclaim it the greatest of all natural phenomena, that its grandeur may be kept, we now dedicate this beautiful spot to all America. There is nothing in written thought nor spoken word fitting the beauty of colorings to these canyons, from the gray of dawn, fading into rosy sunrise, passing into dazzling midday to the lilac shade of evening's quick repose. That favored spot comes as a generous gift from true pioneers, who dared the elements, and even death, for what to them is truth, and description of the West would be complete with a tribute of respect to those brave men who loved liberty more than life.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES R. EVANS,
OF NEVADA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, October 16, 1919.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, this measure excels in opportunity for spread-eagle oratory. Education has the finest definition of any word in our language. Whoever desires an education to the extent that he is willing to wait table or do honest work to obtain it will gain more value in education than a thousand who do not seek. What right has this Government to enforce education upon a cripple who during health resisted education? This is an extension of government by bureaus. Inspectors, collectors, and governmental appointees travel through Nevada in droves. The growth and influence of bureaus please the residents here, while the Nation grows suspicious that too much authority issues from Washington. Men sent here too often grow more interested in the city's increased population than in the welfare of their Government.

The District of Columbia was provided to serve the Nation. Nevada and many other States were furnishing relief even before this legislation was conceived. Relief for the returned soldier must have your first consideration. It is not becoming that you use in charity the Treasury which he gave so much to save.

Self-reliance won the war. Self-reliance will win in peace.

Rehabilitation of Persons Disabled in Industry.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. C. WILLIAM RAMSEYER,
OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, October 14, 1919.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to assist in the rehabilitation of persons disabled in industrial pursuits, including agriculture, trade, commerce, manufacturing, mining, transportation, and all mechanic arts. If enacted into law it will accomplish a most worthy purpose and will help an unfortunate class of persons who have been heretofore neglected in this country.

This bill, for some unaccountable reason, has aroused a great deal of opposition in this House. It is unconstitutional, according to the contention of the opponents. Other legislation to aid the States financially in carrying out some worthy purpose has been enacted too frequently in the past without being declared invalid by the courts, so that the issue of constitutionality should not alarm the proponents of the bill. Suffice it to say that the opponents have not cited a single precedent in support of their contention.

Another objection to the bill is that it encroaches on the rights and duties of the States. They say, "This bill seeks to do something that should be done, but the States should do it without aid from the National Government." The fact is the States have not undertaken this work, a work we all agree should be done; and by this bill we propose that the States shall do this work with the encouragement and part aid from the National Government. We here propose to the States to do for unfortunate persons on a small scale what the National Government has done for years on a large scale, independently and also in cooperation with the States, to take care of and improve cattle, cereals, forests, to kill insects, and to eradicate disease in both animal and plant life. Then why this opposition to rehabilitate human beings in industry? Are not unfortunate and diseased human beings entitled to as much consideration from this legislative body as unfortunate and diseased dumb animals?

The chief argument against this bill comes from men like the distinguished ex-Speaker [Mr. CLARK], who base their opposition on the ground of "economy." I believe in economy and have practiced it as a Member of this House as faithfully and consistently as any Member of Congress. It is high time this Congress were practicing more economy. But it is strange that the greatest efforts by Members for "economy" usually come over some small item of appropriation—over a few thousand dollars. When the sums go up in the millions or billions you do not hear so much opposition.

This bill is for persons disabled in industrial pursuits, including agriculture, manufacturing, mining, and so forth, and for the first year the appropriation can not exceed $500,000, the second year $750,000, and thereafter not to exceed $1,000,000 per annum. And for this some gentlemen threaten to defeat the bill, because if passed it will bankrupt the Federal Treasury.

During the past four years I have seen millions voted to be squandered for so-called river and harbor improvement, money appropriated to be squandered for no use to objects animate or inanimate. Some gentlemen who oppose this bill on the alleged ground of "economy" swallowed the rivers and harbors propositions without batting an eye.

Last winter gentlemen of this House voted to validate certain invalid contracts of the War Department, with full knowledge that it would drain the Federal Treasury several billion dollars. Verily, verily, these gentlemen are straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel.

Last March a year ago we passed the railroad-control bill and guaranteed the income of the owners of railroad stocks at a rate that was indefensible and preposterous. Under that bill, which became law, the per cent of net income to the capital stock of railroads was guaranteed for many roads over 10 per cent, for 13 roads over 27 per cent, and for 1 road as high as 647.22 per cent. This same bill appropriated $500,000,000 out of moneys in the Treasury for the purpose of paying the expenses of Federal control and the compensation guaranteed to the stockholders. This bill has taken out of the Federal Treasury to date $1,250,000,000, with the result we have had the highest freight and passenger rates and the poorest service under this law that we have had at any time during the last 50 years. Yet when this bill first passed the House there were only six Members who had the courage to vote against it.

Now, let me give our "economists" some other figures to think about. I notice on the vote last Tuesday there were a number of Members from agricultural districts who voted to strike out the enacting clause, which, if carried, would have killed the bill. Therefore, for their benefit, I call attention to the appropriations in the last Agricultural appropriation bill. I do this not to criticize those appropriations, because I represent an agricultural district and have always enthusiastically supported all bills and appropriations for the advancement and benefit of agriculture. But I do so to show them, if that be possible, their inconsistency, in the name of economy, for opposing a bill under which the appropriations can never exceed $1,000,000 per annum, which has to do with the restoration of disabled persons, and in the same Congress voting many millions for the benefit of animal and plant life.

Now, I refer to a few items of the last Agricultural appropriation bill. Here are some of the items:

Weather Bureau	$1,880,210
Bureau of Animal Industry	5,783,231

Under this is an item of $1,000,000 to eradicate the foot-and-mouth disease; an item of $641,045 to fight hog cholera; an item of $741,980 to eradicate cattle tick. I do not find fault with these items. They are there with my approval. But I do want to ask my friends who represent agricultural districts, as I do, whether they are consistent in voting annually millions for cattle and hogs and refuse to authorize an appropriation not to exceed $1,000,000 annually to help restore industrial cripples so they may become economically self-supporting and not left objects of charity and almshouses.

Bureau of Plant Industry	$3,379,638
Forest Service	5,966,869
Bureau of Chemistry	1,391,571
Bureau of Soils	1,371,360
Bureau of Biological Survey	742,170
States Relation Service	4,905,820
Bureau of Public Roads	594,320
Bureau of Markets	2,811,365

Last year, without opposition, we appropriated $1,000,000 on the same basis we do in this bill—that is, for every dollar paid to any State the State shall appropriate a like amount for the prevention, control, and treatment of venereal diseases. That was to aid persons who had contracted unmentionable diseases by their own misconduct and sins. The bill before us is to aid persons who, while serving in industries necessary for the maintenance and good order of organized society, become injured, and in many cases, unless aided, will become a charge on society.

I shall not appeal to your sympathy for the unfortunate industrial cripples. I appeal to your business sense, and ask you whether it is not good business to restore to industry those unfortunates who have been "knocked out" of industry by accidents, for which in most instances they were in no wise responsible. Every time you help a person to be self-supporting you add to the economic gain and good order of the community.

Oh, yes, but you say we must save. That proposition I grant you. We will have plenty of opportunity to save. This Congress has already saved the taxpayers of this country nearly $1,000,000,000 by cutting down appropriation bills passed by this House during the closing days of the last Congress. And there will be many opportunities during this Congress to save the taxpayers money. There are now before the Military Affairs Committee of this Congress by the War Department, supported by the Secretary of War, propositions for a Military Establishment that will cost $1,000,000,000 annually. We can save half that amount and still have the largest military defense in the world. If we only save $100,000,000 of that amount, we would have enough money to rehabilitate all the industrial cripples in the United States for the next 100 years.

Every year we rightly appropriate millions to save and protect property. By passing this bill Congress will give recognition to the importance and value of human life. Human life is more important than property. Property is only useful in so far as it contributes and ministers to human life and happiness. This is one of the best bills that have been before Congress in many days, and I hope it will become a law.

The Saulsbury Law.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES R. EVANS,
OF NEVADA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 13, 1919.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, the Saulsbury law was conceived with good intent. There is a place paved with good intentions, where this law should go. It is a failure because it has failed to do the things for which it was intended. It was passed as a war measure. The war is over. If it was not over, a victorious American Army would now be in pursuit of a fleeing foe. The war is over, because our soldiers have all been demobilized and discharged. Why are not the war workers demobilized? The Saulsbury law has not prevented, but promoted, profiteering, enabling in average cases for two persons to have rented a house upon prewar basis at $30 per month, occupying a portion of that house, and subrenting the remainder to three persons at $100 per month, and in most cases their victims are war workers. Thus 40 per cent of your population lives without other visible means. Forty per cent are actually profiteering from the remaining 60 per cent. Repeal the Saulsbury law unconditionally. Washington, owing to its many natural advantages of living and association, with its favorable tax regulations, should and would be the easiest city in which to live, instead of being the toughest, in America, and all owing to the Saulsbury law. Money will seek investment here in building if given a protected title.

Your city's future is dependent upon your citizens' integrity. Prominent Washington men are patriotic and public spirited, as are the leading men of other cities. They are as willing to invest in and beautify their chosen home city as any can be because they are American citizens.

Laws proposed similar in purpose to the Saulsbury law would be regarded in other cities as an absurdity, impossible, confiscatory. Some of your most progressive laws were first adopted by Western States; your natural advantages here to encourage building are offset by a question of ownership and direction; seeking to improve the Saulsbury intention is a wide step in the direction of bureaus, government by inspection, and interference tending to minimize individual effort.

New Congressmen at Washington are proud of the National Capital with its broad and flowered avenues leading to this world center; with its parks, foliage, and artistic architecture. The Member from Nevada favors to loyal citizens full right of ownership to encourage the growth of Washington.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM E. MASON,
OF ILLINOIS.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 17, 1919.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, in replying to the ill-considered editorials written by gentlemen who are uninformed and who attempt to make light of my resolution making an appropriation for a minister to the Republic of Ireland—some of them saying that the proposition is unheard of and that it is unfriendly to our allies in this war and that it is without precedent—I desire to say that it is not unfriendly to our allies, but that it is in conformity with the terms of the peace suggested by President Wilson, accepted by all of the world, including Great Britain, and is fully sustained by precedent.

I am for the Republic of Ireland because it was promised to her during the war. I am for the Republic of Ireland because it is the only way we can make peace in the world. I am for the Republic of Ireland because it is right.

Upon the question of precedent I begin with the attempt of four nations to form a league of peace—the Holy Alliance between Russia, Prussia, Austria, and Great Britain. It shows how history repeats itself. It also shows that Great Britain withdrew from it, for imperial and commercial reasons.

At that time four monarchies, proposing to represent Christian nations, solemly declared that in their political relations with every other government the precepts of justice, charity, and peace ought to have "direct influence upon the councils of princes." They assembled at Laybach in the spring of 1821 and sent out the following message to all their ministers at foreign courts:

> That useful and necessary changes in legislation and in the administration of States ought only to emanate from the free will and intelligent and well-weighed conviction of those whom God has rendered responsible for power. All that deviates from this line necessarily leads to disorder, commotions, and evils far more insufferable than those which they pretend to remedy.

It will be noted that these four kings were appointed by God to run the world, whereas under the present league to enforce peace they are confessedly self-appointed.

I wish every man and woman in the United States could read the speech of Daniel Webster—how he stood by the proposition announced by Col. Roosevelt—or rather how Col. Roosevelt stood by the position announced by Webster—that every nation should be permitted to decide for itself whether its case is a justiciable one and whether they desire to submit to arbitrators, in the selection of which they have no voice.

At the time the Republic of Greece was struggling for existence, and the so-called Christian nations appointed by God to see to it that no territorial integrity was to be impaired except with their divine consent, these four charter members of the league of nations to enforce peace, while they sympathized with the people of Greece, yet so abhorred the doctrine of self-government that they turned their backs upon the struggling Republic and permitted the Turk to commit the foulest and most brutal massacres of women and children ever recorded in the history of the world.

Mr. Webster's resolution in 1823 provided for a minister or agent from America to the Republic of Greece. They were in disorder and revolution. They had had no promise from the United States approved by its associates that the little peoples of the earth should have self-determination. They had no substantial army or navy; they had no President at that time and no lawmaking power organized as Ireland has now. Yet the resolution of Webster and the conduct of the United States gave such encouragement—for that resolution was the first official expression favorable to the independence of Greece, the first official utterance by any of the Governments of Christendom—that it awakened the conscience of the world, and after the Battle of Navarino a portion of Greece was liberated from the Turkish yoke.

In 1819 Henry Clay being anxious that our Government should recognize the independence of Buenos Aires, and the President of the United States being opposed to it, the former offered a resolution to make an appropriation to send a minister to Buenos Aires, using practically the same language I have employed in my resolution to send a minister to Ireland. Mr. Clay showed that there was a government under the united provinces of Rio de la Plata. It was not as established or well organized as the present organization of the republic of Ireland. He said:

Are we not bound, then, upon our own principles to acknowledge this new republic? If we do not, who will? Are we to expect that kings will set us the example of acknowledging the only Republic on earth except our own?

Mr. Clay then, upon the question as to whether the legislative branch was taking the power away from the executive branch of the Government, stated as follows:

On this subject he felt the greatest solicitation, for no man more than himself respected the preservation of the independence of the several departments of government in the constitutional orbits which were prescribed to them. It was his favorite maxim that each, acting within its proper sphere, should move with its constitutional independence and under its constitutional responsibility, without influence from any other. He was perfectly aware that the Constitution of the United States, and he admitted the proposition in its broadest sense, confided to the Executive the reception and the deputation of ministers, but in relation to the latter operation of Congress had concurrent will in the power of providing for the payment of their salaries.

And further:

The instrument nowhere said or implied that the Executive act of sending a minister to a foreign country should precede the legislative act which shall provide for the payment of his salary. And, in point of fact, our statutory code was full of examples of legislative action, both in relation to the deputation of agents abroad and to the subject matter of treaties.

Perhaps the act of sending a minister abroad and the act providing for the allowance of his salary ought to be simultaneous, but if in the order of precedence there were more reason on the one side than on the other, he thought it was in favor of the priority of the legislative act as the safer depository of power. When a minister is sent abroad, although the legislature may be disposed to think his mission useless, although if previously consulted, they would have said they would not consent to pay such a minister, the duty is delicate and painful to refuse to pay the salary promised to him whom the Executive has even unnecessarily sent abroad.

Mr. Clay illustrated his ideas by the existing missions to the Netherlands. He had no hesitation in saying that if we had not ministers of the first grade there, and if the legislature were asked prior to sending them whether it would consent to pay ministers of that grade, that he would not and he believed Congress would not consent to pay them.

If it be urged that by avowing our willingness in a legislative act to pay a minister not yet sent, and whom the President may think it improper to send abroad, we operate upon the President by all the force of our opinion.

Again:

It may be retorted that when we are called upon to pay any minister sent under similar circumstances we are operated on by all the force of the President's opinion. The true theory of our Government at least supposes that each of the two departments, acting on its proper constitutional responsibility, will decide according to its best judgment under all the circumstances of the case. If we make the previous appropriation, we act upon our constitutional responsibility and the President afterwards will proceed upon his. And so if he makes the previous appointment we have a right, after a minister is sent abroad and we are called upon to pay him—and we ought to deliberate upon the propriety of his mission—we may and ought to grant or withhold his salary. If this power of deliberation is conceded subsequent to the deputation of the minister, it must exist prior to that deputation.

Whenever we deliberate we deliberate under our constitutional responsibility. Pass the amendment he proposed and it would be passed under that responsibility. Then the President when he deliberated on the propriety of the mission would act under his constitutional responsibility. Each branch of government moving in its proper sphere would act with as much freedom from the influence of the other as was practically attainable.

There was great reason, Mr. Clay contended, from the peculiar character of the American Government in there being a perfect understanding between the legislative and executive branches in relation to the acknowledgment of a new power. Everywhere else the power of declaring war resided with the Executive. Here it was deposited with the legislature. If, contrary to his opinion, there were even a risk that the acknowledgment of a new state might lead to war, it was advisable that the step should not be taken without a previous knowledge of the will of the war-making branch. He was disposed to give to the President all the confidence which he must derive from the equivocal expression of our will.

This expression, he knew, might be given in the form of an abstract resolution declaratory of that will, but he preferred at this time proposing an act of practical legislation. And if he had been so fortunate as to communicate to the committee in anything like that degree of strength in which he entertained them—the conviction that the cause of the patriots was just; that the character of the war as waged by Spain should induce us to wish them success; that we had a great interest in that success; that this interest as well as our neutral attitude required us to acknowledge any established government in Spanish America; that the united Provinces of the River Platte was such a government; that we might safely acknowledge its independence.

But I have another precedent, more forcible. Andrew Jackson was President in 1836, 17 years after the Webster and Clay incident which I have mentioned. He refused to recognize the independence of the Republic of Texas, and he sent a message to Congress giving his reasons and insisting that it was the business of the President and that Congress had nothing to do with it and had no right to interfere. He used this language:

Prudence, therefore, seems to dictate that we should still stand aloof and maintain our present attitude, if not until Mexico itself, or one of the great foreign powers, shall recognize the independence of the new Government, at least until the lapse of time or the course of events shall have proved beyond cavil or dispute the ability of the people of that country to maintain their separate sovereignty and to uphold the Government constituted by them.

Immediately thereafter the Senate passed a resolution recognizing the independence of the Republic of Texas. That resolution was passed by the Senate, and the House of Representatives immediately made an appropriation for a diplomatic agent from the United States to the Republic of Texas, using practically the same language that Clay and Webster had used, and the same language which I had the pleasure of using in seeking recognition for Cuba, and substantially the same language as I have employed for the recognition of the Republic of Ireland:

If at any time before the President acted the question of the existence of the Republic of Texas had been raised, the Supreme Court would have recognized that Republic by reason of the action of Congress. (See 6 Wheaton.)

"Old Hickory" was moved to change his mind, and inside of 10 weeks one of his last official acts was to send an American minister to the Republic of Texas and to receive a minister from the Republic of Texas to the Republic of the United States. So it is clear that I am not acting without precedent, and I am not acting without reasonable hope of success, for the House of Representatives a few weeks ago passed a resolution by an overwhelming two-thirds majority expressing the hope that the peace commission would favorably consider the aspirations of the Irish people.

I think I have shown that the recognition of a new State is a governmental function, requiring action by the Executive and both branches of Congress; that in the consideration of treaties the House of Representatives must be finally consulted. If this branch of the Legislature disapproves of any treaty, we can defeat it by refusing appropriations. With that in mind, I have offered a resolution expressing the opinion of this House that we should separate the treaty of peace between the United States and Germany from the so-called league of nations, for the reason that I believe that the immediate consummation of peace between the United States and her enemies is the paramount issue, and that the league of nations, which is a treaty between the United States and our allies, and is not germane to, or any part of, the treaty of peace between the United States and her allies and Germany and her allies.

If I were a McCutcheon I would draw the picture so plain that even the wayfaring man could understand it. I would draw a picture of the President presenting to the Senate of the United States a treaty of peace between Germany and the United States, saying, "Gentlemen, here is also a treaty between the United States, France, Japan, Great Britain, and Italy as to what our children will do with them." I would have the Senate say to him, "Mr. President, our boys are 'over there.' We want them to come home. You have 15,000 of our boys in Russia. There are 4,000 women in Illinois who have sons or husbands in Russia fighting to settle foreign political disputes and to help in the collection of the principal and interest on Russian bonds. The war-making power, sir, is in Congress. Congress has never declared war against Russia. We want our boys home. They can not come home, apparently, until this treaty of peace is signed, and your proposition involves a thousand debatable questions as to what our conduct will be with each other after we have peace with Germany. The Senate is divided. A long debate on these questions means that you will hold our boys in Russia until another winter and our boys in France and Germany for years. We respect your opinion, sir, as to what we should do with Japan, Italy, and Great Britain, but you have no right to put a diplomatic rider on the treaty of peace." I would have the President then say, "You are willful and I am in power. You will either ratify the treaty I have made, which governs your conduct in the future, to please me, or I will keep this state of war pending until the next election." I would then have the Senate say, "Under the Constitution, which is the supreme law, we shall exercise our constitutional rights; we will confirm the treaty of peace with Germany and immediately take up with you and with all the nations of the world any treaty you wish to submit which is to hasten the time when there shall be universal peace. Mr. President, what have the thousands of questions between China and Japan, Italy and Austria, between Great Britain and France, between the United States and Japan—what have all these conflicting questions to do with the treaty of peace with Germany? Why divert the minds of the people from the treaty of peace and make its ratification depend upon your having your own way, regardless of the wishes of the people of the United States as represented in the Senate? There are enough serious questions in the treaty of peace to occupy the minds of the Members of the Senate and the people. Germany stole Shantung from China; Japan took it away in war from Germany. You now in this treaty of peace transfer the stolen goods from China to Japan and add a lot more of territory to it, taking it away from one of our friends, China, a peaceful people. You take by force 40,000,000 from a Republic and transfer them to the kaiser of the Far East—the Mikado of Japan. We would ratify the treaty of peace for the sake of peace; but you ask us, sir, that when the 'streak of yellow turns to red' and the Chinaman demands back the territory that has been plundered and stolen from him, you ask us to guarantee that we will send American boys to Japan to defend the larceny and maintain the territorial integrity of Japan. It was bad enough to ratify this robbery of China, but it is another question whether we shall guarantee that, in case China should be strong enough to demand back her own, we are to furnish American blood to maintain the territorial integrity of Japan. You ask us, sir, before we make peace with Germany, that we guarantee to furnish American blood and treasure to defend all our associates, who are kings, including Great Britain, Italy, and Japan, against a revolution where the people seek self-government. Oh, we know that you say that section 10 only provides that we guarantee the territorial integrity against outward aggression. But that is not true. It is so stated in your literature, but it is false. By article 10 you bind the American people to furnish men and money to defend their territorial integrity even against a 'threatened' invasion; or, if there is any 'danger' of outside pressure—if the Republic of South Africa should attempt again to live—how easy it would be for this council, a majority controlled by Great Britain, to say that there is danger, and call for help from France and the United States. If England should begin the slaughter of those who are to-day leading in the Irish Republic, how easy it would be for this court of the world, where England, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa have four-fifths of the votes, to declare that there is 'danger'; that Bulgaria or Turkey were going to help Ireland, and therefore the United States must again conscript her youth and sail away to prevent a republican flag from floating over the Emerald Isle."

I know the diplomacy of Great Britain; for a quarter of a century I have studied it. She is always willing to arbitrate if she has a majority of the judges in advance.

In 1897, when I first went to the Senate, I was pledged to vote for what I supposed was an arbitration treaty by Hay and Pauncefote providing that in case of differences which involved even the Monroe doctrine America should select one judge, England one judge, and in case they disagreed upon a third man then King Oscar of Sweden should be the third—a great and good man, but a monarch; and there were to be two monarchs to one republican to settle the differences between a monarchy and a republic. Wise diplomats! And we were so enamored with Pauncefote and British influence that we came within two votes of getting the Senate of the United States to put ourselves and all our sacred American ideals into a court of their choosing. I had had experience in politics in primary elections with two judges against me, and the effort by Great Britain was so cheap and so apparent that it has been one of the pleasures of my life to know that I assisted in the defeat of that treaty.

You say I am prejudiced against Great Britain. I am not. The English people are right, but the English Government is nearly always wrong. When we were struggling to maintain our own country and save the Union and wipe out slavery the English Government did everything they could to help destroy the Union; but the English people were with us. Lincoln said that it was the working people of Great Britain that saved us. He called attention once to the fact that the weavers, who were starving in England because their looms were empty for want of American cotton, assembled in mass meeting and declared that they would rather starve than to have their Government assist in perpetuating human slavery.

Oh, I know they say that Ireland seeking her independence is the same as the Southern States which rebelled against the Union. But the States which sought to go out in rebellion had made a sacred covenant in the Constitution to make a perpetual union. From the adoption of the Constitution until 1861 they had the protection of the American flag; their governments were supported by taxes levied uniformly over all our people. They made that solemn constitutional agreement voluntarily. But Ireland, since the days the British yoke was placed upon that little isle by force, has never ceased to resent it, and the English government in Ireland has always been retained by coercion and fraud.

But referring again to the league of nations and my desire to have you help me to separate the 10,000 debatable questions from the treaty of peace, so that our boys can come home and these heavy taxes be stopped that are now levied upon our people. If I had time I could point out to you a thousand questions where the American people will differ upon that league of nations.

Do you believe that the United States in the supreme council should have but one vote and England and her colonies six? Do you believe we should force any nation in the world to submit questions that that nation believes are questions of sovereignty or national honor? Are we to let the league or that council decide for us when or where American troops shall fight? Are we to become a nurse for Turkey and assume her responsibilities there? Are we to attempt to guard polygamy by moral suasion, or shall we send some distinguished gentleman from the United States to teach them the sacredness of the human family? Are we to let that council decide whether in case of a row between China and Japan which side we shall take, if any? Must we attempt to transfer the war-making power of the United States from the Congress of the United States to the overlords of the world? Must we agree to all of these things before the President of the United States will consent to a treaty of peace with Germany?

There was under Washington, thank God, an American policy! It has been followed from the days of Washington down to the present time; that was, to keep out of foreign wars, but to render any assistance that we could by way of public influence to a sister Republic to establish itself. Are we to abandon that policy before the President will let us make terms of peace and bring our boys back home? Oh, but my critic says of me that I favored the league of nations. I did. I spoke for it in the House of Representatives. But it was before the President moved the seat of government to Paris.

I believe in his 14 points. I believe that the doctrine of self-determination which he declared and which was accepted by all would mean peace. He came back with a basket upon his arm, which I supposed held the dove of peace. I opened the basket and I saw comfortably seated within the King of Italy, that great commoner the King of England, and that prince of democrats the Mikado of Japan. The King of Italy said, "I do not care for your 14 points. I want this and that which was agreed to by the secret treaty before America came into the war." And that great lover of democracy, the Mikado, said, "I want territory from our allies. I want to govern the people of Shantung without their consent." And the British lion smoothly and softly purred and said, "Give me the colonies of South Africa. Let my colonies have colonies. And we are going to let Uncle Sam be a wet nurse for Turkey."

I have no feeling against my President. He is the President of my country, and as such I would give my life to protect his. But I say it with all respect, he has been overreached in the field of diplomacy. He demanded open diplomacy, and his American constituents are in absolute ignorance as to what has transpired over there. No two correspondents agree. The terms and demands have not yet been submitted to the American people; and when he consented to break his first great rule of open covenants openly arrived at he put himself in the hands of the shrewdest diplomats and conspirators of the world.

Instead of making a treaty of peace he has opened negotiations for endless war. Why should a Republic like ours enter into a solemn agreement like the unholy alliance, that no change in any Government should be made without our consent; that the birth of new Republics is barred forever on the face of the earth; and that the divine right of kings and emperors and mikados is to be as fixed as the everlasting hills? Why leave it so that we should furnish blood and treasure to maintain the territorial integrity of monarchies? Why do you hate the man in India, South Africa, or China, or the Philippine Islands, or Ireland who wants self-government? Lincoln said, "No man is good enough to govern another without his consent." Who are you who denies this doctrine? I am an American of eight generations—excuse the personal—and I would rather die with my back to the wall facing a firing squad, I would rather end my life at the end of a rope, than to have any other nation in the world appoint governors or make laws for my own United States. Why should I hate another human being who has the same love of God, of country, and of home that I have?

But they say that this idea of an Irish Republic is a dream. That is what they said when our forefathers signed the Declaration of Independence. But it was a good dream, and it came true. That is what they said when they sneered at my resolution for the Cubans. But it was a good dream, and it came true. There are good dreams and bad dreams. The Kaiser dreamed of world dominion. It was a bad dream, and it did not come true. A barefooted young man from Illinois saw them sell mothers from their children in New Orleans, and he dreamed a dream. It was a good dream, and it came true. Good dreams come from the better angels of our natures. For 700 years the Irish people, in the storm and stress of oppression, have dreamed of liberty. It is a good dream, and as sure as God reigns it shall come true.

I did not at this time intend to reply to the criticisms and cheap flings made upon the Irish race, but late events in great legislative bodies seem to make it necessary. I am American of English blood, so far as I know. Hence not a drop of Irish blood is in my veins. My ancestors fought their English brethren in 1776 and 1812, but I bear no enmity toward the English people on that account. I was christened in the Church of England, and I hold no brief from any church, any race, or any country except the United States of America. As an American I resent the insults which alleged statesmen heap upon the Irish race to magnify the superiority of the English, in order to make it seem right that Great Britain should have six votes to our one in a court that may make peace or war for our country. Europe and not England is the mother of this country. Under our flag is the "melting pot" that makes us all Americans, and any man who assails any race that makes so large a part of the United States assails and belittles his own country.

Most of that race belong to a party and a church of neither of which am I a member. I have lived and associated with them nearly half a century, and common honesty compels me to say no truer Americans live than those people. They fought with my brothers for the Union and beside my son on the western front. Not one of them ever tried to amend our laws with a bomb, and no Irishman was ever found marching under the red flag.

To any honest student who wishes to know the truth as to the support given the United States by Ireland and have a knowledge of Irish affairs I recommend the reading of the addresses before the Senate committee, August 30, 1919, by Justice Cohalan, Frank P. Walsh, W. Bourke Cockran, Gov. Dunn, Gov. McDowell, and others. Read O'Brien's "Hidden Phase of American History." Read John Scanlon's "Why Ireland is Poor," and "The Irish Nationality," by Green. Read "Ireland," by Katherine Hughes, "The Irish Issue," by Dr. Maloney, and Francis Hocket's "Ireland."

Insisting on the power of Congress to act in international affairs, and in the same line of thought, I have introduced a resolution declaring that the United States is at peace with the world. That resolution rests in the archives of the committee, and I am met strongly with the proposition, not that we do not desire immediate peace but with the statement that Congress has no power to declare peace.

The Constitution of the United States provides that Congress has the sole power to declare war. I insist that the reasonable construction is that the power to declare war includes the power to declare peace, but if there is any doubt about it, then under the repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States the Constitution must be construed in the light of those great instruments of law which preceded it—the Declaration of Independence and the Articles of Confederation.

Mr. Justice Fuller, in McPherson v. Blacker (146 U. S., p. 27), decides this proposition and quotes from the Articles of Confederation and the Journal of the Constitutional Convention.

The following was furnished me through the kindness of Mr. W. H. McClenon, of the legislative reference of the Library of Congress:

Supreme Court decisions citing antecedent documents, etc., in interpretation of the Constitution.

In Cohens v. Virginia (6 Wheat., 264, 416–421) the Supreme Court (per Marshall, Chief Justice) discussed the establishment of courts under the Articles of Confederation and the probable attitude of the framers of the Constitution as "considerations to which courts have always allowed great weight in the exposition of laws."

In Rhode Island v. Massachusetts (12 Pet., 657, 723) the court (per Baldwin, justice) stated: "In the construction of the Constitution we must look to the history of the times and examine the state of things existing when it was framed and adopted (12 Wheat., 354; 6 Wheat., 416; 4 Peters, 431, 432) to ascertain the old law, the mischief, and the remedy."

In McPherson v. Blacker (146 U. S., 1, 27–28) the court (per Fuller, Chief Justice) stated that "where there is ambiguity or doubt, or where two views may well be entertained, contemporaneous and subsequent practical construction are entitled to the greatest weight," and discussed similar provisions in the Articles of Confederation and the Journal of the Constitutional Convention.

In Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S., 429, 558–568) the court (per Fuller, Chief Justice) discussed the history leading up to the adoption of the Constitution, the Articles of Confederation, and the debates on the adoption of the Constitution as a basis for determining a doubtful constitutional question.

In United States v. Wong Kim Ark (169 U. S., 649) the court again stated that the Constitution must be construed in the light of the history of the law previously existing, but did not refer to any antecedent document in that connection.

So that if there is any doubt, which I do not admit, as to the power of Congress to declare peace, this doubt is entirely relieved by reading the Articles of Confederation:

THE CONSTITUTION. 1784.	THE ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION. 1778.
Congress shall have power to declare war.	The Congress of the United States "shall have the sole and exclusive right and power of determining on peace and war."

This would seem to settle the question as to the power of Congress to declare peace. I think we should act now. The last gun was fired by our enemy a year ago. A treaty has been negotiated without the advice of the Senate. It has been submitted and not yet consented to by the Senate. The war in which our boys are dying was not declared by Congress. A thousand questions involving the comfort and happiness of our people now demand our attention. Taxation is almost beyond endurance and must be worse before better. Thousands of our troops are abroad, adding to our burdens of taxation and to the distress of our people. Thousands of our mothers, wives, and children are heartsick and praying for peace. They are not so much interested in elections in Silesia or the railroads of Siberia. They cry to us "Bring our boys home, the living and the dead." We have the power; I pray we may have the courage to answer their prayer.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OSCAR E. KELLER,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 17, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 9782) to regulate further the entry of aliens into the United States.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote for this bill because I think it is wise to curb immigration, especially of certain classes of immigrants. I believe we should be more strict with those we do allow to come into the country. A law should be enacted providing that all immigrants agree to make application for citizenship within a year after their entrance into the country. It would then become our duty to educate these immigrants as to their duties under that citizenship; teach them to become real, loyal American citizens; and also to establish such living and working conditions as to promote their welfare and provide for that happiness and contentment and liberty which inspired them to emigrate to this country.

We have, of course, many problems before us, but no concrete move has been made to formulate the big, comprehensive reconstruction program we so urgently need. The first move after the armistice was signed should have been an endeavor to stabilize conditions at home, but no definite action has ever been taken with this end in view. A feeble effort has been made, it is true, to strike at the high cost of living, but the results have been negligible.

The "high-cost-of-living" phrase is becoming more obsolete every day, in my estimation, for it has gotten to the point where it is the "high cost of existence" to the common people. A few months ago the President delivered a speech in Congress on the question of reducing the cost of living and suggested certain laws to be passed to curb the profiteer, who was considered the source of all the trouble. The profiteer, it is true, was, to a certain extent, responsible for the high cost of living, but the entire responsibility can not be traced to him. The destruction of property and putting to waste of farm lands during the war and the fact that millions of men were taken out of productive channels created a world shortage of food and other necessities of life—especially food and particularly fats—and it will take at least five years, in my opinion, to get back to normal conditions. So that no matter how much we save or how much we increase our production, we will have this condition for some time to come.

I have watched the action of the Government in trying to curb the profiteer, and I find that because of its efforts there has been at least a temporary lull in the constantly increasing prices. However, the plan of forcing food out of cold storage might help conditions somewhat for a few weeks, but a reaction is bound to occur next winter. The purpose of cold storage is to take our surplus in the productive months and preserve it for the nonproductive months, so that by forcing this stock onto the market now will create a condition next winter, as I have pointed out in previous remarks, that will be very bad, a condition which will be decidedly more serious than if we had left the food in cold storage. These are concrete facts that can not be denied.

So that I feel the effort of the Government to reduce the high cost of living can not be successful until more radical steps are taken. I want to cite one instance to show why the cost of the necessities of life is on the incline. The prices foreigners are paying for commodities are considerably higher than what they are here; in other words, the buyers are bidding higher all the time for the products of this country. For example, a United States manufacturer had practically made a bargain to buy some leather at a figure of 95 cents, and immediately a French buyer offered $1.15 per pound. Naturally the leather went to the French buyer. This shows plainly the conditions we have to meet. The American people are willing to sacrifice and save that Europe may be fed and clothed, but this sacrifice is not to be the source of untold millions for the profiteer at the expense of both our people and those of war-torn Europe. The packers several months ago published editorials and also advertisements in the papers asking the people to eat more beef, and the only reason for that suggestion is to save fats, especially pork, to be sent across to foreign countries. Now, that is a fine idea, for us to save and eat foods which they do not eat across the water so there will be more fats, which they want; but the American people are not going to do that so the packers and other profiteers and food handlers make millions, as has been the result in the past. The producers do not get these enormous profits for their products. The men who deal in foodstuffs for foreign markets and the agent for the foreign buyer are making these fortunes. To substantiate this statement, there appeared in the October 4 edition of the Literary Digest an article stating the bankers were opposed to the plan of an embargo on all but our surplus. It is just that class of men who would be opposed to such a plan because it would affect their business. Now, I admit the plan of an embargo would place a hardship on a few people, but in my estimation it would stabilize the condition of unrest in this country. No matter what we do or what plan is suggested, some business man or interest will be hurt, but we must look to help the majority of the people and the country as well.

I have a bill in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce now to put an embargo on food for five years, and also to fix the price, which must be done to protect the producer in this country after an embargo is placed on exports. A great deal of time and energy are being wasted in thinking that this big question will solve itself. I realize natural panics or unusual conditions right themselves by their own accord, but unnatural conditions created by war do not, so that we must take proper action to help the condition, and the only solution of the present crisis is an embargo. You may say it is an experiment; but all laws are experiments, regardless of what laws you pass.

It is the duty of Congress to take up this matter immediately and establish the machinery to carry out this program, which action should have been taken a year ago.

The argument that the bankers make in regard to the curbing of business to foreign countries is unsound, because we are going to sell our surplus; but we are going to curb them from making big profits, both on the American people and also on the foreign people. The plan is to ship out all surplus food, not at the end of the year, but continually, as we figure out what we can sell to foreign countries.

There is at present a very acute sugar shortage throughout the country, and it is anticipated that the price of this commodity will increase 50 per cent toward the end of this year, when Government control is relinquished. According to reliable figures, our exports of sugar have increased fortyfold in the last four years, or during the period of the war. It is, therefore, very evident that an embargo on the export of sugar, except our surplus, is very essential; in fact, is absolutely necessary. In order to protect both the merchant and the public, it will be necessary to fix the price, guaranteeing the merchant a fair profit for his product and protecting the public against the profiteer. Fixing the price without an embargo will only serve to drive our supply into the foreign markets. We must have both, the embargo and the price fixing.

What is true of sugar is also true of other foodstuffs, although possibly the situation is not quite as acute. Statistics show that of the total exports from this country in 1914 foodstuffs represented 17.3 per cent. This percentage steadily mounts upward, 1917 showing it to be 19.8 per cent; 1918, 26.5 per cent; and 1919, 36.6 per cent, while the imports of foodstuffs into this country for the same years were in the following proportions to our total imports: 1913, 22.4 per cent; 1914, 24.3 per cent; 1918, 23.7 per cent; 1919, 25.5 per cent, showing them to have been rather stationary. The constantly increasing cost of foodstuffs and the growing shortage in the necessities of life is easily traceable to the increasing exports of our supplies to foreign countries, and the only remedy is an embargo. The old adage that "charity begins at home" is growing more convincing every day. It is up to us to take care of our own wants first, then shipping our surplus to the foreign countries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 17, 1919.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I would have voted for this bill had it not been for the colloquy between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from Ohio, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Education [Mr. FESS], clearly demonstrating the fact that a poor cripple in destitute circumstances would receive no help or benefit whatever from this bill. For in his opening argument the gentleman from Ohio indicated that under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the board a cripple would have to pay his own way in obtaining this training, whereupon the gentleman from Michigan asked the following question—page 6656, column 2:

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Suppose he did not have money enough to go to school?

Mr. FESS. He would be unfortunate, that is all.

Now, such a construction absolutely destroys and thwarts the announced purpose and intent of the bill as stated in its preamble in lines 7 and 8, on page 1, wherein it states that the cripples for whom it is to provide rehabilitation are those—who are without sufficient means to provide for their own rehabilitation and their return to civil employment.

The crippled person with plenty of money and property does not need to be rehabilitated by his State or Government, as he is able to rehabilitate himself. It is the poor cripple without means who most of all sadly needs this rehabilitation, yet in the Committee of the Whole the Carss amendment was adopted striking out the words—who are without sufficient means to provide for their own rehabilitation.

So that a crippled millionaire could receive this training at public expense, while a poor cripple without means could not receive it, and only when I demanded a separate vote on this amendment in the House was it defeated.

Under the rules of the House only one motion to recommit is admissible, and the ranking member of the committee is first recognized, and where the previous question is ordered no substitute motion is allowable.

In order to protect the rights and interests of the poor cripple without means, and to make this act applicable to any person whether engaged in work or not at the time of the accident, I prepared and offered the following motion to recommit:

Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Education, with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

"On page 4, line 1, beginning with the word 'that,' strike out all of the balance of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"'The vocational rehabilitation provided for herein shall be given under the supervision and control of the State board, and all courses shall be available, under such rules and regulations as the Federal board shall prescribe, to all persons who are citizens of the United States and are financially unable to provide their own rehabilitation, disabled in their own or in industrial pursuits, including agriculture, trade, commerce, manufacturing, mining, transportation, all mechanic arts, and to civil employees of the United States disabled while in the performance of their duty: Provided, That persons who have received compensation for injuries and other disabled persons who are able to pay for same may be given rehabilitation training upon paying reasonable tuition therefor.'"

You will note that in the above motion prepared by me it is provided that in order to receive the benefit of this training the injured person must be a citizen of the United States. No such provision is in the bill itself. It is generally rumored that at the earliest date possible there will be an attempt to unload European cripples upon the United States. Germany will seek in every way possible to send many of her cripples to the United States, and under the provisions of this bill they would be entitled to this training the same as an American citizen. Therefore the benefits of this bill should be limited to citizens of the United States.

But under the rules of the House the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS], who outranks me on the committee, urged his privilege to be first recognized, qualifying under the rule, and immediately thereafter the chairman of the committee moved the previous question, preventing consideration of my motion as a substitute, and I could not therefore get a vote of the House on same.

If my motion to recommit had been adopted, I would have supported this bill, but because of the defects in same set out above I could not support the measure.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, October 18, 1919.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the rehabilitation bill that we have just passed has had a rocky road, and it is interesting to note how hard it is to get bills passed by this House. I am informed that of the 20,000 bills introduced at each term of Congress only about 200 ever become a law. Most of the people back home believe that every bill that is introduced by a Member sooner or later is voted upon by the House, but such is not the case. As Members of the House know, after a bill is introduced it is referred to a committee, and unless that committee reports the bill out that is the end of that bill. However, after the bill is reported out it then does not have easy sailing, as opposition to this bill shows. Most bills bear the name of the chairman of the committee to which they are referred, and it is very hard for a Member of the House not the chairman of a committee to secure the passage of a bill he may introduce.

One thing that displeased me very much was the fact that during the debate on this bill certain leading Republican Members of this House said some very unpleasant things about each other. This, of course, was pleasing to the Democrats. Not long ago I was attacked by one of the leading Members of this House, but I did not mind that, for I am a rather new Member; but if the leaders on the Republican side in this House fight among themselves, what are we neophytes to do?

I am very much interested in education and feel it is the duty of the National Government to encourage education every time we get a chance. We should not only educate the foreigner's children, but we must take the foreigner as soon as he lands on our shores and begin to educate him. Some of these foreigners make some of our best citizens; they fill positions of responsibility and trust. But there are other foreigners who do not become Americanized so easily and who bring to our shores their anarchistic ideas of government.

We welcome to our shores aliens who make citizens as good as our own colleague, the Hon. JOHN G. COOPER. He came here from England, became a citizen of this country, and has worked his way from engineer to the position of being one of the leaders of this House, and if the constitutional provisions did not prevent it I would suggest that the Republican Party next year could choose no better man to be their candidate for Vice President than our distinguished colleague, Hon. JOHN G. COOPER, from my State.

His progress shows what education and hard labor will do even for a man born in a foreign land.

I congratulate Mr. FESS that his bill has passed this House. He has been a hard worker in the cause of education all his life and he is entitled to the credit of putting this bill through this House.

I trust that this bill will be followed by other bills of a like character, and that Congress may go on record in no uncertain terms in favor of education, especially for the toiling masses.

The working people of this country are just as much entitled to education as those more fortunate, and I want to see the time when no child will have to pay for his own schoolbooks, as is done now in some parts of this country, but that education will be the easiest thing to get in this country and will be within the reach of all.

I believe in educating the alien as soon as he arrives, and if he can not, after a certain amount of education, understand our institutions, I would send him back home; and every alien who claimed exemption from military service because he was an alien should be started back at once.

Vocational Rehabilitation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN.
OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 17, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 4438) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industrial pursuits, including agriculture, trade, commerce, manufacturing, mining, transportation, and all the mechanic arts.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, this measure has the merit of seeming to be plausible. Its expressed purpose is admirable. It purports to be for the benefit of those crippled in industrial and other pursuits. This is a worthy object, which has my hearty and sincere sympathy and support. I believe that the Government should provide for the rehabilitation of those injured and crippled in civil occupation. I believe it to be a proper function of government to conserve man power and increase the productivity and usefulness of every member of society. That is as much the obligation and function of government as is the education of our youth, the preservation of the public health, and the protection of life and limb.

But when we concede these functions to government we must keep in mind that we have not only a Federal Government, holding together the several States, but also State governments, county governments, and municipal governments. What may be proper for one class of government to legislate upon and control might be wholly improper for any of the other classes of government to assume to regulate. Thus, while we recognize the necessity of traffic rules upon the streets of our cities, we, nevertheless, stoutly maintain that such rules are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the governing body of the particular city or municipality. We would not think of asking the State legislature to meddle with such matters, and if it were presumptuous enough to usurp the task there would immediately arise, and properly, too, a vigorous protest against such an invasion of the principle of home rule.

So, also, there are questions upon which it is proper for the State legislatures to act, but upon which it would be highly improper for the National Congress to act. The bill before us, in my deliberate opinion, comes within this category. I consider it an invasion of the prerogatives of our several States. I am aware that its supporters claim that it is not in the proscribed category of legislation with which our National Congress should not meddle.

The dividing line between that which is properly the subject of Federal legislation and that which is properly the subject of State legislation is vague, broad, and wavering. Many of our past sins in the way of legislation have been due to the indefiniteness of this line of demarcation. How may we determine and fix its direction and breadth so that Federal and State sovereignty may be mutually respected without overlapping in their functions? It is the same problem which confronted our predecessors in the past and perennially embarrasses us in the present.

From out the haze of doubt and uncertainty arising from judicial construction and past legislative experience there looms before us this beacon light to guide us, namely, the principle that whenever the individual States can act on their own initiative without financial help or Federal supervision, then Federal legislation is not necessary. From this it follows that Congress should not attempt to legislate or assume jurisdiction simply because a State may need the help or can use the help. Neither should Congress arrogate to itself this function simply because the proposed measure is praiseworthy or beneficial. Police, fire, and health protection is vitally necessary and salutary. Yet, what would be said if the National Government attempted through Congress to put the police, fire, and health departments of the several States under Federal supervision and control? The people would rise up in arms against a proposal so utterly subversive of the principles of our Government. Yet this measure, honeyed and sugar-coated as it is, and baited with the promise of Federal financial aid to the respective States, is just as subversive of the safeguards of our Government. In fact, it is even more dangerous on that account, because it attempts to bribe our support and allegiance by the promise of financial aid. In the last analysis it is nothing more nor less than a raid on the Treasury, made respectable by high-sounding names and the pretense emblazoned on its banners: "Help the poor, the blind, and the halt." As I said, the purpose is good and the raiding banners bear a commendable motto, but the cavalcade should direct its march upon the State capitols and not upon Washington.

It has been argued here that because Congress makes appropriations for the elimination of disease from cattle that we ought to supply limbs for crippled men. This is not a fair comparison. Cattle disease is contagious and may spread from State to State, jeopardizing the health of millions. Lameness, limblessness, and blindness are not "catching." The justification is the possibility of contagion.

It has also been argued that the Smith-Sears Act, passed in June, 1918, providing for the vocational education of soldiers and sailors disabled in their country's service is a precedent for the passage of the measure before us. Not at all. The Federal Government took these boys from civil life—hale, hearty, and strong—and if they have been crippled in the defense of their country it is the duty of the Federal Government to restore them as far as possible to health and usefulness.

This is no time to enlarge the sphere of congressional functions. This is no time to enlarge and extend Federal activities. This is no time to saddle upon our Treasury further expenditures and put upon the backs of the people further taxes. We are already overburdened with departments, bureaus, and officials. We ought to be thinking of getting rid of what we have rather than to increase their number and expense.

But aside from these issues, which are sufficient in themselves to persuade us against the wisdom of such a departure in Federal legislation, the measure before us is wholly unnecessary.

The several States are competent and I have no doubt are willing to take up such legislation. The workman's compensation bureaus in the various States already make provision for the financial recompense of those injured in industry. In the case of those crippled they make a financial settlement. Whether the financial settlement is large enough to enable the crippled to supply themselves with limbs or otherwise rehabilitate themselves or educate themselves for other pursuits is another question. But if the financial settlements are inadequate for that purpose, all that is needed is an amendment to the workman's compensation act which will correct the defect. The splendid educational institutions and facilities of the respective States can very easily be extended so as to provide for vocational rehabilitation. They do not need Federal encouragement to go into that work, and in order to carry it on they surely do not need financial assistance, with its obnoxious incidental Federal supervision. Federal aid and Federal supervision go hand in hand. Both are inherently offensive and subversive of self-respect, whether the recipient is an individual or a sovereign State. I hope that there is no State in this Union that will be willing to surrender its sovereign right of control over purely State matters in return for so mean and paltry a mess of pottage.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM C. LANKFORD,
OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 17, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 4438) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industrial pursuits, including agriculture, trade, commerce, manufacturing, mining, transportation, and all the mechanic arts.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, I came to the consideration of this measure with my mind perfectly impartial and without any prejudice or bias either for or against it.

The purpose of the bill is to authorize the United States Government to pay one-half the expense which any State may be put to in helping educate cripples, so as to enable the cripple not to be a beggar but be a self-supporting individual.

I am anxious for us here in Congress to economize and save all we can, but I can not find it in my heart to economize at the expense of the cripples of our land.

Mr. Speaker, I like this bill as passed by the Senate much better than in its present condition here in the House.

The Senate bill provides for the help and rehabilitation of all disabled persons. This has been changed by vote here so as to help only those crippled while actually at work on the farm or in the railroad shops and in certain other industries.

I do not like this reduction. On yesterday I offered an amendment to help all cripples whose occupation is farming, working in shops, or in the other named industries, regardless of whether the cripple is injured while actually at work or at some other time.

Why should a man who loses an arm while actually working at a machine shop get help, while a man who works just as much at the same shop but who loses an arm or leg while not working in the shop but while he is rescuing a child from a burning building, goes without help? The question answers itself. I am sorry my amendment lost. I am glad my amendment came so near being accepted. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that if the friends of the amendment could have mustered nine more votes it would have passed.

Even though this measure is now too limited, I am for it. If we pass this measure in its present form a conference will be necessary between House conferees and Senate conferees, and I am very hopeful that the Senate conferees will get the position of the Senate accepted, or at least get the provision of my amendment agreed to.

I like the bill, "what there is of it," but there is not enough of it.

Let us pass the bill and help save the unfortunate cripple from the scrap heap of humanity.

Let us not say of the unfortunate person who has lost an arm or a leg or is otherwise disabled:

Rattle his bones over the stones!
He's only a pauper, whom nobody owns!

Rehabilitation of Persons Disabled in Industry.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. C. ELLIS MOORE,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 17, 1919.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a serious accident is often a calamity in the life of any individual, especially as it affects the family and the ability of a wage earner to make a living. We are told that there are to-day in the United States more than a quarter of a million men, more or less disabled while engaged in industrial pursuits, thus making it impossible for these persons to do the work heretofore followed by them. We could pause and speculate upon the sorrow in the home and also the loss to productive industry with so large a number of persons who are taken from productive channels in the mill, the mine, the factory, on the farm and in the various industrial pursuits throughout our prosperous country. Rather, let us turn our attention to rehabilitating them.

I take it that everyone is interested in any proposition that contributes to the contentment, enjoyment, and productive pursuits of our people. I feel that the proposed legislation is one of the very best measures that has been brought to the attention of this Congress. It is humanitarian and yet at the same time economic. If a great country, such as ours, can reach out its strong arm and assist a quarter of a million of our wage earners in rehabilitating themselves so that they will not need to depend upon public charity but may engage in some other useful industry for which they have been fitted it is a scheme for benevolent and useful legislation well worthy of the consideration of everyone charged with the public interest and welfare. I therefore commend the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Education [Dr. FESS] and the other members of his committee for their good judgment in favorably reporting this bill and bringing it up for consideration. According to the provisions of this bill, the first year $500,000 will be available, the second year $750,000, and the third year, and each year thereafter, $1,000,000, which sums shall be used to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons who have been disabled in our various industrial pursuits. These sums are given upon the condition that the different States in the Union shall contribute like sums in order that these individual persons who have been disabled in industrial pursuits may learn some trade or occupation that they can follow in their disabled condition, thus returning them to civil employment and a useful industry. Certainly this is a benevolent and wise measure that will bring to many families contentment and support and is very desirable in these times when our Government is suggesting that all our people shall try and contribute the maximum amount of production of all necessities of life. If we can provide the means by which more than a quarter of a million persons can be trained for some useful employment we will have rendered a timely contribution to the individual's happiness and that of his family and at the same time provide a means for a livelihood where charity might have been necessary.

It has been urged, in the spirit of economy, that this legislation should not be enacted. I certainly concur in the opinion that we should practice economy and not spend the people's money except where it is for the good of the public. It should be our ambition to curb public expenditure and so control it that for each dollar expended we would receive a dollar's worth in return. It does seem to me, however, that this great Nation of ours would not want to place property rights before humanitarian interests. This Nation wisely looks after the property of its people and expends millions of dollars each year in trying to conserve and develop the products of the farm by fighting pests and diseases that affect these products. Certainly no one should object if at the same time we show our interest in the unfortunates and thus place the person at least on as high a plane of consideration as his property.

This Congress enacted legislation, and very properly, appropriating millions of dollars for rehabilitation of the soldiers who were injured in the service. There are more than a quarter of a million of our disabled soldiers, we are told by the War Department, and I am sure that an appreciative people will be glad to give millions more, if necessary, to provide our disabled soldier boys with proper training, such as they may choose, in order that they may return to civil life and be fitted for industrial pursuits.

Perhaps we have not stopped to think that we have more disabled persons in this country who have been injured in industrial pursuits than soldiers who were disabled in the great World War, but such is the case. Most of these men have been injured through no fault of their own, except that some accident has overtaken them. An interested Government will see that these unfortunate persons are given sufficient opportunity for vocational training to enable them to return to some profitable, useful, and satisfactory employment.

I am convinced that this most excellent measure should receive the unanimous support of this House, for any reasonable legislation that will substitute joy for sorrow, industry for idleness, ability for disability, productiveness for lack of the same is both humanitarian and sound economically and should be undertaken by us as a step in the right direction to keep up the highest standard of efficiency among our people.

Rehabilitation Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN S. BENHAM,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, October 16, 1919.

Mr. BENHAM. Mr. Speaker, no Member of this House is more profoundly impressed with the necessity of practicing the most rigid economy in the expenditure of public moneys than myself. During the past two and one-half years we have been the most reckless spendthrifts that the world has ever known. I shall aim at all times to strive for public savingness, both in the time I shall consume in the House and by my vote. When I am convinced that my message is worth at the rate of $3,000 per hour I shall try to make myself heard, and when I feel that by appropriating one dollar out of the National Treasury we can save two in the cost of the maintenance of almshouses and insane hospitals, I shall, I hope at all times, vote for that appropriation; and believing now, as I do, that the enacting of this bill into law will open the door of hope to thousands of worthy but indigent cripples of our country, and that in many hundreds of these cases they will not only again become self-reliant and self-supporting industrial workers, but will become as well a source of inspiration to their fellows. I shall support the bill.

OF

HON. CHAS. POPE CALDWELL,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, August 18, 1919.

The House had under consideration House resolution 217, directing the Federal Trade Commission to inquire into the proposed increase in price of shoes, sugar, clothing, and coffee.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that the question of whether or not Congress should legislate at this time for the purpose of giving the Executive the power to reduce the high cost of living is one that is purely a question of economy. We have been taught from the time we began to reason upon the question of prices that prices were controlled by the law of supply and demand. We have been told that so many times that we have come to believe it, and it has become axiomatic. As a matter of fact, however, there are under the present developments of commercialism in America at least two other elements than the law of supply and demand, and those elements are just as important as supply and demand. One of them is control and the other is the purchasing power of the customer. No matter what the supply is, if it is controlled then the small demand that there might be relatively is sufficient to get as high a price as the customer can pay. We are doing all that we can to stimulate production.

We can not do anything in a legislative way to increase the supply more than we have done. The purchasing power of the customer, our own American people, is created by reason of the fact that the gold of the world is here, and all the world is coming here to do business with a profit to us, that we have increased our merchant marine so that instead of paying out the enormous freight rate we did before, freight charges are now coming into our own coffers, and in many ways we have become the richest Nation in the world.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman explain to us what we have done as a Congress to increase production?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes; I can tell a lot of things that we have done as a Congress. One of the things we were more interested in, so far as the matter of the cost of living is concerned, so far as production is concerned, was to get enough bread to eat, and this Congress passed a law stimulating the farmers to sow the whole country with wheat so that we might have food for our people and for the rest of the world. The farmers complied with our request and have operated under the law that this Congress passed, and they have sowed the fields with wheat and yet the price stays up.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman tell us how it would stimulate the production of wheat to fix the price of $2 when right across the line in Canada, where the price is not fixed, wheat is selling for $3.50?

Mr. CALDWELL. I was not talking about what would happen now. I was talking about what we did then. The gentleman asked me what we had done to stimulate the production in this country. Let me go on. We can not do anything to take the money away from the American people so that they can not buy. It would not be expected of Congress to pass a law that the money that has been issued by the Treasury is no longer fiat, and that we could not spend it in our country, and in that way reduce the per capita wealth of our Nation. What then is it that we must do? We must strike at the control, and how are we to do that?

When this country was organized, it was organized by an English-speaking people who had come here because of the hardships of the Government under which they had lived. One of the things that they complained of more than all others was the fact that the land of the country was controlled by a few people and they had to work for the price that the landlord would give and were more or less attached to the soil. Therefore every State in this Union in its organization provided by its constitution that we should no longer have entailed estates, because we did not intend that the wealth of America should be controlled.

But since that time we have found under the commercial activities of the American business man that it is not the land of the country that controls the prices of the necessities of life, but it is the banking facilities, the commercial enterprises, the gigantic organizations that get control of these various things that go to make up the necessities of life—the money power of the country.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. In just a minute I will. Now, then, if that is so, why not have this Congress get in here and do for personal property what the men who organized this country did for real estate when they organized it? Why should not we say that you shall no longer have a continued control, that no longer shall there be a corporation that is handed down from clique to clique that will hoard its surplus earnings and expand so as to take in not only the enterprises they had started out in but all other kindred enterprises over which it might have any kind of control?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes more? I have been interrupted.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield the gentleman five minutes more, and I trust the gentleman will discuss the matter before the House.

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Does not the gentleman think if Congress would limit the amount of money that banks can loan to combinations that corner foodstuffs that it would help some?

Mr. CALDWELL. It might, and I think, further, that if Congress would provide that no corporation engaged in business controlling the necessities of life could engage in interstate commerce longer than a certain period of years so as to prevent a continued control, and, as Mr. KING says, let it die and administer the estate, and provide a limitation on the surplus it could accumulate we would not be troubled with the high cost of living any more, and we would be protected from the kind of financiering and control that we are now suffering from.

Now, in reference to this resolution, I have always felt and I feel now that an honest man does not mind being watched and a crook needs it. If this resolution could by any manner of means reach out and take in men, find them guilty of a crime, who have been extorting from the American public, then this resolution is a good one. But if it does not do that we expend a mere bagatelle, and I therefore am in favor of the resolution.

Mr. EMERSON. The gentleman is also in favor of my amendment to include clothing and food?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes, sir.

Rehabilitation of Persons Disabled in Industry.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES J. THOMPSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, October 18, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 4438) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industrial pursuits, including agriculture, trade, commerce, manufacturing, mining, transportation, and all the mechanic arts.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, this Congress is supposed to be a constructive and reconstructive body. The Sixty-fifth Congress took orders. This, the Sixty-sixth Congress, does not. To-day I am pleased to note the debate on this bill. There are two sides to every question, and I recognize and respect the able arguments of Members who, in their wisdom, oppose this great constructive measure which bears the name of my distinguished and able colleague, the Hon. SIMEON D. FESS, of the seventeenth Ohio district. On some points I agree with the opponents of the bill, yet I am moved to support it, the arguments of the opposition to the contrary notwithstanding. This is a great Nation and a broad country composed of empires within empires. My own great State of Ohio, which I have the privilege and pleasure to represent in part, is said to be greater now in wealth, industry, and population than the entire British Empire was in the days of Queen Elizabeth. The fifth Ohio district, which I represent, is as large, approximately, as the combined States of Delaware and Rhode Island. It contains more than 20,000 rich, fertile, productive farms, beautiful inland towns and cities, and very many prosperous and varied industries.

My people gave up much of what they possessed to contend successfully for the right to live as we all want to live, as Americans. Billions upon billions of precious dollars have been expended that America might work out her own destiny, and we should not now be niggardly in the consideration of the human side of reconstructive problems this Congress can not avoid facing.

Dr. Little, a former commissioner of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, made the following pertinent observation, which may well apply to this bill:

> One of the most pitiful things in my observation of American life is the way in which we have wasted the young manhood of our country and neglected to salvage the results of our industries. For the last 20 years it has been my work, in three large American cities, to have something to do with the problems of dependency, and therefore to deal with the question and the problem of the victim of industry and how we can help him; and it is one of the most difficult problems that citizens or groups of citizens undertake to solve, and the principal reasons that we have made no progress was because there was no broad or comprehensive scheme developed by any municipality, county, or State or by the National Government to deal with the problem; and we are creating a large class of dependent people who not only are dependent themselves but who affect their families and the groups of life that they touch; they are increasing the ranks of that unknown number of floating, casual workers and the mendicants in the streets of our cities, whereas a considerable percentage of them might be educated or reeducated and trained and made productive units of society.

This bill is built up around the design and purpose to encourage the States to uniformity and more broadly take care of the problems set forth in the foregoing. I live in a manufacturing city and can realize, from observation, that throughout the land, each year, possibly by thousands, young, able-bodied workingmen lose limbs, feet, toes, arms, fingers, and eyes. They are thus disqualified, many of them, from following their usual occupation. Do they not, therefore, present both a great opportunity and a tremendous human appeal for vocational rehabilitation? The Fess bill considers the human equation. It provides for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industrial pursuits, including agriculture, trade, commerce, manufacturing, mining, transportation, and all the mechanic arts, of those who are without sufficient means to provide for their own rehabilitation and their return to civil employment.

"Few people realize," said John Mitchell, in his testimony at the committee hearings on this bill, "the frightful toll of injuries imposed by industry upon the working people. Each year there are more than 2,000,000 industrial accidents, resulting in loss of time, and more than 700,000 where inability to work extends through a period of at least four weeks. There are annually in industry more than 22,500 fatalities."

United States Surg. Gen. Rupert Blue has well said, "Human life and human efficiency are the two most precious things on earth," yet the total economic loss from industrial accidents in one State alone, namely, Massachusetts, was estimated conservatively to be $15,000,000 per year.

Dudley M. Holman, addressing a conference at Boston of the committee on social welfare, said that "We are killing and maiming more people in industry annually than were called to the colors in the first three drafts." "Every worker," said he, "is an economic asset whose value increases or decreases in proportion to his productivity. He becomes a liability when he is rendered unable to work from any cause, whether that cause is accident or preventable trade disease. This unnecessary social waste is a large contributing factor in the increased cost of living. Through our failure to grapple with this problem a large army of producers become an army of consumers, and money which should go into dividends and profits, increased wages and salaries, is expended for these unfortunates, who have been tolerated too long. There is serious doubt if we can meet the requirements thrown upon us by this World War if we do not at once begin to stop this waste."

This Congress, which in the first 30 days of its existence saved the country $1,500,000,000 in the passage of the eight appropriation bills which failed of passage in the Sixty-fifth Congress, can well afford to pass this bill as an economic, constructive, and splendid piece of legislation. The $500,000 provided to carry this bill into operation is a mere bagatelle compared to the millions that will be carried in the increase to civil and other war veterans by this Congress. Money is spent liberally by the Agricultural Department to stamp out pests of various names and appellations. Surely this Congress can afford to legislate for the industrial millions of America and recognize the tremendous social and economical value to the Nation by investing money in the conservation of humanity—human life, human health, and human happiness and contentment.

I shall support this bill, and congratulate its authors and its champion, Dr. FESS, upon the tremendous good it will inevitably and ultimately accomplish throughout the Union.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROSCOE C. McCULLOCH,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, October 21, 1919.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following letter from a major in the Army containing valuable information, as I view it, in regard to war-risk insurance:

INFANTRY SCHOOL OF ARMS.
CAMP BENNING, GA., August 29, 1919.

Hon. ROSCOE C. McCULLOCH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have examined the amendments you propose to the war-risk insurance act, and believe they will come nearer meeting the condition now confronting the bureau, Congress, and the soldier than anything so far proposed.

By an examination of the history of the passage and purpose of the war-risk insurance act, and following through its various changes by amendments from an emergency act to protect our commerce on the sea to a casualty and life insurance proposition, it can readily be seen why after a couple of years' experience many changes could and should be made that would be very beneficial.

The original act as approved September 2, 1914, was an emergency merchant marine proposition intended to encourage and protect commerce and only covered ships and cargoes. The proposal to include the lives of the officers and sailors was rejected by its sponsor in the Senate, but was amended June 12, 1917, to include the officers and crew. So that after two years experience it was found that the lives of the crew were at least of equal importance to the freight.

The law was further amended October 6, 1917, to include all persons in the naval and military service of the United States and providing for casualty, automatic, and term life insurance. The law has been amended thirteen times and is now before the House for its fourteenth time and attention. As it has been so much improved by former amendments, it is certainly to be hoped that it will further be very materially bettered by adopting the amendments which you propose.

The compensation proposed in the amendments to article 3 is the most liberal and generous ever offered by any government in the world and surely meets the expectations and desires of the American people.

The automatic insurance provided in article 4 is a generous law, and its provisions cover many cases of special merit that could not, to my mind, be reached so well in any other way than as provided by this section.

Article 4 contains the main insurance features of the law. Under this law the bureau issued $39,633,000,000 insurance—more than the five largest insurance companies in the world. This insurance was optional to all those eligible, but all were urged and practically required to take it. Its provisions were not explained or understood then and but little better understood to-day. But few, if any, understood that the premiums automatically were increased yearly; that at time of discharge they would be offered various forms of policy, the premiums on which but few could pay. That this would happen at a time of all times when it would be impossible for millions of these men to comply with the requirements of the bureau they did not foresee. The result is that more than 3,000,000 men have dropped their insurance. More than thirty billions of insurance has lapsed. It would seem this is a sufficient reason for Congress to inquire why.

The fact is the insurance is not attractive and is regarded by most of the men as worthless in the form offered. When required to change from a fraternal to an old-line form of policy and plan of insurance he could not meet the premiums. The greater his need for protection of himself and dependents the less his ability to carry it. Those who can carry it are the more fortunate and with the least need of it. In my judgment it is the duty of Congress to make this insurance both attractive and possible for the soldier in the most humble circumstances. When his service was faithful, and he offered his all, even his life, his country should not only deal justly with him but generously as well.

It is entirely useless to say to him, "Keep your insurance; it is a good thing for you; you should hang onto it," and knowing at the same time that it is impossible for him to do so under the terms offered and the conditions confronting him.

If the war-risk insurance was offered him in continued fraternal form, with a fixed rate, which he would be assured would not be increased or changed; that when he reached the age of 64 years, his earning capacity gone, that this great Republic would no longer exact premiums; and, last but not least, that his policy would be paid and his deserving beneficiaries would receive it in a reasonable time and in such manner that it would be worth his efforts to save it, I have no doubt he would continue his insurance. Unless and until this is done this insurance feature of the law is doomed to failure. Congress should meet the situation now. It is an urgent necessity calling loudly for immediate action, and all should know that sooner or later it must be met, as it directly affects millions of American homes, which is the final arbiter of all questions in this Republic.

As your amendments cover the four distinct and vital provisions that in my judgment are necessary to make this insurance either attractive or possible to the great majority of our soldiers, viz, two years' exemption from payment of premiums, which would give the soldier opportunity to get settled in employment, business, or profession; second, the payment of his policy in a reasonable time and manner and a relief to his dependents; third, fixing an established rate of premiums which can not be changed at the whim of the bureau or anyone else; fourth, relieving the soldier of further payment of premiums when he reaches 64 years of age, to which the veterans of previous wars that we see every day is an all-sufficient answer.

Therefore I earnestly hope for their favorable consideration.

Sincerely, yours,

A. B. CRITCHFIELD,
Major, United States Army.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MOSES P. KINKAID,
OF NEBRASKA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 20, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, under the general leave just granted to Members to extend their remarks, I am prompted to avail myself of this privilege only for the purpose of expressing my regret at not being permitted to vote for the measure. To explain: A few minutes after I had voted against the motion to recommit the bill, having previously voted in the committee to maintain the bill in general, I was called to my office on a matter of official importance, requiring attention for only a few minutes, and had expected to get back in time to vote on the final passage of the bill, and should have done so except that I mistook the first ring of the bells for the call on the final passage to be the second ring on the motion to recommit, with the result that when I reached the floor of the House to vote on the final passage my name had been passed not more than a quarter of a minute.

Of course, I had intended to vote for the bill, having been an advocate of a budget plan for many years. I regret not being permitted to record my vote under the rules, notwithstanding my presence on the floor for probably 20 minutes before the roll call was completed after the letter "K" had been passed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. L. S. ECHOLS,
OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 17, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 4438) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industrial pursuits, including agriculture, trade, commercial, manufacturing, mining, transportation, and all the mechanic arts.

Mr. ECHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I feel that I ought to apologize to the older Members of this House for taking a few minutes of time; however, since it has apparently become our duty to regulate, socialize, and internationalize the affairs of the world I may be pardoned for taking a very inconspicuous part in such regulation, socialization, and internationalization—or rather raising my voice in opposition thereto. We new Members of this Congress have received a great deal of advice by older Members on both sides of the aisle concerning how we should act and vote. We fully appreciate that advice. I do not assume to speak for the new Members, but I hazard the guess here and now that most of us on this side of the aisle are ready and anxious to vote against wasteful expenditure of public money when we feel that our votes will count for anything more than mere protests.

I have gathered from the discussions that have gone forward here that governmental departments have gone on spending money without warrant of law and then coming to Congress and asking for appropriations to complete the work that was undertaken without authorization. I can understand why such practice might be indulged in to a limited extent in time of war, but I am utterly unable to understand why it should be tolerated in time of peace. The time to stop a wrong is when we find out the wrong exists. The time to prohibit departments from unlawfully expending money is now, and the way is by refusing to make appropriations.

The debates on this bill have disclosed that the Federal Board for Vocational Education has made anything but a success in its efforts to take care of the wounded soldiers and properly use the appropriations it now has entrusted to its care, and now Congress is attempting to place at its disposal a large additional sum of money and increase its powers. Judging from what has already developed in this discussion, there will be about as many employees added to the Government pay roll as there will be cripples who receive aid under this measure if it becomes law. As I view it, there has been no sound argument presented here justifying the passage of this bill at this time. We are told that it is a humanitarian measure and that it will cure Bolshevism. We tried to run the world on humanitarianism and idealism. It did not work. It will not work. This measure may be humanitarian, but nobody believes it will even tend to cure or reduce Bolshevism. Even if it is humanitarian, that is not sufficient to justify its passage. Hundreds of bills could be introduced that might attract our tender sympathies.

I have sat here for hours and listened to debates by men of long experience in legislative matters about reducing the high cost of living. Within the past few weeks, at least, six departments or bureaus have asked the Congress for appropriations to be expended in an effort, as they claim, to reduce the high cost of living. The Department of Justice asked for $2,400,000, and that sum was appropriated; the Federal Trade Commission asked for $500,000, and $150,000 was appropriated; the Department of Agriculture asked for $505,000, and $50,000 was appropriated; the Bureau of Census asked for $200,000; the Department of Commerce asked for $485,000; and the Department of Labor asked for $375,000. These appropriations, asked for upon the ground that they would reduce the high cost of living, aggregate $4,465,000, and not a single one of the departments or bureaus asking for them has brought any general or specific information to this House to show that the use of any of this money will, in the least, reduce the high cost of living; and now comes the Department of Labor asking for an appropriation of $200,000 to be expended in holding an international labor conference. This conference will be the next step toward a transfer of our domestic affairs to Europe under the league of nations, and, therefore, another step toward socialism and internationalization. Let me here parenthetically suggest that it will be a sorry day for the American laborer when he lets the control of his affairs pass from out his own hands into the hands of the communists of the Old World.

Some of the Members on the minority side of the House have been very much surprised and aggrieved because all these appropriations were not granted. If some department should come to Congress and ask for an appropriation to construct a cold-storage plant in hades or to regulate the affairs of paradise, and state that it is for the purpose of reducing the high cost of living or aiding some cripple, I am inclined to the opinion that it would be looked upon with some favor, providing such appropriation could be made the excuse for placing a few more employees on the Federal pay roll. It occurs to me that with the Government running three and a half billion dollars short for the year it is time to stop appropriations of money upon the mere ground that they are desirable and might possibly in some remote way reduce the high cost of living or help some cripple whom the Government is under no obligation whatever to take care of. I am ready and willing to lend my support to any bill that has for its purpose the vocational training of those who were crippled in the service of the Government during the Great War. I make a clear distinction as to the duty of the Government in taking care of those who were injured in its employ and those who may be injured in industrial pursuits.

Because I felt that my judgment should not be set up against the judgment of the older Members of Congress, I have voted for appropriations that I really felt were not justifiable, but I confess that the time has come when conscience compels me to vote against the recommendations of committees asking for these appropriations. I do not enter upon the question of whether or not this legislation is desirable. It is not necessary at this time. This is no time to embark upon any new field of legislation that will be a perpetual drain upon the Treasury, it matters not how much it may appeal to our sympathies, unless that legislation is absolutely necessary to the general welfare of the country. No such necessity has or can be shown in support of this bill. This bill is only the forerunner of one which will cost not only tens of thousands of dollars annually, but tens of millions of dollars annually. It is not so much the initial cost of this bill, but the principle involved and the ultimate annual cost it will require.

Oh, I admit that I become somewhat confused when I undertake to comprehend the figures in dollars asked for by these departments to conduct the Government's affairs, and I become more confused when I hear some of the older Members of the House advise us why these sums of money are necessary in time of peace; and it is enough to drive a "youngster" mad to listen to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] tell the younger Members how we should vote upon a tariff bill.

Last year these departments were constantly asking for appropriations on the ground that they were necessary to win the war. We saw the waste of not only thousands of dollars but millions of dollars appropriated for that purpose, and now we have other excuses, and nearly every department and bureau is asking for appropriations to help reduce the high cost of living or to aid the cripples or to help put down Bolshevism. My judgment is that the greater part of the money appropriated for these purposes is money thrown away. The people of the country did their utmost last November to take from this administration its power to waste money. I have now been here long enough to confirm my judgment, arrived at long ago, that there is no hope of reducing expenditures by merely calling attention to waste. It will have to be done by the reduction of appropriations. Now is a good time to begin.

The Federal Government is going far afield when it undertakes to establish the precedent of taking care of those who are so unfortunate as to become crippled in industrial pursuits. My State (West Virginia) now has in its treasury $6,524,000 to be paid to those whom this bill is intended to protect. If this bill becomes a law, it will be an excuse for those States having workmen's compensation laws to repeal or amend them. It is manifestly unfair for the industries of my State, also for the industries of other States having workmen's compensation laws, to be taxed for the purpose of taking care of those injured in the industrial pursuits of those States that have not passed such laws. As I view it, this is a question that the States should deal with and not the Federal Government. I am no advocate of State rights, but I am an advocate of the States performing the duties they should perform and not shifting those duties to the Federal Government.

Neither the business nor the education of the country can be successfully conducted by boards, bureaus, administrators, and director generals here in the city of Washington. In practically every instance where such efforts have been made they have resulted in confusion in the conduct of business and in injury to the general public. Every time Congress passes a bill making appropriations for the creation of one of these unnecessary bureaus or adds a dozen, a hundred, or a thousand unnecessary employees to the Government service it lends its encouragement to those who depend upon the Government for their support and not upon their individual efforts. It is time for the Congress to say to the people of the country that they must not look to the Government for their support. The War Risk Insurance Bureau now has 16,000 employees on the pay roll, and if we are to believe the evidence that emanates from that bureau only chaos prevails there. The trouble with this country to-day is high taxation and lack of production. High taxation can not be reduced by unnecessary appropriations; production can not be increased by taking the people out of their ordinary pursuits and placing them on the Federal pay roll. Why not Congress say to the people of the country that we know what the trouble is, instead of trying to remedy it by the enactment of laws, the creation of bureaus, and the appropriation of money that in no way can help the situation? We will reach the time when we must say so, and why not do it now?

The head of one of these bureaus, Mr. Hoover, some two years ago made the prediction that there would be an abundance of foodstuffs, and therefore the cost of living would decline. The business people of the country knew at the time, and so advised the administration, that there would be no oversupply of food, and therefore no decline in the cost of living. Then came Mr. Garfield, at the head of the Fuel Administration, advising the people of the country that there would be an oversupply of coal and to stop buying coal at the high prices and that the cost of coal would soon decline. He got the whole country in trouble by talking about a thing that he knew nothing about. Not only was there not an oversupply of coal, but within a few weeks after he made his prediction and gave his advice we were in the midst of the greatest fuel shortage that ever afflicted the country. A few months ago the administration again gave out similar advice respecting the fuel situation, and now, before winter is upon us, the country finds itself a hundred million tons short in the production of coal, with strikes everywhere and more being threatened. The business people of the country now believe the only salvation from a coal shortage is a mild winter, and not even the national administration, with the abnormal intellectualism of the Chief Executive, can tell the country just what kind of weather we are going to have. The head of the Railroad Administration recently went before a Senate committee and, in effect, advised the country that the coal producers could produce 40 per cent more coal than is necessary to run its business, and therefore he would only furnish cars in sufficient number to supply the coal for our own domestic use. It does seem to be rather a sad situation when the business interests of the country are held up by a car shortage that is under the control of one man situated here in the city of Washington. I hope the day will soon come when the business and labor of the country can be released from shackles and chains that bind them in the hands of communists, administrators, bureaus, and boards that know nothing, or but little, about the affairs they are trying to conduct.

This bill, if enacted into law, will add a little more to the burdens, difficulties, and confusion of the country and further obstruct the Federal Board for Vocational Education in its efforts to properly administer the soldiers' vocational education law and thereby deprive the soldiers of the benefits of a law passed for their special benefit.

Rehabilitation of Persons Disabled in Industry.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ISRAEL M. FOSTER,
OF OHIO.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 17, 1919.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, this is a most commendable bill, introduced and championed by my good friend and colleague, Mr. FESS of Ohio. It provides for the vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industrial pursuits, which pursuits include mining, agriculture, manufacturing, transportation, and all the mechanic arts, who are without sufficient means to provide for their own rehabilitation and for their return to civil employment. It further contemplates that the Federal and State governments shall jointly assume and carry forward this humane work. Just as the soldiers' rehabilitation act applies to the promotion of vocational training for crippled soldiers so this bill extends vocational training to all persons crippled in the industries. Surely there can be no question about the tenth Ohio congressional district favoring the passage of such a measure.

Complaint has been voiced by former Speaker CLARK and others that this proposed rehabilitation is too costly. A hurried calculation shows that for the first year it will cost the people of the tenth Ohio congressional district but $900—that being one-half of 1 cent for each citizen residing in the district. In return for that investment all of those crippled in our mines, factories, or on our farms are to be cared for. Not one of these classes embraced within the 180,000 loyal Americans residing within our district but would willingly pay $900 rather than deprive the unfortunates of our district of this vocational rehabilitation. A recent Congress appropriated $2,250,000 to stamp out the foot-and-mouth disease among our cattle, and another recent Congress appropriated $400,000 to remove the pink boll worm from the State of Texas. Some of the same gentlemen who favored these appropriations are now found balking on an appropriation of $500,000 to be used in conjunction with State appropriations for the rehabilitation of our physical unfortunates and to restore them to civil employment. The author of this bill assures us that there are annually at least 700,000 persons crippled to the extent of four weeks' loss of time and 22,500 totally disabled.

The tenth Ohio congressional district, famous for its mines, farms, and factories, doubtless contributes her share of these unfortunates. My colleague from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] informs us that our wounded battle casualties in the American Expeditionary Forces were 230,000, of which 100,000 are rated as severe, while our industrial losses per year are 2,000,000 casualties, of which 800,000 involve disabilities of one month's duration, and of this number 75,000 each year involve loss of hand, arm, leg, finger, or eyesight. As we pause long enough to consider what these figures mean, this false cry of "too costly" vanishes. In this connection I trust it will not be considered out of order to remind our Democratic brothers that the Republican majority during the present session made a saving of approximately $1,500,000,000 on the appropriation bills which were considered during the first seven weeks of this session. These appropriation bills failed of passage in the last Democratic Congress, and the savings thereon during the first seven weeks of the present session averaged $30,000,000 for each hour the House of Representatives was in session during those first seven weeks.

Opponents of this meritorious measure insist that it is "unconstitutional" and that it infringes their conception of "State rights." I do not care to discuss it from either of these angles, as I am satisfied the citizens of the tenth Ohio congressional district will not be disturbed by either of those contentions.

It is a pleasure for me to support this bill when I realize that it will furnish a maximum of protection and rehabilitation at a minimum of cost to thousands of loyal American citizens residing in the tenth Ohio congressional district. For the benefit of those who are in doubt as to the exact field covered by this bill, I quote the statement of Mr. FESS relative thereto which was made yesterday on the floor of the House and which was as follows:

I believe that it is the function of the Government to rehabilitate and rebuild the poor fellow who has lost any limb, who has come to be not only a wreck and a burden to himself, but a subject of charity on the public and under a hopeless despair, so far as he himself is concerned, a charge not only to himself, but on the people. It is a wise provision to train him so that he can be self-supporting and make out of himself something where before he was merely a subject of charity. And that is the purpose of this bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM L. CARSS,
OF MINNESOTA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, October 16, 1919.

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, my object in proposing to strike out the words on page 1, lines 7 and 8, "who are without sufficient means to provide for their own rehabilitation" is to call to the attention of the committee the fact that a man or woman who has been injured or crippled in industry, but who may have by diligence and thrift accumulated a little money, or who may belong to some organization that provides disability funds, would not under this law in its present form be able to participate in the benefits that this law provides. I am in favor of this bill. It is not a matter of sympathy; it is purely a measure in the interest of economy, for I believe the passage of this law will tend to increase production, which is one of the greatest needs of the present time. If we increase production we will be able to decrease the cost of living, which is responsible for much of the industrial unrest of to-day.

If by this legislation we are enabled to take a producer who, by reason of injury, has become a liability to society and, by rehabilitation, restore him or her to industry, thus transforming a liability into an asset, I believe it would be a judicious expenditure of the public funds to provide the necessary means to bring about the desired result. Great progress has recently been made in rehabilitating cripples. Many cases that were formerly considered hopeless have, by improved methods, been restored to useful and gainful occupations, and in many cases cripples have been able to enter some new trade or profession, where they are now earning more than they were earning in the industry or trade in which they were engaged when they received their injury. I intend to vote for the passage of this bill and hope that it will become a law. I also hope that the language on page 1, lines 7 and 8, will be stricken out, so that all the workers—not alone the destitute workers—may receive the benefits provided in the law.

League of Nations.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT,
OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, October 23, 1919.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert herewith the following letter appearing in the Williamsport, Pa., Sun of October 21, 1919:

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

EDITOR THE SUN: It appears absurd and ridiculous in the highest degree that the admirers of the league of nations should be unable to distinguish between a geographical coalition and an instrument designed and destined for the betterment of humanity. The ardent supporters of this document would do well to pause in their pyrotechnic flight to pythagorean glory and consider a few logical facts. This instrument, in its present state, seems to the writer, would, rather than prevent war, have a tendency to aggravate and promote war. When Mr. Wilson went to Europe he went with the avowed purpose of open covenants openly arrived at; when he arrived he found the European diplomats had formed a political union and declared a closed shop. Mr. Wilson at once joined the union, came home with all their criminal treaties under his vest and a pocket full of confidential letters, expecting Congress and the American people to fall upon his neck and proclaim him the world's greatest emancipator.

In his impetuosity and too egotistical desire to become a world president he has lost all interest and kindly consideration for his native land and is fighting to transfer the interest of America to the consideration of European diplomats. He seeks to tear down that which Washington fought to build up. Never was the American Nation confronted with such a vicious political blunder as this heptahexahedral monster called the plague of nations that Wilson and his polyglot politicians from Paris are trying to force the American people to recognize. Many have been the comparisons of Mr. Wilson to Washington, Lincoln, and Roosevelt. The writer knows of no other man that our President parallels than the late Thomas Carlyle. Carlyle and Mr. Wilson agree in this, they both see something wrong in the actual state and constitution of society, but when they come to propound remedies for what they find to be amiss they are like voices crying in the wilderness. There is, however, a difference between Wilson and Carlyle. Carlyle's idea of the deliverance of the things from the confusion in which they exist was the committal of the management of them to able men Has Mr. Wilson committed his pet hobby to such master statesmen as REED, LODGE, KNOX, and JOHNSON? The answer is very simple and may be summed up in the following: When Cæsar crossed the Rubicon he said, "Hail, Romans, I am Cæsar." When Napoleon and his armies stood in the shadows of the Pyramids he said, "Soldiers, 20 centuries look down upon you." This was his way of declaring his arrogant and Napoleonic self to the world. Mr. Wilson's exotic trip and then his evolutionary whirl around the United States in his vacillating and rhetorical flourish in trying to tell the people that they must give their consent to the proposition, that the league of nations is the best thing to advance world peace, this was his modest way of declaring, "I am Woodrow Wilson."

Had Abraham Lincoln appeared on the scene in Paris, and been permitted to view these criminal documents, he would have said, "Let us do right, though the heavens fall; let us wipe off the slate all former criminal treaties from all nations, and let the world see that we really do stand for right against might." Why was Shantung not restored to China? Why was Fiume not conceded to Italy? Why was England given six votes and America only one? Why have the Turks been allowed to resume their atrocities on Armenia? These are mighty questions, broad in their scope, questions which Lincoln, Washington, and Roosevelt could and would have answered satisfactorily to all concerned.

Mr. Wilson is unable to give a logical answer to any one of them. He has repeatedly been asked to define the points of articles 10, 11, and 15; he points to the fact that article 10 is not binding, simply complimentary, and then, in the same breath, states that if article 10 was stricken from the league the very heart is taken from it. Articles 11 and 15 are just inane talk. Mr. Wilson's explanations remind the writer of an overzealous preacher he once knew. Said minister had a beautiful little church in the course of construction, and was very anxious to have it dedicated on a certain date, but lacked a few hundred dollars to release it from its indebtedness; he being very anxious to bring about this result, went to see a farmer, a very ardent supporter of said church, to induce him to sign a note for the desired amount. The farmer, who had been a very liberal subscriber, told the divine he felt that he had given his share. The minister said if he would simply sign the note he would never be called upon to pay it. In view of the circumstances the farmer signed the note, the church was dedicated on schedule, amidst great rejoicing and much thankfulness toward the preacher. Shortly after the dedication services were over the farmer was visited by a delegation from said church and requested to make payment on the note, it being made plain to him that he would be expected to fulfill the obligation. Of course, the farmer had no other alternative but to sell a few hundred bushels of wheat and settle. Much has been said of the sacrifice America has made in the late war; little is being said of the sacrifice she will be called upon to make if the league of nations covenant provisions are carried out without reservations or amendments. If America wishes to police all Europe, if she wishes to finance and keep a standing army in foreign fields, if we wish to be an arbiter to every petty European squabble, if we would like foreign powers to dictate to us how we should handle our social problems, namely, immigration, labor, and internal affairs, then by all means steam roller this plague through the Senate at once. If not, let America wastebasket this transient dream and Mr. Wilson and the Senate stop the mud-slinging contest, get into the harness, utilize this paid-for time in putting the wheels of progress into motion.

W. N. MORRISON,
Jersey Shore.

Rehabilitation Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. S. D. FESS,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, October 16, 1919.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the passage of this bill is assured by a good majority. This Congress will not allow any specious argument to defeat this progressive and constructive measure. If our Democratic friends wish to follow their CHAMP CLARKS, CLAUDE KITCHINS, JOHN GARNERS, and the rest of the Democratic headliners, in their opposition to this legislation, they are privileged to do so. These men are not in control of this body and will not be able to defeat us, even though every Democrat in the House joins the opposition, which is not credible. The Republicans control this Congress, and while they will employ their power to abate the fearful extravagance of the administration and reduce appropriations wherever it can safely be done, they will not hesitate to make the necessary appropriations to do what becomes vital to the Nation's interests. It will not refuse the call of humanity in order to heed the call of local self-interest secured by the pork-barrel method of appropriation.

This Congress can well afford to reduce expenditures in dozens of items induced by the war and which still persist in many agencies. Nearly a year after the armistice we still find the war machine, so far as the clerical force goes, running at full speed, with its thousands of clerks in one another's way. If necessary, we can cut a half million off of the Navy's $15,000,000 item placed there by the Senate. The demand for economy in a refusal to rebuild the wrecked human body, and at the same time allow millions to go to various questionable projects, some for the Army, some for the Navy, some for rivers and harbors, some for public buildings and the like, is a false policy which can not stand the light of this century. We have voted millions for eradication of pests in stock and farm products. Only this year we voted $1,000,000 to care for tuberculosis in cattle. We voted large sums to eradicate the boll weevil, the pink worm, the cattle tick, and, at one time some years ago, $20,000,000 to fight hog cholera. This charge was against the Federal Treasury without requiring a dollar from the States. The very men who are to-day haranguing the Congress against this work of human rehabilitation, with perhaps two exceptions—the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]—were most solicitous on behalf of these appropriations. The gentleman who has taken more time on this debate than any Member of the House, and who assaults it as vicious, is the one Republican on the Appropriations Committee who came to the floor of the House to urge $100,000,000 to feed the foreigner in Europe after the war was over. He had no compunction to employ the Government's sanction on behalf of a foreign request, but he frets when the Government proposes to help the American cripple. These statesmen declare that this measure is bad in principle, inexpedient at this time of needed economy, when we could save in numerous ways, wrong as a policy of government, and destined to work havoc upon the Nation. These same Members but a year ago were demanding Federal money not in cooperation with the State, as in the case of the rehabilitation act, but as an outright gift from the Government for the purpose of fighting disease in hogs and cattle, in cotton and corn, without a dollar laid down by the State in whose benefit it was to be administered. It has become a common observation that a certain type of Congressman places a higher value upon stock than upon man. The former easily becomes a matter of their deepest solicitude, the latter has no claim upon them. While they concede the health of a hog is of national concern, they will not concede that the upbuilding of a man or woman is any business of the Nation.

Economizing must begin by cutting off useless waste and stop the wicked extravagance of Government agencies built up by the war demands, but which still persist. The demand for economy must not prevent a constructive piece of legislation in response to the demand of humanity. That is not economy. The removal of a human wreck by rebuilding into a self-supporting citizen is an economic advantage in itself, and is reason enough, if no other, for this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, the history of the rehabilitation movement is brief. When we were considering the war-risk insurance act, which dealt with three major divisions—compensation, allotments, and insurance—I urged from the floor of the House that it include a fourth division, viz, the rehabilitation of the disabled or crippled soldier. I called the attention of Congress to the wonderful achievements along this line by Dr. Amar, of France. I also noted the success of the mayor of Lyons along this line. It was detailed how the private efforts of the entente countries were soon supplemented by official and governmental action, until it had reached an organized service for rehabilitation of the wounded service man. The failure to include in our legislation this feature of rehabilitation led to an effort to recommit the bill with instructions to report it back with a provision for rehabilitation. This step was withdrawn upon the promise that a separate bill would be presented later to care for these unfortunate soldiers. A committee was chosen to study the problem. A delegation was sent to Canada to report on the work there. In due time hearings were had before the joint Committees of Education in Senate and House. There was a remarkable unanimity of judgment as to the Nation's duty. No opposition whatever appeared. However, there was a distinctive effort on the part of a wide range of interests to include in the soldiers' rehabilitation act the industrial cripple. Among others which appeared to urge this inclusion were representations of the National Manufacturers' Association, American Federation of Labor, chambers of commerce, State compensation commissions, Federal Employees' Commission, association for labor legislation, safety associations, departments of education, and other interests. Many Members of the present Congress in written statements favored the inclusion, including some Members who now appear in opposition to this measure.

I opposed including the industrial cripple in the soldiers' bill, first, because it would produce delay which could not be tolerated, as time was of the essence in this legislation; secondly, the soldier bill was entirely Federal, with which the State had nothing to do. While the rehabilitation of the industrial cripple would be primarily conducted by the State, the first would be administered entirely by the Federal Board of Vocational Education, while the latter would be administered by the State upon the approval of the Federal board. Then, again, the soldier bill would stand aloof from the Smith-Hughes Act, while the industrial cripple would be supplemental to that act. It was definitely decided not to include in the soldier rehabilitation act this State function, but that the industrial-cripple legislation would be made a separate consideration in due time.

The soldiers' act became law in 1918 and $2,000,000 was appropriated the first year. This year, 1919, we appropriated $14,000,000 and will be called upon soon to add $20,000,000 more for the present year. It is estimated that $34,000,000 will be needed next year, when the work will be substantially completed. Up to date the average time given to reeducate the soldier is 9¾ months.

James P. Monroe, the vice chairman of the Federal board, states that the total number of disabilities, according to the War Department figures, is about 304,000, divided between wounds and disease in the proportion of approximately 2 to 1. But of the wounds only about 80,000 were anything more than "slight," and of the diseases the greater part were temporary and from them most of the patients have recovered or soon will get well. His statement continues:

"The experience of Great Britain, France, and Canada shows that of the total number of men disabled by wounds and disease in the Great War not over 6 per cent require training in order to become again effective in civil occupations. On this basis instead of there being 250,000 Americans needing training under the rehabilitation law, as claimed in certain quarters, there would be less than 19,000. Our provisions for support during training being, however, somewhat more attractive than those of other nations and our soldiers being younger and, we hope, more eager for education, we may expect that perhaps twice as many will seek training in this country as has been the case with our allies. This is borne out by the facts, and it now seems probable that somewhere between 35,000 and 50,000 disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines will eventually apply for and be found entitled, under the liberal 'prosoldier' way in which the board is interpreting the law, to training under the rehabilitation act.

"The Federal board is forbidden to give training unless a man has been honorably discharged, has a disability incurred in or aggravated by military service, is in need of vocational rehabilitation to overcome his handicap, and is capable of benefiting by such training.

"Of those 50,000 disabled men who may ultimately be found entitled to training, 25,000 have already been taken care of by the Federal board, their cases being all settled and the necessary arrangements for their education made. Nearly 13,000 of them are to-day being educated in hundreds of schools, colleges, and industrial and agricultural enterprises all over the United States, and others are being put into training at the rate of over 1,200 a week. Those among the 25,000 who are not yet in training either are 'visiting' with their people, have been tempted by some immediate good job, have had a physical relapse, or are waiting until the school or other place to which they are assigned for training has made final arrangements to receive them. Every one of those 25,000, however, is to-day receiving, or as soon as he decides to take his training will receive, from the Federal board $80 a month if he has no dependents and $100 a month, with the added family allowances up to a total of $150 a month, if he has dependents. Moreover, if a disabled man who declines training now decides to take it later the door is always open for him, and if one who has been trained does not make good in his chosen line he can be trained again by the board in some more promising industry.

"As to the remaining half of that possible training total of 50,000, over 20,000 men are still in hospitals under military control. As, presumably, this group is the most seriously disabled, the board may eventually have the privilege of educating perhaps half of its members. But under the law it can not begin that education until these men are discharged. Meanwhile, through its vocational advisers in the hospitals, the board has assured, or will assure, every man who is entitled to training that he will be taken in hand by our agents and looked after financially, if he so desires, as well as educationally, from the moment that he steps out of the hospital door.

"Another large proportion of the possible 50,000 boys needing eventually to be trained have tuberculosis, and it would be murder to begin to train them while that disease is still in the active stage. They must have a long course of sanitorium treatment; but while they are convalescing the board is keeping in touch with them, and as fast as a tuberculosis case is pronounced arrested the board begins, if he so wishes, that boy's training, but gives it to him, through the cooperation of the Public Health Service, under medical supervision in order to avoid, as far as possible, the danger of relapse.

"Still another large percentage of the possible maximum of 50,000 training cases is made up of men discharged from the camps before June 27, 1918, the date of the passage of the rehabilitation law, or dicharged between July 1 and December 11, 1918, during which period the Federal board for military reasons was excluded from the camps and hospitals and was unable therefore to establish contact with the men for whose vocational welfare it is now held responsible. To many of the first group the law did not apply until it was amended in July of this year, and thousands of the second group went out into civil life with no knowledge whatever of the rehabilitation law. These tens of thousands of more or less disabled men are now scattered to every corner of the United States and must be picked up and 'surveyed,' one by one, by the agents of the Federal board.

"Believing the disabled soldiers and sailors should be trained and placed as far as possible within their own home territory, the board established in the very beginning of its work 14 district offices in strategic centers. It has since been dividing those districts into smaller units so that, within a short time, it will have offices in at least 60 of the leading cities of the United States. This is the more necessary on the placement side because of the curtailing of the employment service of the Department of Labor with which the original law enjoined the Federal board to cooperate. Every means, including the 'movies,' has been used to notify disabled men of their rights under the rehabilitation law, over 5,000,000 pieces of literature to that effect have been distributed, and, by sending agents to France and securing there the help of the American Red Cross, over 50,000 men in overseas hospitals were personally interviewed and told of their rights under the act.

"The board has found occupations for thousands of men with disabilities so slight as to require not training but a job. It has had thus far only a few training 'graduates' to place, which should be cause for commendation. The board is giving genuine, practical training to these men, and the average length of that training is about 10 months. As very few disabled men could be put into training until early in the current year, and as many boys are booked for a two-year, three-year, or even four-year course, the number of 'graduates' is as yet only about 200, and practically every one of those is satisfactorily accounted for.

"Canada has had for more than four years a commission on soldiers' civil reestablishment, charged with duties similar to those of the Federal Board for Vocational Education and provided with ample authority and funds. In the nine months' period since the Federal board was admitted to our military hospitals and was able therefore to begin its work, it has arranged training for several thousands more than have been similarly taken care of in Canada, and by November 1 the American organization will have in training more men than the Canadian one has put into training in the last four years. By the late spring of 1920 the board will almost certainly have 30,000 and possibly 35,000 in training. This means that, adding those who by that time will have 'graduated,' excluding the great body of the tuberculous, most of whom will even then not be ready, and, excepting the many men who it is hoped will later seek training, the Federal board before next July will have practically disposed of its task, so far as relates to the getting of the possible maximum of 50,000 disabled boys into training. There will still remain, of course, the work of follow-up and placement.

"The board's force is largely made up of women clerks and stenographers, but of the men employed fully half have seen war service, and of those at least half have themselves suffered a disability.

"In a number of cases during the spring and early summer there were delays, due to the unworkability of the rehabilitation law as originally framed. Until recently amended, the law forbade the Federal board to put any disabled boy in training until he should be declared compensable by the War Risk Insurance Bureau. Despite every effort on the part of both bureau and board to hasten matters, it proved impossible to make this law, involving dual responsibility, work, and cases awaiting training piled up, until there were over 6,000 for whom all training arrangements had been made but with whom nothing could be done until their compensability status should be finally determined. Those boys, except in isolated cases, did not suffer privation, for where the American Red Cross could not look after them the Federal board caused money to be loaned to them from a fund generously provided by the Elks or established them temporarily in receiving stations for preliminary observation and incidentally for support.

"In May the War Risk Insurance Bureau and the Federal board jointly appealed to the Congress for an amendment to the rehabilitation law which would put an end to these unavoidable delays. Final action on this amendment was not taken until the middle of July; and since then the Federal board has had authority to decide the disabled soldier's case and to put him, if he comes within the terms of the law, immediately into training. Under this amended law the board now has full responsibility for the man's support and that of his dependents during the entire period of training. The subsistence, tuition, supplies, travel, medical care, and so forth, for each and every disabled man in training averages nearly $1,500 a year. Since there are almost certain to be 30,000 or even 35,000 men in training by next May, it follows that the Congress must appropriate, if it does not want this work which it has authorized to be delayed, not only the $16,000,000 already provided, but $20,000,000 more simply to carry the boys through to June 30, 1920. This supplemental sum the board has asked for. If it is granted and if there is appropriated for the year beginning July 1, 1920, a further sum of about $35,000,000, there can be and there will be carried forward promptly and effectively this important piece of human reconstruction which the United States has so generously and wisely undertaken."

Mr. Chairman, as an example of the character of the work, I append a statement of district No. 7, in which my congressional district falls. It shows the progress from September 10 to October 13.

Mr. Chairman, pursuant to the promise made by both Senate and House Committees on Education, the bill for the rehabilitation of the industrial cripple was introduced in both branches of Congress. Elaborate hearings were conducted. Not a note of opposition from any quarter appeared. There was one witness who questioned the advisability of placing the administration under the Federal board, but contended that he was in favor of the proposed legislation. The Senate discussed the measure quite fully and passed it without a record vote.

The House committee considered it and unanimously reported it to the House. Here it meets with the usual opposition that is ever leveled against any and all educational measures by a type of statesmen who seem constitutionally incapacitated to support any measure which bears the mark of educational improvement. Here alone in this House, of all places, it appears that education is a reproach in the judgment of a certain type of leadership. Because some men have reached high rank from whatever cause without special training for the rank, every effort on the part of Congress to open the door of opportunity for training meets with the utmost disgust, if not contempt, of these rare cases of signal careers. These accidents of birth or fortunate combination of circumstances prate about self-reliance and self-help and denounce all effort of improvement through training as paternalism. They seem to overlook the fact that all education is paternal, and to be consistent they must oppose all education. Their special attack is the much-despised college professor, whose chief offense seems to be his devotion to ideals not offered for sale over the bargain counter. He is disgusting because he is so foolish that he is willing to devote years to research and training that he may be equipped both in knowledge and discipline of mind that he can impress the youth of the country with ideals and qualities of citizenship, which do not sell in the markets of the world. Quite naturally this statesman readily votes to rehabilitate the stock on the farm, but will refuse to extend aid to rebuild the unfortunate man who was caught in a corn shredder or an industrial plant.

Mr. Chairman, if not to-day, the time will come when there will be some attention paid even by this type of statesmen to the better elements of our national life. Even the man who to-day shies at a measure because it is brand-new, as was so frequently charged against this measure as a conclusive reason for its rejection, will be compelled to recognize the value of man at least equal to brute, and will concede him the object of remedial legislation. The enemy of a measure is ever fertile in his reasons for opposition. It is paternalism or socialism or communism. It is brand-new and without the marks of once having been indorsed. It is not consistent with our economic program. It is wrong to begin it now. It can not be administered by the existent board.

All and every argument is but a different form of general opposition to a humane measure, progressive as well as sane and constructive, which invariably fails to win any favor from a class of negation who believe that the height of statesmanship is in preventing an additional step by holding our people on the dead level of what has been the rule in the past. That is not and can not be the rule of this Congress. This step may be new. It is not the only one we will take. The opposition is as old as the step is new. The two are always present where an advanced step is proposed to be taken; there will always be the objection because it is new. This will not deter the friends of needed legislation in their efforts to complete a constructive program.

Vocational education was before the Congress as an abstract proposition for 15 years. In 1917 we extended vocational training, through Federal and State cooperation, to our citizenry of pupil age, to be conducted in the public schools, both day and night schools. In 1918 we extended vocational training to all enlisted men who were disabled in the service. This bill extends vocational training and rehabilitation to the crippled in industry, on the farm, and so forth. There is still another proposal awaiting action of this Government, namely, to extend vocational education to all enlisted men who desire it, which is in addition to that provided for the wounded soldier. Whatever else the Government may do, it will not hesitate to take the steps to insure a higher plane of citizenry upon which our national welfare must rest. This is a just basis for the proposed legislation, whose passage is assured.

Industrial Rehabilitation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN MacCRATE,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Saturday, October 18, 1919.

Mr. MacCRATE. Mr. Speaker, the district which I represent in Congress is one of the greatest industrial centers of the country. In it are located as great a variety of occupations as will be found in any territory of similar size. In an area of scarcely 6 square miles 250,000 people dwell. Hardly another district in the country contains more people who will come within the provisions of this proposed law. On two sides of that district are streams on whose shores stand factories and shops and yards typifying all that modern mechanical ingenuity has contributed to civilization. On one of those streams, less than 2 miles long, whose surface is seldom ruffled by a wave, annually is carried more tonnage than sails on the Mississippi as she flows for a thousand miles to the sea.

My constituents are self-reliant and seek no charity from municipal, State, or the Federal Government. They do not ask that any branch of Government shall feed or clothe them. They desire only equal opportunity with the rest of their fellows to get employment with a just return. If I believed that this bill would pauperize them, I would not vote for it, and in doing so I should represent the real sentiments of my constituency. They have not sent me here to ask the Nation to care for them. They oppose and resent the enactment of laws based on the belief that they or the rest of our citizenship are incompetent to control their lives and are the wards of the Nation.

But this bill is not a paternalistic measure. It does not take from the thrifty, energetic, and industrious and give to sluggard and the lazy. By its specific provisions, only those who are injured while they toil in the shop or on the farm or in commerce or trade are to be benefited. Thousands of men and women annually fall in the battle of civil life. Mechanical and scientific skill and knowledge have multiplied the comforts of life, but with the increase of comfort has come an increase of casualties. In ways unknown but a generation ago, the manhood and womanhood of the world are deprived of sight, of speech, of arm, or of leg, even of life itself. Daily a thousand of our men and women pay in pain the price that civilization demands for comfort. In the past when these thousands have stood sightless or speechless or helpless and asked what they might do, they have been pointed to the "road that leads over the hills to the poorhouse." Surely civilization, with all its skill and culture, can provide a substitute for the poorhouse, the universal symbol of paternalism.

By this bill this Government assures the injured in industry and commerce and agriculture that they will not be thrown upon the scrap heap. They will no longer be compelled with cup in hand or from door to door to seek coppers from the community for their support. Instead, they will be offered the means of again entering active life and earning a livelihood with honor. Can it be that a nation which has lavishly expended millions for the building of roads and waterways; for the eradication of disease among cattle and hogs; for the removal of blights in wheat fields and cornfields; for the protection of trees and shrubbery, has no power to spend $1,000,000 to help restore manhood and womanhood to useful occupations? In this Congress we have voted protection to new industries; we have appropriated millions to destroy insects and improve cattle. No one can criticize Congress for these appropriations, but while we are justified in protecting by tariff our industries and, by appropriations, the crops and cattle of the country, we can not be free from blame if we refuse to help our manhood and womanhood who are wrecked by the machinery of commerce, industry, or agriculture.

I regret that the amendments I offered to permit the States to plan their own system of rehabilitation have been defeated, for it has been suggested that this is but another installment paid by the Federal Government for final control of our educational systems. I will not permit my vote on this bill to be used in the future as a bludgeon to batter me into support of a bill federalizing the educational systems of the entire Nation. This bill is urged and justified only because a need has not been met by the States. It is pressed but as a means of encouragement for State action. No such argument, however, can be used for the adoption of any plan proposed to centralize educational control in Washington. With the first settlers on this continent came the schoolmaster, and with the first clearing of the forest a place was provided for the education of childhood. Throughout our colonial history and throughout the formative period of our national life until to-day appropriations for education have gone forward. We have our public schools and our private schools. Hundreds of millions of dollars annually are spent by municipal and State governments and by churches of all denominations and by private individuals to give the youth of the land free educational opportunities. Our fathers and mothers have submitted uncomplainingly to taxation and have generously contributed to every style of school affording mental and moral development for their offspring. The time will never come when the people of this Nation will permit the control of the intellect of childhood to be centered in a bureau at Washington under the guise of a plan to "encourage the States."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES H. SINCLAIR,
OF NORTH DAKOTA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, October 22, 1919.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of transportation I desire to quote some extracts from an address delivered by the Hon. Robert W. Woolley, member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, before the American Academy of Political and Social Science, at Philadelphia, on Saturday evening, October 18, 1919. This subject is of such vital interest to the people of the country at this time that an intelligent discussion of it should be welcome. A proper solution of the transportation problem will go far toward solving the question of the high cost of living and do much toward allaying the industrial unrest that is now in our country. Mr. Woolley said in part as follows:

Transportation, raw material, and labor are the three principal factors in the cost of an article to the consumer. Often transportation is the greatest item of cost. For instance, in a number of iron and steel products and in some of the products of lumber it plays a very considerable part in the cost where the raw material moved under what is known as the commodity rate. Consider that between 75 and 80 per cent of all the freight traffic of the railroads is carried as commodity traffic and you can appreciate what this means.

Mr. Theodore Cuyler, chairman of the railroad executives, testifying before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate last winter, sounded an alarm, though he may not have meant to do so, when he stated that upon the return of the railroads to their owners it will be necessary for the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant a further increase in freight rates. This statement has been repeated by other railroad executives and has been much elaborated upon by propagandists advocating the discontinuance of Federal control. What the measure of this increase may be I am sure I do not know. It seems to be generally agreed that it will have to be at least 25 per cent; some have placed it as high as 50 per cent.

In a speech delivered at St. Louis in June last Director General Hines stated that an advance of $300,000,000 in freight rates would be reflected in the cost of the finished article to the consumer to the extent of $1,500,000,000. Investigations made in normal times amply justify such a prediction. For instance, when an increase of 10 cents per ton was granted on anthracite coal in 1902 the price of a ton of anthracite to the consumer advanced 50 cents, and it never came down. An increase of 25 per cent in freight rates would mean approximately $875,000,000 additional which the people would have to pay to the railroads, and, using Mr. Hines's ratio, $4,375,000,000 additional which the ultimate consumer would have to pay for what he uses, eats, or wears, because when he buys a finished article he pays an accumulation of increases. The private-control propagandists have been desperately trying to lull the public into a belief that the manufacturer, the jobber, or the retailer, possibly all three, would absorb this rate increase and the consumer not be allowed to feel it. I don't think in a final showdown the American people will stand for such an insult to their intelligence.

We are fighting the high cost of living. Congress is now enacting legislation strengthening the arm of the President and the Attorney General. We are trying to bring about industrial peace. Those who have caught a vision from the war and the economic revolution that has followed in its wake are pleading with us as a nation to produce more, to save more, and to spend less, in order not only that we may improve our present condition, but that we may be prepared to play a wonderful part in the future.

Does Congress propose to turn back the railroads to their owners at this perilous time and thereby make new high-price levels, instead of lower-price levels, inevitable, or does it propose to enact legislation requiring the holding of these roads for a fixed reasonable period following the proclaiming of peace and thereby aid the vitally important work of checking the profiteer and getting us back to normal? That is the problem in a nutshell. There is no blinking or evading it.

Furthermore, during the recent war we built, at a cost of approximately $5,000,000,000, a great merchant marine, and we are expending more millions of dollars in the same undertaking. At a time when the whole world is upside down, when the great powers of Europe are wrestling with how to regain their feet commercially and financially, with their labor conditions chaotic, with treasuries empty, with credit paralyzed, with exchanges topsy-turvy, and the balance of trade tremendously against them, are we to do all that we can to keep down costs and win permanently the foreign trade which now lies invitingly before us, or are we, through new high-price levels, so to advance costs in this country that once Europe is on her feet she can undersell us in every competitive market of the world?

Are the Stars and Stripes in the future, as in the days of the clipper ships, to be the most familiar of all flags in the ports of the seven seas, or are we to be confronted with the necessity of either tying up our merchant ships at American docks and piers, there to rust and decay, or of selling them to other nations? We are at the crossroads. Return the railroads and increase freight rates and, I fear, no measure before the House or the Senate to-day can save us. For nearly a year now, in statements to Congress and in addresses before conventions and commercial clubs, I have been contending that the present freight rates are ample; that the operating revenue of the railroads in the period of shrinking or vanishing traffic following the signing of the armistice was no test of their sufficiency and that as we approach a general resumption of industrial activity the soundness of my contention would become evident. In other words, though hostilities ceased with the signing of the armistice, economic disturbances due to the war did not cease by any means. I do not have to explain what I mean to an audience like this.

That there should have been an operating deficit tremendous in proportions following the cessation of hostilities was inevitable. As a war-making measure there had been stored in all big centers and in many smaller ones large reserves of coal in order that the fearful experience of the winter of 1918 might not be repeated. Building operations other than those conducted by the Government on a mammoth scale had practically ceased. Private enterprise had either put its shoulder to the wheel in the winning of the war or it had stepped aside. With the signing of the armistice building by the Government stopped, capital was timid as to the resumption of private construction work, and those who had purchased coal at peak prices decided to use their reserves before buying more. When you consider that the products of the mines, chiefly coal and ores, and road and building material constitute fully 70 per cent of all the freight traffic of the railroads, it is easy to understand that the Savior of man Himself, with the Archangel Gabriel as his chief assistant, could not have earned the standard return without increasing freight rates and consequently making higher and higher the cost of living, unless He had performed a miracle.

I hope you will pardon me for taking pride in the fact that my prediction as to the early disappearance of the monthly operating deficit has come true. Since July 1 the railroads have earned the standard return and a few millions besides. Congress should treat the total amount of the operating deficit incurred from the beginning of Federal control to July 1, 1919, as a war cost and appropriate for it out of the Public Treasury, just as only one year ago it was appropriating billions for munitions with which to vanquish the Hun. Let the Government retain the railroads during the period of reconstruction and hold freight rates where they are. By pooling receipts of all the roads it does, with the present operating ratio of 85 per cent, what would be impossible for most roads under private control. Let it help, not hinder, the President in his fight on the high cost of living.

But that is not all. The President and the director general have dealt successfully with labor. As I say this, I realize what is running through the minds of some of you. You are thinking of the substantial increases in wages granted railroad workers in June, 1918, by Director General McAdoo and of another modest increase granted by Director General Hines a few weeks ago. Denouncing the Government for doing what capital did in the steel plants, the munition plants, the shipyards, and in many other industries has been a favorite sport with those who refuse to deal with this problem fairly, who find it convenient to forget what the presidents of the great railroads of the eastern United States said they needed money for, how many rate increases they might need for the same purpose, when they testified in the Fifteen Per Cent case before the Interstate Commerce Commission in November, 1917.

How easy it is for those who seem to be afraid that the Government will not remit the railroads once more to the mercies of great banking houses for capital with which to finance additions and betterments to forget the picture of labor conditions on the railroads in the autumn of 1917, painted by Mr. Samuel Rhea—how skilled labor was leaving to take up unskilled employment at much better wages in the shipyards, munition plants, and steel plants; how it was necessary to use three men where formerly two men would do; how the shortage in official classification territory especially was becoming alarming. But joyfully do they point to the fact that on the date of the signing of the armistice there were approximately 145,000 more men employed on the railroads than there were at the time the railroads were taken over by the Government. I have asked this question once before. Suppose Director General McAdoo had not so augmented his force that he could get approximately 100 per cent efficiency, no matter what the emergency, and a crisis had found him unprepared, would those who now talk of waste and prodigality have come forward with peans of praise for the niggardly policy he had pursued? The ratio of labor cost to the entire operating cost in 1917 was 61.36, in 1918 it was 65.54, and I am informed by the Railroad Administration that for the first seven months of 1919 it is estimated to have been 64 per cent. I wonder how this showing compares with that made in some of our other big industries.

If the present unified control is done away with and each road now under Federal control is turned back to its owners on January 1, what is to be the policy of those owners toward labor? Have the executives of the corporations who have been sitting on the side lines criticizing for two years caught a vision out of all that has happened, and are they ready to deal with the labor problem sanely and fairly—and by that I do not at all mean abject surrender to labor's every demand—or do they propose to pursue the mailed-fist policy and run the risk of seriously crippling the transportation systems of the country in the hour of its greatest economic need?

Several days ago one of the foremost traffic attorneys of the country told me an interesting story. He was shouting a few months ago to give the railroads back; to-day he says the service the shippers are receiving is so much better than they ever got under private control that he now wants the Government to hold the roads. He came to Washington to see what could be done about the recent coal-car shortage in Kentucky. "I called on Mr. Hastings, assistant traffic director," he said, "and immediately he got on the wire with Atlanta. He directed the Southern Railroad to turn over 500 coal cars to the Louisville & Nashville. When I get back to Kentucky the relief will be under way. Under private control we would have stewed in our own grease before such a thing could have happened."

A few weeks ago Clifford Thorne, who represents many of the big independent oil companies and other considerable shippers in actions before the Interstate Commerce Commission, told the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that now is no time to be turning back the railroads; that they should be held for two years following the proclaiming of peace. Mr. Thorne was one of the bitterest critics of the Railroad Administration during the war and one of the first to demand—almost viciously—that they be given back to their owners at the earliest possible moment.

When I was in Chicago a few weeks ago a prominent commission merchant who handles perishable stuff from California in a big way told me that the shippers of such freight had never received such service under private control as they are getting under Federal control. When you consider that we have never had Federal control in its real sense, that we have only had what amounts to a receivership, and a loose-jointed one at that, that the morale of the director general's organization has for many months been admittedly low, due to uncertainty as to what is going to happen, don't you think the testimony of such men tells a story worth considering in these critical times?

When Is a Budget Not a Budget?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES A. FREAR,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 20, 1919.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, with a blare of trumpets we have unanimously passed House bill 9783, which its sponsors call "a bill to provide a national budget system." It sounded like a fierce reform, but it is as harmless and inoffensive as a totem pole. Handed to Congress by outside agencies, we swallowed this sugar-pill bill, which in no way reaches Congress or appropriation bills recommended by committees.

The bill has just passed by a vote of 285 ayes to 3 nays, according to the Speaker's announcement. Instead of a national budget system the bill simply provides an administration hobble skirt on estimates, and the hobble will be as generous in size as administration modistes choose to make it.

Its principal function is to acquaint the President with the several fashions in financial drapery possessed by his official family, but it bears no more relation to a real budget system than an umbrella bears to a flying machine. Estimates for Congress will continue to be measured by the conscience and cloth possessed by the different departmental chiefs. A comptroller general provided in the bill and appointed by the President will be expected to approve all fashions offered by the maker of comptrollers and governmental fashions. That in brief is the so-called national budget system adopted by the House.

After the administration hobble is received by Congress a dozen committee functionaries will take different portions of the gown and chuck into it as many different breadths, buttons, tucks, and furbelows as may be found desirable by these different committees. Instead of selecting one congressional committee to put the lid on expenditures and fixing responsibility on that one committee and on Congress, we are preserving the Agricultural, Post Office, Military, Naval, River and Harbor, and a half dozen other financial dressmakers, who will continue to do the trimming as of yore.

In other words, congressional arbiters of financial fashions will decide whether the new budget frock is to be restricted to economical lines or whether it will assume the proportions of a plentiful hoop-skirt creation generously cut along lines of recent war appropriations. We are told that a strait-jacket undervest for Congress will be urged next session, changing the House rules, but it was deemed wise to put it over, presumably so that it will not conflict with the league of nations. Two large problems may well occupy different sessions, but Fitzgerald, Sherley, budget reformers, and other high legislative authorities declare Congress will never be persuaded to combine its many appropriation committees into one or to materially relinquish its present powers, so as to center all responsibility in one committee.

Those Members who by reason of seniority have risen to chairmanships or near chairmanships in the different appropriation committees will fight with backs against the wall for the finery and honors that go with such positions. As I said in an extended discussion of the budget on June 24, no Hottentot king or dusky senator in the far-off cannibal islands was ever more proud of his huge earrings, which ordinarily compose the major part of his full-dress garb, than are some honored members of appropriation committees who have finally reached chairmanships on these powerful committees. Generally popular and more or less able, these chairmen for years watched for the shoes of their predecessors, whose political or physical demise brought the same solace that comes to a poor relation left beneficiary under the will. Finally entrenched in power, they possess ordinary human attributes and can not willingly be expected to relinquish seniority rights reached only after years of patient waiting.

Arguments about the failure of budgets in other countries, the precious prerogatives of Congress and threatened danger to the Constitution, and glorious privileges of representatives in a free government are all endangered by again reverting to a single appropriation committee—so we are told by defenders of the present system. With highest consideration for these distinguished gentlemen personally and politically, no one familiar with the real situation is seriously alarmed over their dire predictions.

Notwithstanding every enlightened country in the world has adopted a single budget committee and that our Congress in effect possessed a single appropriation committee until Speaker Randall's time; that all political parties, answering to a popular demand, have pledged the enactment of a real budget system; that President Wilson, ex-President Taft, a high budget authority, and Uncle JOE CANNON, whose homely logic and wonderful experience are invaluable to his colleagues on this floor—notwithstanding all these recognized expressions of a large and rapidly growing sentiment throughout the country for a real national budget in Congress to put hobbles where they will hobble, yet we dodge the proposition now and put it over until next session.

Congress tells the Executive and his official family what they are expected to do, Constitution or no Constitution, when this so-called budget bill passes to-day. The people who pay the bills may well ask where the national budget system comes in when we only provide for better administration estimates and yet leave the bars down for widest congressional action when making appropriations.

We should meet the proposition squarely, adopt a single budget committee, put a curb on wasteful appropriations wherever they exist, and keep pledges made to the people, or we will be called to account for failing to control our own actions when we so readily attempt to regulate all others, from the President down to the humblest citizen. A single budget committee will not prevent appropriations or continued taxes, but it is our duty to place every barrier against waste, and that will be aided by a real budget system.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. C. BASCOM SLEMP,

OF VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, October 22, 1919.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, it is fitting at this time to make a brief statement as to the records of the Government and of the Sixty-sixth Congress in relation to revenues and expenditures for this fiscal year.

The Republican Party was given control of both branches of Congress in 1918—though it can scarcely be said there is a majority on either side in the United States Senate—negatively as a protest against the Democratic management and affirmatively because they had confidence in the leadership of the Republican Party. The special session is drawing to a close. All necessary appropriation bills and deficiency bills are passed. A bill for vocational rehabilitation both for the soldiers and for those injured in industries has passed the House and telegraph and telephones have been returned to their owners. To-day we pass by unanimous vote the budget bill. The railroad bill will pass the House before we adjourn and the Sixty-sixth Congress can soon begin to take stock of itself. Soldiers' vocational rehabilitation, the budget, and the railroads are the three great domestic questions requiring constructive policies that fell upon the Sixty-sixth Congress to solve. The rehabilitation of the soldier maimed or injured in service is as little as a grateful country can do in recompense. It offers an opportunity to earn one's living, promotes self-respect, and encourages self-development. The budget bill is the first step in curtailing the expenditures of the Government which have increased so enormously in recent years. It has the indorsement of every leading economist, writer, or executive who has given thought to the subject. The railroad bill is yet to be considered. While the budget bill will enable more careful expenditures in the future, let us consider briefly how we have met the responsibilities of the present hour. We are going back to our constituents soon. What report have we to make of our dealings with their money? How much money do we expect to draw from the Treasury this year and what will we have to show for it. How much are our revenues this year? Are we spending more money than is coming into the Treasury? These are questions they will expect us to answer.

Let us see if our situation in this respect can be made clear. We began the fiscal year 1919–20 owing a large amount of bonds of various lengths of maturity. We had also outstanding Treasury certificates of indebtedness. Our national indebtedness, so far as bonds are concerned, will remain unchanged, neither increased nor decreased. Assuming that we should have a working cash balance in the Treasury of $300,000,000, we began the fiscal year 1919–20 owing, in addition to these bonds, certificates of indebtedness in the Treasury of $2,683,000,000. Can we meet all of the demands of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1919–20 without increasing the amount of outstanding certificates of indebtedness or without increasing taxes or selling additional bonds? I say in all probability we can and should. There are some contingencies that one can not foresee; strikes may curtail coal production as they have already curtailed steel production, thus adversely affecting railroad earnings and adding to our deficit from that source. The cost of any Government work, too, or purchase of any kind can not be foretold with absolute accuracy. Discounting such contingencies only very slightly, the account would stand:

Government revenues—fiscal year 1919–20	$6,835,000,000
Government expenditures—fiscal year 1919–20	7,099,967,160
Apparent excess of expenditures, if true, represented by increase of Treasury certificates	264,967,160

Itemized statement of expected revenues—fiscal year 1919–20.

REVENUE OF THE UNITED STATES—ESTIMATED ACTUAL RECEIPTS FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1920.

Income and excess profits tax	$3,750,000,000
Estate tax	110,000,000
Transportation	250,000,000
Telegraph and telephone	20,000,000
Insurance	15,000,000
Admission and dues	60,000,000
Excise taxes	280,000,000
Beverages, etc., nonalcoholic	40,000,000
Nonbeverage alcohol	30,000,000
Stamp taxes	32,000,000
Tobacco	260,000,000
Special taxes	88,000,000
Miscellaneous	5,000,000
Total internal revenue	4,940,000,000
Customs	260,000,000
Sale of public lands	3,000,000
Miscellaneous, including interest on loans to Allies	600,000,000
Total ordinary receipts	5,803,000,000
Victory loan installment	1,032,000,000
Total	6,835,000,000

Itemized statement of expenditures, fiscal year 1919–20, exclusive of Army and Navy.

Agriculture	$33,899,761.00
Diplomatic and Consular	9,843,661.67
District of Columbia	15,364,421.00
Fortification	11,214,291.00
Indian	11,131,397.03
Legislative	97,963,831.77
Military Academy	2,277,932.20
Pension	215,030,000.00
River and harbor	33,378,364.00
Post Office, deducting road fund, 1921, and postal revenues, leaving 1920 road fund	131,000,000.00
Sundry civil (including Shipping Board)	607,100,200.95
Total	1,168,263,867.62
Total Army and Navy	2,901,703,292.78
Total all departments	4,069,967,160.40
To which must be added the following:
Interest on public debt	1,000,000,000.00
Railroads	750,000,000.00
Previous deficiencies	74,325,929.40
Government employees	25,000,000.00
Permanent appropriation	$85,266,880.00
First deficiency, 1920	30,000,000.00
Food relief in Europe	100,000,000.00
Loans to allies, fiscal year 1920	500,000,000.00
Wheat fund drawn from the Treasury to date	350,000,000.00
Postal increase	40,000,000.00
War Risk (pending)	75,000,000.00
Grand total	7,099,967,160.00

But there should be deducted from this expenditure the wheat fund of $350,000,000 and $100,000,000 on Grain Corporation, or a reduction in expenditures of $450,000,000, as these amounts will be returned to the Treasury this year, so that the account will stand as follows:

Government revenues, 1919–20	$6,835,000,000
Government expenditures, 1919–20	6,649,967,160
Apparent excess of revenues	185,032,840

In other words, we should spend about the same, perhaps a little less, as the amount we receive in revenues. I may add that we get bonds for the loans to the Allies, and securities for advances to railroads.

There is not included in Government revenues interest on foreign loans, or any return in cash from the railroads, and there is estimated to be withdrawn from the Treasury $500,000,000 additional as loans to the Allies, from any one of which sources we might secure some return in cash during the fiscal year.

Now, one word as to the railroads. They owe the Government about $600,000,000. We may be called on to appropriate more money for their use. I do not know. Whether we get any of this $600,000,000 back this year or whether we have to appropriate additional sums of money for the railroads depends entirely, in my judgment, on the character of railroad legislation we enact. If we pass legislation of a nature to insure the stability and permanency of railroad securities as investments, as it is manifestly the part of wisdom to do, then we would not only not be compelled to appropriate more money for the railroads, but the railroads can do their own financing and can return to the Government a large part, at least, of the $600,000,000 they now owe the Government.

It may be said, also, that while we have appropriated this year almost $400,000,000 for the Shipping Board, and may have to appropriate a small amount additional, yet the Government shipyards are turning out ships every day which are readily salable. Though most of the sales are on the deferred-payment plan, yet sufficient money will come in from that source to minimize the demands in cash on the Treasury.

Still we have the Treasury certificates of indebtedness problem to deal with, as we had in the beginning of the year, and which we inherited from the preceding year. We began the year owing $2,683,000,000 of these certificates. Apparently we will still owe most of this. What shall we do with them? One of three things: (a) Pay them out of taxes, (b) refund them in bonds, or (c) have the Treasury carry them.

To pay them all now requires increased taxes. No one, I think, favors that. To refund them requires an auspicious time for selling bonds. I would prefer that being done, but the Secretary of the Treasury, who has the authority to refund them, has not exercised that authority; or the Treasury can carry them either until general refunding takes place or until we can pay them out of taxes. I should think that if taxes are maintained for another year at the present rate a large amount of these certificates could be discharged during the fiscal year 1921 and without the issuance of additional bonds, or we can reduce taxes. Manifestly there are nearly three billions being spent this year which we will not have to spend next year.

It should be remembered that foreign nations owe our Government about $10,000,000,000, the interest on which will amount to $500,000,000, which should come to us annually, and to that extent relieve the burden on the American people.

I am giving the credit for this fine showing to the membership and leadership of the Sixty-sixth Congress, because the executive and administrative branches of the Government asked Congress to appropriate $1,250,000,000 more than Congress did appropriate. Had that been done there would have been a deficit to that extent for this fiscal year. I am glad Congress was courageous enough not to do it; and yet the country and even the departments still live.

If the Sixty-sixth Congress in the coming long session shall deal with the departments on a peace and not on a war basis, as I have no doubt they will, and adopt and make effective the budget system, involving the most careful scrutiny of all estimates, all our expenditures will be greatly curtailed. This Congress will then earn the gratitude of the Nation at large and confirm the wisdom of the American electorate in placing the Republican Party again in control of the affairs of the Nation.

Note explanatory of Army and Navy amounts.

The total appropriations for Army and Navy, fiscal year 1919–20, as follows:

Army	$772,324,877.50
Navy	616,096,838.88
Total	1,388,421,716.38

It is estimated that $398,718,426.60 of this sum will not be expended during this fiscal year, but will be carried over to 1921. This will be more than offset, however, by carrying over from 1919 for the Army and Navy of previous appropriations the sum of $1,312,000,000; or there will be a net amount of $1,513,281,576.40 to be added to the Army and Navy appropriations for 1919–20 to show the total draft on the Treasury for the Army and Navy, fiscal year 1920:

Total Regular Army and Navy	$1,388,421,716.38
Net amount carried over for Army and Navy, previous appropriations	1,513,281,576.40
Total	2,901,703,292.78

Increased Pay for Postal Employees.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN I. NOLAN.

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 24, 1919.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the pending conference report on the resolution to increase the compensation of postal employees, I desire to submit some data to Members of the House touching upon the efforts of the post-office clerks to improve their working conditions and to make the Postal Service a more efficient public utility.

LEGISLATIVE OBJECTIVES OF THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF POST-OFFICE CLERKS.

With a desire to keep the Postal Service at the highest possible point of efficiency by attracting to it the most capable, industrious working men and women obtainable, the National Federation of Post Office Clerks has outlined a number of industrial reforms which, when put into effect, will correct many of the grievances now voiced by the employees and improve the service generally.

For the information and guidance of Members of Congress this list of objectives is enumerated herewith:

Higher permanent basic wage standards. Existing postal wage standards are far too low to hold or to attract the required man power to insure an efficient service. Additional compensation must be immediately granted to enable employees to meet abnormal living costs.

A punitive rate of time and a half for work in excess of eight hours; all such overtime work to be confined strictly to actual emergencies, and the question of what constitutes an emergency to be decided by a standing committee of employees and supervisory officials.

Double time for Sunday and holiday work, and all such service confined to an irreducible minimum.

Unnecessary night work eliminated by establishing a time differential—or a wage differential as an expedient—for work performed after 6 p. m. and prior to 6 a. m. The time differential to be 15 minutes in every hour—or a 45-minute hour; the wage differential to be not less than 20 per cent.

Throughout the year Saturday half holidays—or the equivalent in compensatory time off each week on other days—establishing a 44-hour-a-week schedule.

Thirty days' sick leave annually with full pay, and indefinite leave on half pay for longer periods of such incapacitation.

Annual vacation period extending to 30 days and pro rated on basis of two and a half days monthly, computed from day of regular appointment.

Stools for distributors and other employees doing like work, and rest periods of at least five minutes each hour for all employees engaged in work requiring close mental application.

Reasonable limitation upon period of substitute service, with credit given for such service in determining entrance-salary grade upon regular appointment.

Reasonable periods, determined by employees' welfare committees and supervisory officials, for study of distribution schemes. All such scheme study to be considered office work.

A standardized, workable efficiency rating system to determine an employee's fitness which is not entirely a demerit system. An employee, under an efficiency-rating plan worthy of the same, should have an opportunity to offset lapses and delinquencies by subsequent meritorious service.

Due recognition of seniority of service in determining fitness for promotions into supervisory grades and higher official positions and in the assignment to preferential positions.

Improved working environment, with special attention to post-office occupational problems—lighting, sanitation, industrial hygiene, and reduction of health hazards by thorough cleansing of filthy mail equipment.

Retirement for aged postal workers under the most liberal conditions obtainable, with due regard to the fact that recognition by Congress of the principles of retirement is the first requisite and the present immediate goal.

A court of appeals, upon which the employees shall have representation, with authority to review and set aside, if found unjust, rulings and decisions of administrative officials in demotion and dismissal cases.

Recognition of postal organizations, nationally and locally, by the Post Office Department, with opportunity for national union officers to assist in shaping general labor policy. Local unions to elect welfare committees authorized to aid postal officials in proper administration of protective laws. Concisely, introduction of industrial democracy into the Postal Service.

Memorial addressed to the Postmaster General by the executive committee of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, asking for favorable administrative action in the correction of existing abuses in the Postal Service.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 17, 1918.

Hon. A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We address you in a spirit of cooperation and because of our deep interest in improving the Nation's postal facilities to ask that you authorize an investigation of certain service conditions, which directly affect the welfare of the clerical force and therefore the service efficiency.

These conditions, hereinafter specified, can be corrected by administrative action on your part without recourse to legislative action by the Congress. We request that you appoint a committee, similar in its makeup to the one you appointed to investigate working conditions in the telephone systems and upon which the employees have representation, to visit the larger post offices and gather facts from the employees in relation to these and kindred questions:

First. The underlying cause for the excessive and costly labor "turnover"—the large number of experienced men leaving the service and the difficulty of training new men to fill these gaps in a vital industry.

Second. Unnecessary night work. Seventy per cent, it is estimated, of post-office mail distribution is performed at night. The distributors doing this work receive neither a wage or time differential. This condition is a prolific cause for resignation from the clerical force and is productive of much dissatisfaction and unrest.

Third. Unnecessary and excessive overtime. The postal eight-hour law contemplates that the daily working schedules of the clerks shall not exceed eight hours, excepting only in emergencies. In many of the larger post offices, however, the eight-hour schedule is ignored, and men are daily forced to work excessively long hours when no emergency such as the law contemplates exists. Overtime service is confined almost entirely to distributors, who must, because of the nature of their work, study distribution schemes after office hours. Experience has proven—and any investigation you make of this problem will convince you also of this fact—that the imposition of overtime upon distributors does not, over any considerable period, speed up the handling of the mails. We are firmly convinced from our own study of the subject that the department is making a costly administrative mistake in permitting local supervisory officials full authority to impose overtime service upon distributors. A closer adherence to the letter and spirit of the eight-hour law, by confining overtime to actual emergencies only, would greatly expedite the handling of the mails; it would insure the men the needed rest; it would permit of the necessary study periods; it would minimize errors in distribution that have now reached such proportions in the service as to result in a great economic loss and serious inconvenience to the public. A firm insistence by the department that its distribution force be given the benefit of the eight-hour day would result, we believe, in a greatly improved service, fewer costly errors in distribution, fewer resignations, and a better morale generally throughout the working force.

We heartily concur in the declaration of President Wilson on this subject: "We believe in the eight-hour law because a man does better work within eight hours than he does within a more extended time, and the whole theory of it, a theory which is sustained now by abundant experience, is that his efficiency is increased, his spirit in his work is improved, and the whole moral and physical vigor of the man is added to."

Fourth. Home-scheme study: Expert distributors are perhaps the most essential workers in the post offices. They must study distribution schemes at home. Their value to the service depends largely upon the amount of time they devote to this study. Time off should be granted for scheme study, regulated according to the needs of each particular case. The practice in vogue in many offices of imposing unnecessary scheme requirements, forcing clerks to qualify on a distribution they never work, is not calculated to improve service efficiency and should be discontinued.

Fifth. Status of substitutes: Many postmasters adopted the practice of assigning a substitute to perform clerical duties for an indefinite period, compelling him to qualify on scheme examination and to otherwise meet all the requirements of a regular clerk, without, however, giving him the benefit of fixed hours of employment, a weekly rest day, annual vacation, and yearly salary increase. The practice is unjust to substitutes and makes more difficult the recruiting of the service to its full force.

Sixth. Sanitation: The insanitary, unhealthful, crowded conditions of many post-office workrooms is a menace to the employees directly affected and to the public as well. This is true also of the filthy, dusty mail pouches in use in the service. These should be cleansed frequently, as a protection against the spread of disease.

Seventh. Efficiency rating system: The absence of any standard system to determine, with approximate accuracy at least, the fitness of employees to retain their positions and to be eligible for promotions is another source of irritation. Most of the systems in operation are entirely "demerit" systems. We feel there should be some credit for meritorious service and also less opportunity for favoritism on the part of supervisory employees. This entire subject matter, vital as it is to the individual employee, is worthy of the deepest study, and we are prepared to offer helpful suggestions in putting into effect a rating system that will better meet the service needs than the present chaotic plan.

The foregoing comprise the principal, although by no means all, the service grievances of the clerical force that can be corrected in part or in whole by administrative action. We have not mentioned the wage question or the retirement question, realizing, as we do, that these are matters for action by the Congress. But the administration of the eight-hour law, the reduction of night work, scheme study, and the other questions touched upon in this letter are matters that can be adjusted without the interposition of Congress.

We feel certain that this investigation committee which you are asked to create can obtain a wealth of information from the employees on these and other service problems that can be made the basis of administrative reforms of lasting benefit to the public, the service, and the employees.

Respectfully submitted.

Gilbert E. Hyatt, president; John J. Welsh, first vice president (post-office clerk), Memphis, Tenn.; John S. McGee, second vice president (post-office clerk), Chicago, Ill.; Walter G. Hancock, fourth vice president (post-office clerk), San Francisco, Calif.; Patrick E. Higgins, fifth vice president (post-office clerk), New York, N. Y.; Thos. F. Flaherty, secretary-treasurer.

AROUSING PUBLIC OPINION.

To better acquaint their employers—the American people—with existing conditions in the Postal Service, the postal employees have resorted to a campaign of newspaper advertising, of which the following is typical:

WHY JEOPARDIZE POSTAL SERVICE?—A TIMELY APPEAL TO THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS.

To the Senate and House of Representatives, Sixty-sixth Congress, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: The Postal Service is on trial. For some time it has ceased to function as efficiently as you, the authorized representatives of the Nation, and the general public are justified to expect.

The Postal Service is on trial because it no longer can comply with the needs and demands of the public. Our mail service is in jeopardy because, as one of the main arteries of commercial life, it fails to serve its purpose—the prompt transmission of the mails. Every enterprise, whether big or small, to-day suffers on account of the deplorable inadequacy of the Postal Service.

POSTAL SERVICE NEAR BREAKDOWN.

The Postal Service in Chicago, for instance, is on the verge of a breakdown. In its ill-ventilated premises a totally inadequate force of clerks copes in vain with a constant, heavy influx of mail far beyond the working capacity of this limited number of employees. Although they toil an average of two hours overtime per day, many sacks of unworked mail are mute but eloquent evidence of the daily unfinished task when the overworked and underpaid night clerk meets the equally abused day clerk during the early hours of the day.

The important communications of big mailers, whether letters, circulars, or parcel post, the means through which they attract and interest an extensive patronage, have no assurance whatever of the service they need to expedite their various transactions.

WHY MAIL IS DELAYED.

Why is mail delayed? Because the force of employees, their pay, and the general facilities are totally inadequate.

Because pay of post-office clerks is so ridiculously small, by no means commensurate with the cost of living, nor with the decidedly higher wages of most unskilled workers, an adequate force can not be retained in the service.

Approximately 3,000 clerks have entered the Postal Service in Chicago, and also have resigned from it since January 1, 1919. To the 3,600 clerks employed in Chicago's main post office and stations throughout the city local officials in vain endeavored to add about 600 clerks. The deplorable outcome of this attempt brought, as stated above, about 3,000 entrants and a similar number of resignations from the service that in every respect is uninviting to the applicant who wants a living wage and fair working conditions. This condition is general throughout the country.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

Cause and effect of the badly neglected Postal Service may be summarized as follows:

CAUSE.

Inadequate pay (less than most unskilled workers receive).

Excessive night work.

Constant overtime, causing fatigue and consequent mental sluggishness and physical inability to perform assigned duties with that vim and vigor essential to absolutely satisfactory results. (Daily overtime is a deliberate violation of the eight-hour law, which provides for overtime merely in emergency cases.)

Insanitary working premises, congestion, and poor light.

EFFECT.

A totally inadequate force.

A crippled service.

A resultant lower grade of efficiency, seriously impeding the prompt transmission of the mails.

LIVING WAGE WILL ASSURE COMPETENT MAIL SERVICE.

A living wage unquestionably will assure a competent mail service. The figures of Government experts and other competent authorities prove that a living wage for a family of four is far beyond the maximum of $1,500 per year for post-office clerks.

Still the post-office clerk receives but the means of a bare existence. The unavoidable result of a sadly depleted force of employees, owing to inadequate pay, is an unreliable mail service.

IMMEDIATE RELIEF IMPERATIVE.

Immediate relief is imperative. The enactment of remedial legislation for the next fiscal year will not pay the accumulating bills of underpaid post-office clerks during the current year. The post-office clerk can not live now on what he will receive in the future.

A JUSTIFIABLE APPEAL IN THE HOUR OF NEED.

Mr. Senator and Mr. Congressman, if you are considering the pressing need of more adequate compensation in this hour of need, do not defeat the very object of such legislation by not providing amply to make wages of postal employees commensurate with the abnormal cost of living and with the exacting duties of a distributor—an enervating task at a high rate of speed, based upon the necessary knowledge of thousands of facts.

To you, gentlemen of the Congress, post-office clerks must appeal for redress of grievances, cognizant of their constitutional right to secure a living wage and tolerable working conditions. Without such fair concessions many capable and experienced employees will find it impossible to remain in the service.

Adequate pay will assure an efficient Postal Service, which in turn will more than offset the expense of a sorely needed wage increase.

Very respectfully,

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF POST OFFICE CLERKS.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL HAYDEN,

OF ARIZONA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 24, 1919.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, Congressman SCOTT FERRIS, representing the Sixth Oklahoma District, has served in Congress for seven terms, more than 12 years. I have had service with him on the Committee on Indian Affairs and on the Committee on the Public Lands, of which he was chairman for seven years. I have had service with him on conference committees and kept in close touch with his work and achievements as a Member of Congress. It pleases me, under the authority given me, to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where it may be preserved, a brief résumé of the legislation enacted in which he has played an important part and of his general activities in connection with good legislation for both his State and the Nation.

DEMOCRACY'S ACHIEVEMENT IN GENERAL LEGISLATION IN WHICH SCOTT FERRIS TOOK A PROMINENT PART.

1. The Federal reserve law: Affording America a new currency system, weeding out the miserable makeshift currency law that had grown old, antiquated, and lacking in efficiency; avoiding panics and expanding the volume of currency; enabled the Government to finance the World War and all business institutions still intact.

2. The income-tax law: Requiring the swollen fortunes of the rich to bear their fair share of the burdens of government.

3. Election of Senators by direct vote: Prior to this provision Senatorships were decided by legislatures; now by the sovereign voters.

4. Abrogation of bossism in Congress: Providing for the election of committees instead of the appointment thereof, a reform demanded by every section of the country.

5. Publicity of campaign expenses: Affording the poor man a chance to aspire for office by not giving the rich a monopoly on the same; a curbing of outrageous contributions by special interests.

6. Corrupt-practices act: Providing against the unlawful use of money in elections; to prevent vote buying; to prevent corrupt election methods, so elections will be clean, honest, open, and free from crooked dealing.

7. Federal Trade Commission law: To weed out trusts, combines, and dishonest business men everywhere; a stimulus to honest business; a curb bit in the mouth of dishonest business.

8. Marine insurance law: Insuring an open sea, an open market. Providing for marine insurance to shippers of American products. The resumption of shipping to markets of the world. Affording the six and a half million farmers an open and an honest market for their crops. Affording 20,000,000 wage earners permanent employment at a living wage. (Note.—Cotton was selling for 5½ cents a pound due to closed seas occasioned by withdrawal of insurance companies. The enactment of the Government marine-insurance law aided in restoring price of cotton, wheat, and other products.)

9. Ship purchase act: Enabling Americans to control their own shipping and make certain their markets. Establishing a merchant marine, ships to carry our commerce. Enabling the farmer to have a steady and dependable market for his wheat and his cotton; enabling the business man to prosper and improve, to keep the arteries of commerce open and going; to enable ships to navigate the sea and carry products of mine, field, and forest to the markets of the world. This legislation important in peace times but doubly important in war times both to business men and farmers.

10. Clayton antitrust law: To prosecute the trusts and combinations and those engaged in vicious business methods that oppress the poor; to encourage honest business—honest business will not object; dishonest business will get justice and no more.

11. Philippine independence bill: Giving the Filipinos a modified form of independence and giving them a wider scope of local self-government. This will hasten the day of complete independence, which is desirable both to the United States and to the Philippines.

12. National prohibition: Congress, by a two-thirds vote in both branches, has passed it; three-fourths of the States have ratified it; it is the law of the land.

DEMOCRACY'S ACHIEVEMENT FOR AMERICA'S SIX AND ONE-HALF MILLION FARMERS, IN WHICH SCOTT FERRIS TOOK AN ACTIVE AND IMPORTANT PART.

1. Rural credits law: Cheaper interest—longer tenure—what the farmers desired. Passed the House May 15, 1916; signed by President Wilson July 17, 1916; SCOTT FERRIS voted for it, spoke for it, and otherwise helped secure this legislation. SCOTT FERRIS is now working for an amendment to dispense with farm-loan associations so loans can be made direct, dispensing with red tape, and rendering loans more easy and simple of acquirement. While the law is not patronized by all, the low rate of interest and long tenure of payment has lowered interest rates in all farm-loan companies, thereby benefiting the farmer.

2. Law to prevent gambling in farm products: SCOTT FERRIS had advocated such a law since his advent into Congress at the beginning of the Sixtieth Congress in the fall of 1907. This law needs tightening up, so that farmers may be sure of an open and honest market—free from gamblers who neither sow nor reap—a market free of graft.

3. Minimum of $2 per bushel for wheat: SCOTT FERRIS supported farmers' $2.50 wheat amendment; spoke for it; stood by it at every stage; appealed to President. Appealed to committee to pass legislation which guaranteed to the farmers a price of $2.50 per bushel for wheat. Upon failure of this, supported guaranteed price of $2.40 per bushel for wheat. (Note: See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 5319, 8796–8797, and 9105, 65th Cong., 2d sess.)

4. Wheat-price guaranty: SCOTT FERRIS voted for H. R. 15796, appropriating $1,000,000,000 to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to the farmers for their wheat crops of 1918 and 1919. (Note: See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 4051–52, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session.) SCOTT FERRIS voted for, spoke for, and actively supported this appropriation which rendered a certainty the guaranteed price of $2.26 per bushel for wheat.

5. Warehouse bill: Enabling farmer to hold his crops properly insured for favorable market conditions.

6. Grain-grades bill: Classifying and grading grain, thereby securing better conditions and better prices.

7. Lever agricultural-extension bill: Carrying education to the farmer's son. Improving agricultural conditions.

8. Good-roads law: Federal aid for improvements to highways of the country. For the benefit of all.

9. Ferris 640-acre homestead law: Increasing area that homesteader may secure. Aids in opening the West.

10. Three-year homestead law: Cutting down residence from five to three years, thereby aiding the homesteader.

11. Second homestead entry for soldiers: Giving soldiers an additional opportunity to secure a home.

12. Preference right to soldier entrymen: Aiding soldiers to have a second chance to secure a home.

13. Credit given for time of service in Army as residence on homestead: Aids homesteaders in acquirement of home by reducing residence on land.

14. Federal appropriations for agricultural and mechanical colleges where farm boys and girls can learn trades; putting agriculture on a business basis; making agriculture a science; reducing cost of production.

15. Construction of fertilizer plants to improve the impoverished and run-down soils: Here Government steps in to stamp out monopoly in fertilizer, thereby rendering aid to farmers.

16. Increased appropriations for agriculture, thus recognizing agriculture as one of the leading industries.

17. Bureau of Markets: To enable farmer to have an open and honest market; to avoid waste; to provide better market facilities; to aid farmers in every way.

18. Bureau of Good Roads: To keep alive road improvement everywhere; to study improved methods of road construction.

19. Repeal daylight-saving law: SCOTT FERRIS introduced a bill first day of session. It was repealed on the 20th day of August, 1919.

DEMOCRACY'S ACHIEVEMENTS FOR AMERICA'S 20,000,000 TOILERS IN WHICH SCOTT FERRIS TOOK AN ACTIVE AND ENERGETIC PART.

1. Establishment of the Department of Labor: Providing for a Cabinet member to represent the wage earners of the country.

2. Eight-hour day on public works: In the interest of every man who toils.

3. Children's Bureau: Protecting orphanage of land: Demanded by civilization.

4. Child-labor law: Protection of youth of land: Demanded by mothers of America.

5. Safety of railway employees: Only justice to both employers and dependent ones.

6. Bureau of Labor Safety: Scientific methods of protecting those engaged in hazardous employment.

7. Workmen's compensation law: To make certain compensation to dependent ones.

8. Seamen's law: Requiring decent living facilities and proper protection of life.

9. Anti-injunction law: Labor's demand.

10. Increased wage scales on Government work.

The establishment in the Department of Labor of an Adjustment Service, including (a) Division of Conciliation, (b) United States Employment Service, (c) Bureau of Labor Statistics, (d) Bureau of Inmigration, (e) Bureau of Naturalization, (f) Information and Educational Service, (g) Bureau of Industrial Housing and Transportation, (h) War Labor Policies Board, (i) Adjusting of Labor Disputes.

All in the interest of labor; all enacted for its benefit; all received the faithful and loyal support of SCOTT FERRIS.

AMERICA'S NATURAL RESOURCES KEPT FREE FROM GRAFT.

During seven years SCOTT FERRIS held chairmanship of the Public Lands Committee of the House; aided in stamping out graft in connection with the 700,000,000 acres of public land, the 165,000,000 acres of forest reserves, the 70,000,000 acres of coal land, the 6,000,000 acres of oil land, and the 3,000,000 acres of phosphate land, the 60,000,000 horsepower of hydroelectric energy, and the 31 national monuments and national parks. This property belongs to all the people—all should be interested in its preservation, development, and proper use. The handling of this great estate was both intricate and difficult. Not a breath of scandal, not an acre given away to railroads or frittered away by lax legislation.

Prior to the administration of Secretary Franklin K. Lane America suffered a constant smudge of scandal regarding the public domain.

AMERICA'S GREAT ACHIEVEMENT AND EFFICIENCY DURING THE STRESS OF WAR.

1. Raised an Army of 4,000,000 men—the mightiest and most efficient Army of all history.

2. Bridged the Atlantic with American ships and put 2,000,000 men safely across the sea amidst the greatest adversity known to history.

3. Established the greatest Medical Department and reduced the loss of life by disease to a minimum.

4. Established the greatest hospital service.

5. Established the greatest aeroplane service and established the greatest Navy in the world, save and except England alone.

6. Had an Army of the bravest men, the best clothed, the best fed, and the best paid of any army of the 26 nations engaged in the conflict.

7. Loaned $11,000,000,000 to the Allies to aid in the conduct of the war.

8. No panic; no failing, crumbling institutions; money plentiful; business men prosperous; the Treasury safe and sound; American institutions growing and expanding; no scourge among us.

9. The establishment of a war-time espionage law—a law to punish the wily spy, the agitator, the I. W. W., who, while the boys were dying at the front and were being submarined as they crossed the sea, were disseminating insidious propaganda of the murderous Hun.

10. Increased pay of the private soldier both in war and peace times from $15 to $30 a month. There was not a dissenting vote by either Republican or Democrat when this increase was added as an amendment to the draft law. SCOTT FERRIS was present and voted for the law.

RECONSTRUCTION LEGISLATION, BOTH PENDING AND PASSED, INCIDENT TO CLOSING THE WORLD'S GREATEST WAR.

First. Vocational education for the wounded soldiers, so they may learn trades and become independent, self-sustaining citizens. Approximately $22,000,000 has already been appropriated; more to follow. These wounded soldiers shall be protected; they shall be educated; they shall not want.

Second. Pending legislation putting within reach of America's soldiers an opportunity to own and reside in a home they can call their own. (Note.—SCOTT FERRIS is in favor of extending the Mondell bill to town homes as well as farm homes; also to allow segregated homes as distinguished from soldiers' colony homes; also to let soldiers designate locality and particular homes desired; also to afford an equal chance to men of every State without requiring soldier to abandon his home State to avail himself of the law.)

Third. Preference in the civil service and Government employment of all kinds for the soldiers. Will be assistance to soldiers who desire to enter Government service. It gives them a preference in all Government appointments. It is a law.

Fourth. Preference rights extended to all soldiers in acquiring of public lands and homes upon the public domain.

Fifth. Appropriate cash bonuses to the soldiers commensurate with their needs to reestablish them in society and put them as well off as they were before they entered the service. This should be done. It is only justice. Their service has upset all their plans. It is only a just recognition of service faithfully performed.

Sixth. Sweeping away of emergency war-time legislation. Total exemption of farmers from all profiteering laws, as they are not hoarders—not dealers—merely producers and selling in an open market.

Seventh. Repeal of the espionage laws and censorship laws of all kinds, simultaneously with the closing of the war—this was necessary during the war, but indefensible in peace times. All patriotic Congressmen and Senators were willing to pass stringent laws to help win the war; all should now join in their repeal.

Eighth. To dispense with all unnecessary boards and Federal control, and allow honest business, labor, society, and the farmers to be free from Federal interference, Federal regulation, and allow the law of supply and demand honestly administered to again assert itself and control. If abuses spring up, let them be prosecuted in the courts as other infractions of law. In war times drastic laws were required. In peace the least governed is the best governed.

Ninth. To prosecute and put behind bars gamblers in the necessities of life, and hoarders and extortionists of all sorts and kinds. Hoarders, gamblers, profiteers, and extortionists should no longer be tolerated. They extort from the producer and consumer. They breed Bolshevists, anarchists, and law violators.

Tenth. For the enactment of legislation to reduce the high cost of living and the abnormal and unconscionable profits due to practiced extortion on both producer and consumer; hoarding and profiteering to be prosecuted for breaches of the law.

Eleventh. Restoration and reinstatement on easy terms, without penalty of lapsed war-risk insurance policies.

Twelfth. Payment of soldiers' insurance in lump sums, as distinguished from monthly installments, at the option of the insured.

Thirteenth. Establishment of educational advantages in all camps, cantonments, forts, and arsenals, thereby rendering service in Army and Navy sufficiently attractive to insure an adequate peace-time Army, without any compulsory military training in peace times. (Note.—SCOTT FERRIS is against conscription in times of peace.)

Fourteenth. Free education to all disabled soldiers, without red tape or entrance conditions of any sort; make admission easy and attractive.

Fifteenth. Deportation of alien slackers, as desired by the American Legion.

The Alien and American Citizenship.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. SUMMERS,

OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, October 15, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 9782) to regulate further the entry of aliens into the United States.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill and shall vote for it because it safeguards America, her institutions, and her citizenship.

In foreign lands I have observed that America means "dollars," it means "gold," it means "high wages," but, Mr. Speaker, the time has come when America must mean more than the acquisition of "gold" to any man or woman who approaches our shores.

The alien who would come our way must come either for a temporary residence or else he must come with an open heart and mind, ready and willing not alone to gather in American dollars, but ready to learn of our institutions, our customs and traditions, and ready to blend with our citizenship in upholding the most liberal Government, the purest flag, and the highest ideals that the world has ever known.

In our generosity we have opened wide the door, and while admitting millions who have become real Americans, bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh, we have also admitted other millions who have never learned to love our institutions, who never have and who never will become American citizens.

These are the tools that are readily grasped by the agitator, the I. W. W., the anarchist, and the revolutionist in carrying out their unholy designs against our national standards.

Nevertheless the good common sense and patriotism of the masses in America can be relied upon. The great heart of America is sound and alien radicalism engenders no fears.

But, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, while we scrutinize our immigrant we must also turn the searchlight upon ourselves. We must develop and carry forward a common-sense program that will reach both young and old, both alien and American. Our industrial laws must be eminently just and reasonable. We must go more than halfway in instilling a new patriotism, the patriotism of our Puritan fathers.

Our schools and colleges mold and determine our citizenship. Their influence reaches to the heart of every home. They should stress Americanism every day in the year. Our national heroes, our statesmen, and our traditions should be the theme of song and story upon the lips of every child.

I believe in boys and girls and men and women, and that our schools should teach them a reverence and respect for God and flag and country, that we may reap an abundant harvest of law-abiding, patriotic citizens.

They should teach alien and American that in America laws must be obeyed and that wrongs can be righted in an orderly and legal way, but that the agitator and the red-handed revolutionist in this country will fail miserably in his attempts and will bring the wrath of a peace-loving but mighty Nation upon his head.

Teach them to understand and to live William Tyler Page's patriotic gem, "The American's Creed":

I believe in the United States of America as a Government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a Republic; a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States; a perfect Union, one and inseparable, established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice, and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its Constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies.

Budget Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM S. VARE,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 24, 1919.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, there are two essential features in the budget bill which command the attention and support of those who are looking toward the formation of some system by which a more efficient and logical method may be employed for the appropriation and expenditure of Government funds.

The first of these is the centralization of authority and responsibility for the submission of the budget in the hands of the President. At the present time the estimates are made up in the main by the chief clerks of the various departments, in consultation with the Secretaries and the various bureau chiefs. These are submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, who in turn submits them to the congressional appropriation committees, without revision.

It is quite natural that the Secretary of the Treasury, as a Cabinet officer, would hesitate to revise estimates of another Cabinet officer, who would have direct knowledge of his particular department and the bureaus of which it is composed.

With the creation of the bureau of the budget in the office of the President with a sufficient expert force, the President should have first-hand knowledge of the requirements of each department. The new law will very properly place full jurisdiction over estimates in the hands of the President without the division of authority we now find under the estimate system. It is a step in the right direction for economy and efficiency.

The second outstanding feature is the creation of an accounting department, which shall be established separate and apart from and independent of any department having authority to spend the moneys of the Treasury. It will have certain powers of investigation and the right to criticize or reject expenditures.

While the head of this department is to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, he may be removed by joint resolution of the House and Senate. This should keep the office independent for action and serve as a check on extravagance. It is in line with good business methods.

In the city of Philadelphia for the last 40 years all expenditures of the municipal government have been audited by the city controller, whose office is separate and apart from the office of the mayor and the various directors of departments. His powers are similar to those given the auditor by this bill.

He is elected by the people, however. He appoints his own office force. The present incumbent, Hon. John M. Walton, has held the position for approximately a quarter of a century, and is popularly known as the watchdog of the city treasury.

In addition to the passage of this bill, it has been suggested that the present rules of the House be so changed that one general budget committee shall be named to limit the amount of appropriations for each department to sums within the estimated revenue. There seems to be a diversity of opinion on the proposed change of the rules.

Surely some system should be devised whereby there could be a check placed on the vast sums of money that have and are being appropriated. I am hopeful that this can be brought about by the appointment of a central committee without depreciating the importance of existing committees.

Budget legislation has been discussed by the various leaders of the House since I first became a Member in May, 1912, and I am very much pleased to have seen the House pass the bill by almost a unanimous vote.

To Provide a National Budget System and an Independent Audit of Government Accounts, and for Other Purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK CROWTHER,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, October 21, 1919.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to receive the indorsement of the voters of my district, the thirtieth New York, at the last congressional election, running on a platform of which the three principal planks were "unconditional surrender," "sound protective tariff," and "a national budget system."

"Unconditional surrender" is now a matter of history entirely due to the magnificent showing made by our boys, American soldiers, sailors, and marines, who threw the fear of God into the Huns and made them realize that their race was run.

Regarding "protective tariff," there is a disposition not to take up this important subject, except as a matter of general revision, perhaps not until the regular session. Numerous tariff measures have, however, been passed in the House, opposed in a narrow, partisan spirit by the Democrats, and unjustly so, for these measures are for the protection of industries that were developed in this country at the request of the Government and were a mighty factor in winning the war. I refer to zinc, magnesite, tungsten, chemical glass, and so forth, and, though not a war necessity, a bill for the protection of the pearl-button industry against our dangerous competitor, Japan.

The third plank, "a national budget system," is before us for discussion, and, naturally, I am in favor of its passage and final enactment into law.

Prior to 1912 very little had ever been written on the subject of "a national budget," and it looked as though we should go on forever voting appropriations in a haphazard sort of way and lump-sum appropriations in time of emergency, as we did in the late war. Thoughtful citizens were impressed by the statement of Senator Aldrich a few years ago that "if only Federal business were run in a businesslike way $300,000,000 a year might be saved to this Government."

This bill provides a bureau of the budget composed of a director and an assistant director, to be appointed by the President, who, with the other officials named in this bill, will assist the President in the preparation of the budget, he in turn submitting it to the Congress after careful scrutiny as to the necessity of alterations. This is an eminently fair and wise provision, for the President can not fairly be held responsible for proper centrally reviewed estimates unless given a budget staff for investigation of needs, analyses, and comparison of estimates and the formulation of a tentative program.

The easier it is for Congress and the public to understand the why and wherefore of executive estimates the more time they can give to intelligent discussion of proposals and the less time that need be wasted in doing what official clerks should do, thus losing sight of needs. Congress has been the subject of keen criticism for a great many years for its extravagance and wasteful methods of handling the people's money. Even though through pork-barrel legislation they have merited this criticism, there is no doubt whatever but what Congress has been made the scapegoat for gross errors in estimating and spending by executive departments.

Provision for an independent audit of Government accounts by the creation of an "accountancy department" is a salient feature of this bill. This department is to be in charge of a comptroller general and an assistant comptroller general, to be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. This provision establishes the integrity of these appointments during changing administrations and removes any suggestion of political influence.

In a word, the budget bill is a clean-cut, well-defined business proposition. It will carry with it a message of confidence to the people of this great United States, and it also directs to their attention that it is the fulfillment of a pledge made by the Republican Party.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE,

OF COLORADO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, October 30, 1919.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, having for four years been a member of the Public Lands Committee, I have aided in the preparation of two bills of the character of the bill under discussion before the House at this time.

Coming as I do from a public-land State and having had an intimate connection with public-land matters by an experience of 17 years as receiver of the United States Land Office in that State, I felt that I knew something of the need for changes in the public-land laws and corrections of the regulations as to administration of the laws already written which would give to these States a more liberal construction of these laws that would enable more perfect development of our natural resources, so badly needed for the growth and development of our new country.

I also felt that I knew the sentiment of our people on these questions, which, I will say, was and is that these natural resources should be especially developed, and the few remaining public-land States should not be deprived of the benefits which through their development would accrue to the States by the theory of the latter-day conservationists that the General Government should retain entire control of these resources and hold them in trust for future generations, which would retard the growth of these States and impose upon them hardships not imposed on other States whose every resource was developed and used by the States for their benefit.

Colorado, like many other public-land States since this policy has been advocated, has seen large areas of her lands withdrawn from entry or development and thereby kept off the tax roll, leaving a small portion of the States to bear the added burden of taxation necessary for the support of the States, the building of roads, development of their schools, and so forth.

In the case of Colorado there have been thus withdrawn from any prospect of getting on the tax roll more than 21,000,000 acres. These contain some of our richest lands, whose development would have relieved the balance of the property of the State from the high taxes under which we suffer to-day. These are coal lands of about 6,000,000 acres, forest reserves of about 15,000,000 acres, and water power capable of development that would have aided greatly in adding to our manufacturing growth.

Our people feel that these resources should be the property of the States and be developed by them. The sentiment of the Congress has opposed this idea. Our only hope, therefore, has been to secure the most liberal terms possible from the Congress, and so we have supported the legislation proposed in the bills heretofore passed by this House, and upon this theory only support this bill.

We feel, however, that this section of the bill should be retained, for it is vital to the interests of these States that at least 45 per cent of the amounts received from royalties from the development of these resources should go direct to the States, and that the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], the former chairman of the Public Lands Committee, should be defeated and the substitute of the chairman of the committee should prevail, although in my judgment the original provision in the bill should have been retained.

To have these royalties go first into the reclamation fund and to be later returned to the States would mean, in my judgment, that the States would be kept out of its benefits for 20 years, and perhaps for all time, as our fear is that it would be entirely exhausted in the administration of this enterprise, as in the case of the forest reserves, which we were promised a few years ago would ultimately be a source of revenue to the Government. The large amount of appropriation called for each year for their maintenance has completely dispelled this idea, however.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS L. RUBEY,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 24, 1919,

On the conference report on the resolution (H. J. Res. 151) to provide additional compensation for employees of the Postal Service.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall support the conference report. It does not go far enough, it is not satisfactory to the Members of the House, it will not be satisfactory to the postal employees. It is not subject to amendment, and under the circumstances it is the best we can do. The chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and every member of the committee who has spoken has assured the House that this is intended only to give temporary relief during the present fiscal year. The last Congress authorized the appointment of a joint commission composed of five Members of the United States Senate and five Members of the House of Representatives to investigate the whole subject of postal salaries and place them upon a just and equitable basis. That commission has been appointed; they are now at work. Under the terms of the joint commission it is required to report the result of its investigation and finding to Congress in December. The Congress therefore should be able to pass a just and fair measure at its regular session this coming winter.

The increases provided in the proposed act are set forth very concisely in the conference report, which is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 151) to provide additional compensation for employees of the Postal Service and making appropriations therefor, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

* * * * * * *

"That because of the unusual conditions which now exist, the compensation provided for in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920,' approved February 28, 1919, the following classes of employees shall be increased as follows for such fiscal year only:

"(a) Postmasters at offices of the third class; assistant postmasters and clerks, including clerks at division headquarters of post-office inspectors, special clerks, finance clerks, bookkeepers, printers, mechanics, skilled laborers, watchmen, messengers, laborers, and other employees of offices of the first and second class; letter carriers in the City Delivery Service; employees in Government-owned automobile service; supervisory officials, inspectors, railway postal clerks, including substitutes, superintendents, requisition fillers, packers, and laborers; the agent in charge, clerks, and messengers at the United States stamped envelope agency, Dayton, Ohio; and employees of the mail equipment shop who receive compensation at the rate per annum of—

"(1) Not less than $1,000 nor more than $1,200, to be increased $200.

"(2) More than $1,200 and not more than $1,600, to be increased $150.

"(3) More than $1,600 and not more than $2,000, to be increased $125.

"(4) More than $2,000 and not more than $2,500, to be increased $100.

"Provided, That no third-class postmaster shall receive more than $2,000 per annum.

"(b) Carriers in the village delivery service and other employees paid from lump-sum appropriations receiving compensation at the rate of less than $1,000 per annum to be increased 20 per cent of their present compensation.

"(c) Rural letter carriers on daily routes and rural letter carriers on two triweekly routes whose routes are—

"(1) Eleven miles or less in length, to be increased $75.

"(2) Over 11 miles and under 20 miles in length, to be increased $100.

"(3) Twenty miles and under 24 miles in length, to be increased $150.

"(4) Twenty-four miles or over in length, to be increased $200.

"(d) Rural letter carriers on triweekly routes of—

"(1) Eleven miles or less in length, to be increased $37.50.
"(2) Over 11 miles and under 20 miles in length, to be increased $50.
"(3) Twenty miles and under 24 miles in length, to be increased $75.
"(4) Twenty-four miles or over in length, to be increased $100.
"(c) Postmasters at offices of the fourth class to be increased by an amount equal to 15 per cent of their present compensation.
"(f) Substitute, temporary, and auxiliary clerks at first and second class post offices, and substitute, temporary, and auxiliary letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall receive after the passage of this act, for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, in lieu of their present compensation, a compensation of 60 cents per hour for each hour of service performed.
"SEC. 2. That the above-mentioned increases in compensation shall apply to officers and employees in the Postal Service at the time of the passage of this act, and be effective as of July 1, 1919, or as of such subsequent date when such officers or employees entered the Postal Service: Provided, That as to substitute, temporary, and auxiliary employees, and employees paid from lump-sum appropriations, the increases shall be effective from and after the date of the passage of this act: And provided further, That none of the increases provided herein shall be applicable to officers and employees who have received an increase in their compensation of more than $300 per annum during the current fiscal year.
"SEC. 3. That no post office shall be advanced to the next higher class as a result of the increases in compensation of postmasters herein provided.
"SEC. 4. That in order to provide for the increased compensation herein authorized, so much as is necessary is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supplement the amounts appropriated for the various classes of employees herein mentioned, in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920,' approved February 28, 1919."

It will be remembered that in the Post Office appropriation bill passed February 28, 1919, the last Congress provided for some increases. I quote the provision of that act as it relates to rural carriers, as follows:

That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the compensation of each rural letter carrier for serving a rural route of 24 miles, six days in the week, shall be $1,500; on routes 22 miles and less than 24 miles, $1,440; on routes 20 miles and less than 22 miles, $1,350; on routes 18 miles and less than 20 miles, $1,200; on routes 16 miles and less than 18 miles, $1,050; on routes 14 miles and less than 16 miles, $900; on routes 12 miles and less than 14 miles, $840; on routes 10 miles and less than 12 miles, $780; on routes 8 miles and less than 10 miles, $720; on routes 6 miles and less than 8 miles, $660; on routes 4 miles and less than 6 miles, $600. A rural letter carrier serving one triweekly route shall be paid on the basis for a route one-half the length of the route served by him, and a carrier serving two triweekly routes shall be paid on the basis for a route one-half of the combined length of the two routes.

That same act made the following provision for fourth-class postmasters:

That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, postmasters of the fourth class shall receive the same compensation as now provided by law, except that they shall receive 100 per cent of the cancellations of the first $100 or less per quarter: Provided, That if the compensation does not exceed $75 for any one quarter, fourth-class postmasters shall be allowed an increase of 20 per cent of the compensation allowed under existing law.

The high cost of living affects the rural route carrier more than any other postal employee, for the reason that he has to care not only for himself and family but he must also feed his teams and keep up his equipment. The prices he has to pay for corn, oats, hay, and feed of every kind are higher than ever before. To this must be added increased cost on the necessary repairs to his equipment. If he uses an automobile, he must pay three times as much for his gasoline, and correspondingly high for tires and other repairs. The rural carrier, after paying these necessary expenses, will not have enough left, even with the increase we are now giving him, to maintain himself and family in comfort.

The fourth-class postmasters are acknowledged by all to be the poorest paid employees of the Government. The maximum salary is $1,000 per annum, but only a very few receive that amount, while a very large number receive only a few hundred dollars. There are a great many postmasters who receive less than $100 a year. There are to-day in the service, in round numbers, 10,000 first, second, and third class postmasters, taken all together, while there are 43,000 fourth-class postmasters. These postmasters serve in the smaller towns and villages in the country communities. They must furnish their own fixtures and a place in which to conduct the business. The very nature of their service demands that they be at their offices many hours each day in order that the people may be accommodated. The compensation paid at these smaller offices is so small that it is getting to be very difficult for the department to secure anyone to fill them. In fact, hardly a week passes but some office in my district has to be discontinued because no one can be found to take it. Where offices are thus discontinued the people are greatly inconvenienced and compelled to go long distances to get their mail.

The money used in defraying the expenses of the Post Office Department comes from those who use the mails. More than 90 per cent of all the receipts come from the sale of postage stamps. For several years the system has been practically self-supporting. That being the case, it is up to Congress to determine how that money can be spent to the best advantage. Conditions have greatly changed since the postal salaries were fixed a number of years ago, and Congress finds itself face to face with the problems of making such necessary increases as will give to the employee a just and reasonable compensation for his labor and, if possible, enable him to lay up something for the future.

There is no department of the Government that comes in such close contact with all the people as the Post Office Department. I have endeavored in every way possible, during my service as a Member of Congress, to strengthen that service among my own people. I have secured the establishment of many rural routes, have asked for the creation of new post offices in communities where needed, and have secured many additional star routes. I have felt that by increasing the mail facilities of his district a Congressman could be of actual service to his constituents.

THE BEGINNINGS OF OUR POSTAL SYSTEM.

During the colonial days England established in a limited way a postal system among the Colonies. Post offices were created and the mail was carried by post from one principal city to another. As early as 1737 Benjamin Franklin was made postmaster at Philadelphia and had supervision over some of the other offices in the Colonies. When the Revolution came Franklin was dismissed because of his affiliation with the American cause. Soon thereafter the Continental Congress, on July 26, 1775, established a postal system and placed it in charge of Mr. Franklin. Our own system in America therefore dates from July 26, 1775.

The Postal System is therefore one of the oldest institutions of our Government. Our forefathers when they framed the Constitution recognized the importance of this becoming a great governmental function, and very wisely gave to Congress control over it when they wrote into that instrument the provision, "Congress shall have power to establish post offices and post roads." Congress very promptly made provision for carrying into effect this authority by creating and establishing the Post Office Department. Samuel Osgood was the first Postmaster General under the Constitution, appointed September 26, 1789. The department has grown and developed until to-day it is the one department of the Government that is brought into close touch with every citizen of the Republic. Millions of letters, cards, packages, and so forth, pass through the mails every day, and so perfect has the system become that but comparatively few of these go astray or become lost.

CITY CARRIERS.

In the early days everyone had to take his letters to the post office in his city, town, or village. The mails were transmitted from post office to post office by the Government but everybody had to go to his post office to get his mail. In time, however, the system was perfected and brought to a high point of efficiency. This was first accomplished in the large cities. Here city carriers were provided and the mail delivered daily to the very door of the citizen. City carriers were first inaugurated in the city of New York in 1864. Since that time city delivery has been established in about 2,000 cities requiring more than 35,000 carriers to do the work efficiently.

RURAL ROUTES.

For a long time the people in the country had to go many miles to get their mail. I remember well that when I was a small boy they used to send me to town, some three miles away, to get the mail. My grandfather owned a pony, noted for her gentleness as well as for her extreme old age. She went by the name of "Old Pony," and many is the time I have ridden Old Pony over what was then to me a long, lonely road, to get the mail and bring back the county papers. How different conditions are to-day. Only a few years ago, in 1896, Congress made available $40,000 to be used as an experiment in the establishment of rural routes.

The first test was made from three cities in West Virginia—Charleston, Uvilla, and Halltown. The routes were started the same day, October 1, 1896. The success of the experiment is evidenced by the fact that the last Congress appropriated nearly $70,000,000 for this purpose, and there are now more than 43,000 rural mail carriers making daily delivery to the farmhouses throughout the country, distributing letters, packages, and papers to more than 28,000,000 people.

The Rural Route Service, inaugurated as an experiment, was begun very conservatively; the salaries paid to the carriers were very meager. In 1897 the maximum amount paid to any carrier was $300 per annum. Since that time increases have been made from time to time. In 1898 the maximum salary was made $400; in 1900, $500; in 1902, $600; in 1904, $720; in 1907, $900; in 1911, $1,000; in 1912, $1,100; in 1914, $1,200; and in February, 1919, $1,500. Under the provisions of this bill the maximum salary will be $1,700.

The purpose of establishing rural delivery was to extend to those residing in the farming communities, as far as practicable, those same advantages and conveniences of mail service that had been enjoyed by those residing in the cities. Members of Congress are anxious to see this service extended from year to year. In 1916 we wrote into the law this provision:

That rural mail service shall be extended so as to serve, as nearly as practicable, the entire rural population of the United States.

STAR ROUTES.

Star routes have been in existence under one name or another ever since we have had a Postal System. The primary object of a star route is to carry the mail from one post office to another and incidentally to deliver mail to people living along the route. In 1918 there were 10,958 star routes in operation, at a cost of a little more than $8,000,000. Members of Congress have received many letters during the last two or three years, calling their attention to the increased cost of living and asking that their compensation be increased. It is impossible to get relief for star-route carriers, no matter however great their necessities may be, for the reason that these routes are let by contract. I quote the provision of the statute enacted many years ago:

All contracts for carrying the mail shall be in the name of the United States, and shall be awarded to the lowest bidder tendering sufficient guarantee for faithful performance, without other reference to the mode of transportation than may be necessary to provide for due celerity, certainty, and security thereof; but the Postmaster General shall not be bound to consider the bid of any person who has willfully or negligently failed to perform a former contract.

Recognizing that star-route carriers had a just cause of complaint, because of the changed conditions which had come upon them by reason of the increased cost of food, feed, and living generally, Congress inserted in the Post Office appropriation bill in 1918 a provision which authorized the Postmaster General to investigate the conditions arising from contracts in star routes, and authorized him to adjust their compensation. Under this provision star-route carriers have been able to get some little measure of relief.

PARCEL POST SYSTEM.

A great, advanced step was taken when the parcel-post law was passed. I had the honor of being a Member of this body at that time, and I shall always be proud of the fact that I was one of those who strongly supported that measure. The system was inaugurated January 1, 1913, and to-day packages to the number of 4,000,000 are distributed daily throughout the country, and delivered not only to those who reside in the cities, but also to the farmers residing out upon the rural routes. In 1918 we authorized the Postmaster General to make experiments in the use of the parcel post in the marketing of farm products, and made an appropriation for that purpose. In the act of February, 1919, we authorized him to inaugurate the experiment of operating motor-vehicle truck routes, in order to facilitate the collection and delivery of food from the producer to the consumer, and to aid in the delivery to the producer of articles needed in production. The first of these country motor-express routes was inaugurated July 1. A few weeks ago, when Congress had under consideration the resolution relative to the sale of the food held by the War Department, we inserted a provision authorizing the War Department to use the parcel post in the sale and distribution of that food, and it is to-day being used extensively for that purpose.

POSTAGE STAMPS.

To-day millions of stamps of various kinds and denominations are in daily use and it is hard to believe that there was a time when stamps were not used and when postage was paid in actual money. The rate of postage then depended not only upon the size of the letter but also upon the distance the letter was carried. A letter in those days consisted of a single sheet of paper. The message to be conveyed was written on one side, the letter was then folded with the reading matter on the inside, sealed with sealing wax or paste, and the address written on the outside. Envelopes were not in general use. If a letter consisted of two sheets, double postage was charged, and if three sheets were used, three times the amount was charged, and so on. It was also customary in those early days to send letters through the mail without prepaying the postage. In fact, a very large part of the letters were so sent and the person receiving the letter paid the postage. The prepayment of postage was not required by law until 1855. Postage stamps were first issued by the Government in 1847. It is related that the first stamps sold by the Government were purchased by Henry Shaw, the father of Henry Shaw, jr., the noted humorist who wrote and lectured under the name of Josh Billings. It is said that Mr. Shaw happened to be in the office of the Postmaster General, Cave Johnson, when the first delivery of stamps was made by the contractor, and that Mr. Shaw asked permission to purchase one of each kind. There were just two denominations—the 5-cent stamp, which bore the portrait of Franklin, and the 10-cent stamp, which bore the portrait of Washington.

POSTAL MONEY-ORDER SYSTEM.

The use of the postal money order as a means of remitting safely through the mails small sums of money came into use as early as 1864. It has had a very remarkable growth, as it is now universally used to send money from one section of the country to another. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, there were 122,004,447 money orders issued, amounting to $904,649,519.15, from which the Government received $6,138,-197.42 in revenue. The official figures for the last fiscal year are not yet available, but the estimated transactions for that year, based on increases of approximately 9.24 and 22 per cent, respectively, are as follows: Money orders issued, 132,587,000; amount of same, $1,120,500,000; revenue received, $7,487,000. There is no doubt but that we have gone beyond the billion-dollar mark in the domestic money-order business of the country.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

The Postal Savings System was inaugurated in January, 1911, as a means of encouraging people of small means to save their earnings. It has been taken advantage of principally by the wage earners in the large labor centers of the country. At first the maximum amount that anyone could have on deposit in a postal savings bank was $1,000, but in 1918 Congress increased this amount to $2,500. On June 30, 1919, there was on deposit in these banks, in round numbers, $167,000,000.

RAILWAY MAIL CAR SERVICE.

There are so many features connected with the progress and development of our great Postal System that it is impossible to go into details with each one. The use of railway mail cars was first tried out in 1862, over the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad in my own State of Missouri. This experiment was a decided success. The railway mail car has become a traveling post office, and there are now in use 5,647 such cars. In these cars the clerks work day and night distributing mail while the trains are traveling sometimes at a high rate of speed. This service is a hazardous one, and Congress has by legislation sought to safeguard the clerks as much as possible. A few years ago we passed a law making provision for the use of steel cars and providing for the gradual elimination of all wooden mail cars. Every new car put into the service now must be constructed of steel, and more than half the cars now in use are either in part or entirely of steel construction.

The marvelous development of the mail car service is but another illustration of the great progress of the Postal Service along many lines. Stamped envelopes came into use in 1853, registered letters in 1885, postal cards in 1873, and the special-delivery service in 1885.

GOVERNMENT AID TO POST ROADS.

There is nothing that will benefit the rural mail service as much as the improvement of the roads over which the mail is now carried or over which the mail may be carried in the future. In the early days of the Republic Congress passed laws and appropriated money for the construction and maintenance of public highways. That policy was discontinued and more than a hundred years elapsed before Congress again assumed the great and important function of aiding the States in the construction of public roads.

Let me briefly recount the history of this legislation. The first good-roads bill to pass Congress in recent years was passed in the Sixty-second Congress. Many Members of the House introduced bills upon that important subject, but to my former colleague from Missouri, Hon. Dorsey W. Shackleford, belongs more credit than to any other Member. His untiring energy and his zeal and determination to secure legislation upon this subject was an inspiration to his colleagues. Some 35 or 40 Members who had introduced bills got together and after a number of meetings and after very careful consideration agreed upon a bill and instructed Mr. Shackleford to introduce it. That bill was sent to the Committee on Agriculture. The bill was then by that committee referred to a subcommittee, of which I had the honor of being chairman. After careful consideration by the subcommittee and some changes, we reported it back with a favorable report and the Agriculture Committee in turn reported it to the House with the recommendation that it be passed. In order to expedite its passage it was offered as an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill. When our bill reached the Senate, however, it was stricken out of the Post Office appropriation bill, and in its place was substituted a provision for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of Government aid to post roads, and an appropriation of $500,000 was made to enable the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General jointly to carry on some experiments in the construction of post roads. While the good-roads men of the House were disappointed by this action, yet we were encouraged because a beginning had been made and some legislation had been secured.

In the next Congress, the Sixty-third, another good-roads bill was taken up and passed by the House. I had the distinguished honor of presiding over the House of Representatives during the several days it was under consideration.

That bill was not acted upon by the Senate, so that nothing was accomplished in the way of road legislation in that Congress.

In the Sixty-fourth Congress we began to get results, and after a vigorous fight in both House and Senate we got through the act of July 11, 1916, providing the following sums of money to be spent in cooperation with the States: Five million dollars for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, $10,000,000 for 1918, $15,000,000 for 1919, $20,000,000 for 1920, and $25,000,000 for 1921.

The Sixty-fifth Congress amended the act of July 11, 1916, and supplemented the appropriations made therein by $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, $75,000,000 for 1920, and $75,000,000 for 1921, all of said money to be spent in cooperation with the States.

Thus, after long years of effort, we see the Congress giving valuable aid to the States and through the States to the counties and communities in the building of public roads.

AIR MAIL SERVICE.

On May 15, 1918, I witnessed a scene I shall never forget. A vast crowd assembled on the aviation field on the banks of the historic Potomac in the city of Washington. The President was there, accompanied by the members of his Cabinet. Senators, Representatives, and people from almost every walk of life came to witness the inauguration of the use of aeroplanes for carrying the mail. Promptly at the appointed time, 10.40 a. m., the plane, filled to its capacity with mail and driven by an expert Army aviator, started on its way; first running along the ground on its wheels for a short distance, then gradually rising, it circled above the crowd and, amidst the plaudits of the vast multitude, took its course like a huge bird straight for its destination, the city of New York, 218 miles away.

A few hundred yards away was the great memorial erected to the memory of the immortal Lincoln; across the river, in full view, on the crest of the hill in Arlington Cemetery, stood the historic home of Robert E. Lee, while to the north a short distance towered the great Washington Monument. Could those three great Americans have viewed that remarkable scene in Potomac Park on that beautiful day in May, a little more than a year ago, their hearts would have been filled with pride at the progress and the development of this their beloved country.

Three air service mail routes have been established. New York and Washington, established May 15, 1918, a distance of 218 miles, time two and one-half to three hours; Cleveland to Chicago, established May 15, 1919, distance 325 miles, time three and one-half to four hours; and New York to Cleveland, established July 1, 1919, distance 410 miles, time four and one-half to five hours.

It requires eight planes to carry the mail daily over these routes, flying 1,906 miles each day, carrying an average of 2,100 pounds of first-class mail—84,000 letters, over 30,000,000 letters annually. The routes are self-supporting and the Post Office Department is actively engaged in planning additional routes. Within a very short time the air service will reach from coast to coast; it will be established between the important cities of the country, and in a few years it will extend from this country to Panama and on to South America.

POSTMASTERS, CLERKS, AND CARRIERS.

I can not close my remarks upon this subject without paying a tribute to the postmasters, clerks, carriers, and employees of the Postal System, who by their patriotic zeal and devotion to the cause of their country so materially assisted in winning the war. The post offices, located in every nook and corner of the country, became bureaus of information, and the postmasters were made use of by the War Department to furnish information to the people. If a young man wanted to join the Army, Navy, or the marines, his local postmaster furnished him with all the necessary information. The postmasters, clerks, and carriers took an active and a leading part in every war activity, and in so doing they reflected credit upon themselves and honor upon their country.

The position of postmaster has been filled by some of our most eminent men. In 1737 Benjamin Franklin was postmaster at Philadelphia, while just a century later, in 1837, the people at Salem, Ill., had as their postmaster Abraham Lincoln. May the postmasters of our day be encouraged by these illustrious examples and continue to render faithful and efficient service to their patrons. By so doing they will be in the future, as in the past, an important factor in the progress and the development of the Republic.

To Provide for the Establishment, Operation, and Maintenance of Foreign Trade Zones in Ports of Entry of the United States, to Expedite and Encourage Foreign Commerce and for Other Purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN I. NOLAN,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, October 25, 1919.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, the Ways and Means Committee has under consideration H. R. 10156, providing for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States. The principles of this bill have been indorsed by the leading chambers of commerce, merchants' associations, and business men of the United States. The Secretary of Commerce and the expert in charge of foreign trade in the Department of Commerce, the Tariff Commission, and other governmental agencies recommend that legislation of this character be enacted.

If the United States is to take its place in the foreign commerce of the world, if we are to build up and maintain an American merchant marine, and if we are to provide employment for workingmen in work which is now done on foreign shores, we must pay attention to the recommendations of earnest and patriotic men who have studied these problems.

PERMISSIVE LEGISLATION.

The proposed legislation is permissive and does not in any manner affect the customs laws or rates of duty now in force in the United States. The foreign-trade zone is a necessary auxiliary of a protective-tariff system. Testimony presented to the committees of Congress demonstrates that the zone is essential to facilitate American commerce and industry so that we may successfully compete with foreign nations in world trade.

The foreign-trade zone will remove existing handicaps on American trade, particularly transshipment trade with foreign countries.

Sweden, Denmark, Spain, Germany, and other protective-tariff countries find the free zone or free port (which we call a foreign-trade zone) of inestimable value in handling their foreign trade. Information at hand in the Department of Commerce shows that these countries are hastening to establish additional free zones.

The Tariff Commission, upon direction of Congress, made an exhaustive study of this question and filed with the Senate and House information which unequivocally demonstrates the necessity for the establishment of foreign-trade zones in the United States. As a result of its investigation the Tariff Commission, acting under the provisions of law, recommends the installation of foreign-trade zones.

CONSTITUTIONALITY.

When the Tariff Commission began its investigation the constitutional question was raised, and since the introduction of foreign-trade-zone bills at this session the question of constitutionality has been again raised by men who have not looked up the authorities or studied the question. In this connection the following brief prepared for the Tariff Commission conclusively demonstrates that the establishment of foreign-trade zones will not invade the Constitution:

MEMORANDUM FOR TARIFF COMMISSION.

FREE PORTS.

Constitutionality has been questioned upon two points:

Article 1, section 8, clause 1—

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises * * *; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

Article 1, section 9, clause 6—

"No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another; nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another."

The first of these clauses has been construed to refer to geographic rather than to intrinsic uniformity, so that the tax is uniform when it operates throughout the United States "in the same way wherever the subject-matter is found." (Flint v. Stone-Tracy Co., 220 U. S., 107, 174; Head Money Cases, 112 U. S., 580, 594.)

The second clause is closely related to the first. In fact, the two clauses were reported to the convention as one. Mr. Chief Justice (then associate justice) White, speaking of this in a review of the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention, in Knowlton v. Moore (178 U. S., 41), said, at pages 105 and 106:

"Thus it came to pass that, although the provisions as to preference between ports and that regarding uniformity of duties, imposts, and excises were one in purpose, one in their adoption, they became separated only in arranging the Constitution for the purpose of style. * * * The preference clause of the Constitution and the uniformity clause were, in effect, in framing the Constitution, treated, as respected their operation, as one and the same thing, and embodied the same conception."

In another connection, page 104, he said:

"It follows from the collocation of the two clauses that the prohibition as to preferences in regulations of commerce between ports and the uniformity as to duties, imposts, and excises, though couched in different language, had absolutely the same significance."

The leading case upon the construction of clause 6, in section 9 of article 1, is Pennsylvania v. Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Co. (18 How., 421, 433–435), where it was held that the law authorizing a bridge over the Ohio River at Wheeling, and requiring vessels and crews of vessels navigating that river not to interfere with the elevation and construction of the bridge, was a legitimate exercise of constitutional power to regulate commerce.

In the opinion, Mr. Justice Nelson said for the court, at page 435:

"* * * it is a mistake to assume that Congress is forbidden to give a preference to a port in one State over a port in another. Such preference is given in every instance where it makes a port in one State a port of entry and refuses to make another port in another State a port of entry. No greater preference, in one sense, can be more directly given than in this way, and yet the power of Congress to give such preference has never been questioned. Nor can it be without asserting that the moment Congress makes a port in one State a port of entry it is bound, at the same time, to make all other ports in all other States ports of entry.

"The truth seems to be that what is forbidden is not discrimination between individual ports within the same or different States, but discrimination between States; and if so, in order to bring this case within the prohibition, it is necessary to show not merely discrimination between Pittsburgh and Wheeling, but discrimination between the ports of Virginia and those of Pennsylvania.

Justice Nelson further said, at page 433:

"There are many acts of Congress passed in the exercise of this power to regulate commerce, providing for a special advantage to the port or ports of one State and which very advantage may incidentally operate to the prejudice of the ports in a neighboring State, which have never been supposed to conflict with this limitation upon its power. The improvement of rivers and harbors, the erection of lighthouses, and other facilities of commerce may be referred to as examples. It will not do to say that the exercise of an admitted power of Congress conferred by the Constitution is to be withheld if it appears or can be shown that the effect and operation of the law may incidentally extend beyond the limitation of the power. Upon any such interpretation the principal object of the framers of the instrument in conferring the power would be sacrificed to the subordinate consequences resulting from its exercise."

The justice finished that thought with a sentence having a bearing upon the advisability of authorizing the establishment of free ports. He said, at page 434:

"These consequences and incidents are very proper considerations to be urged upon Congress for the purpose of dissuading that body from its exercise but afford no ground for denying the power itself or the right to exercise it."

That case has been frequently cited. Thus, in South Carolina v. Georgia (93 U. S., 4, 13), holding the closing of the channel on the South Carolina side of Hutchinsons Island not to be a preference to the ports of Georgia forbidden by the clause of the Constitution now under consideration, this was said of the Bridge Co. case:

"It was then said that prohibition of such a preference does not extend to acts which may directly benefit the ports of one State and only incidentally injuriously affect those of another, such as the improvement of rivers and harbors, the erection of lighthouses, and other facilities of commerce."

In another case, to wit, Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission (184 Fed., 118, 123), Judge Severens said of the clause in question:

"But this does not prevent the exercise of the power of Congress by delegated authority to regulate commerce between ports of different States simply because such regulation may incidentally affect the commerce of a port in a still other State. If such an incidental consequence were admitted to be an insurmountable obstruction, the power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States would be seriously impaired."

Mr Justice Day, speaking for the Supreme Court in Armour Packing Co. v. United States (299 U. S., 56, 80), said:

"The fact that regulation, within the acknowledged power of Congress to enact, may affect the ports of one State more than those of another can not be construed as a violation of this constitutional provision."

And while on the constitutional question attention of Congress is called to chapter 223, 1914, Statutes of the United States at Large, wherein the Sixty-third Congress at the second session conferred upon the President authority to cancel or establish ports of entry.

NATIONAL FREE ZONE ASSOCIATION.

After the Tariff Commission had completed its investigation and published its report, chambers of commerce and other commercial organizations of the United States sent representatives to a conference at New York, July, 1919, and at this conference the National Free Zone Association was organized for the purpose of bringing to the attention of Congress the absolute necessity of enacting legislation such as is proposed in H. R. 10156. Without going into all of the details of the history of this association, it is sufficient to say that it is one of the most representative organizations in the United States.

Its directors are: Arthur McGuirk, special counsel board of commissioners of the port of New Orleans; John W. Thomas, vice president Great Lakes Trust Co., Chicago; J. J. Dwyer, San Francisco Chamber of Commerce; Lucius R. Eastman, president The Hills Bros. Co., New York; William M. Garland, Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles; William O. Hempstead, O. G. Hempstead & Sons, Philadelphia; T. S. Lippy, Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club, Seattle; A. M. Lockett, The A. M. Lockett & Co. (Ltd.), New Orleans; Austin W. McLanahan, Alexander Brown & Sons, Baltimore; R. Goodwin Rhett, Peoples National Bank, Charleston, S. C.; Semmes Steele, Galveston (Tex.) Commercial Association; John N. Shannahan, president Chamber of Commerce Newport News, Va.; Paul T. Cherington, Boston Chamber of Commerce and secretary National Wool Manufacturers' Association; and John H. Rossiter, director of operations United States Shipping Board, vice president W. R. Grace Co., president Pacific Mail Steamship Co., president Sperry Flour Co.

CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE INDORSEMENTS.

Nearly all of these men and many others connected with the Philadelphia Bourse, New York Merchants' Association, Chambers of Commerce of San Francisco, Seattle, Chicago, Boston, Baltimore, Detroit, St. Louis, Savannah, Tampa, Galveston, Newport News, Norfolk, Charleston, Jacksonville, New Orleans, Los Angeles, Oakland, and other leading commercial organizations have appeared before the committees of Congress and testified that their organizations indorse the establishment of foreign trade zones.

It is not my purpose to take the time of Congress in repeating the testimony and arguments presented at the committee hearings; but I earnestly ask the Members of the House to study the report of the Tariff Commission and the hearings referred to. I believe that if the Members take the time to do this they will be convinced that immediate action should be had.

The passage of the bill is asked by men who want to build up American prosperity by holding and enlarging our foreign trade.

I have introduced a revised bill which, in my judgment, meets and disposes of the criticisms, such as they were, which have been made. Of course, I do not think the bill is 100 per cent perfect, and therefore I ask the Members of the House, and particularly the members of the Ways and Means Committee, who have had large experience, to make the amendments, if necessary, which will perfect the measure. I have no doubt suggestions will be made by thinking men from all parts of the country, and I request such suggestions.

IMPORTANT TO AMERICAN LABOR.

As important as is the commercial interest in this bill, I regard the American labor interest. I have learned that thousands of workingmen are employed in foreign countries sorting, repacking, mixing foreign goods with American material for shipment to countries other than the United States. I believe this work should be done by American men and women, and it can be done by our people if foreign trade zones are established.

The legislation, as has been said, is merely permissive. No obligations are placed upon the Federal Government and no appropriations are asked for. If Congress passes a zone act, States, municipalities, harbor boards, or other public corporations will be required to provide the money and the facilities.

STIMULATE HARBOR DEVELOPMENT.

An equally important feature of this bill is that it will stimulate much-needed harbor development. Emphasis was placed upon this feature by former Representative Hulbert, now dock commissioner of New York; by J. J. Dwyer, former president of the board of harbor commissioners, San Francisco; and others. It is shown by these men that the American harbors are wholly inadequate as compared with the harbors of our foreign competitors. Studies and plans are being made at all the important American ports, and before improvements are determined upon the engineers and port authorities ask that foreign trade zone legislation be enacted, so that they may install modern and efficient facilities for handling export and transshipment business.

Following is the pending bill:

A bill to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., When used in this act—

The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Commerce;

The term "public corporation" means a State, a legal subdivision thereof, or a municipality, or a lawfully authorized public agency of a State or a municipality;

The term "applicant" means a public corporation applying for the right to establish, operate, and maintain a foreign trade zone;

The term "grantee" means a public corporation to which the privilege of establishing, operating, and maintaining a foreign trade zone has been granted;

The term "zone" means a "foreign trade zone" as provided in this act.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized, subject to the conditions and restrictions of this act and of the rules and regulations made thereunder, upon application as hereinafter provided, to grant to public corporations the privilege of establishing, operating, and maintaining foreign trade zones in or adjacent to ports of entry under the jurisdiction of the United States, whose location and general availability for conducting foreign commerce make them suitable for the accomplishment of the purposes of such zones. Not more than one zone shall be authorized in or adjacent to any port of entry: Provided, That when a port of entry is located within the confines of more than one State a zone may be authorized for each of such States, territory of which is comprised in such port of entry.

SEC. 3. Foreign and domestic merchandise of every description, except such as is prohibited by law, may without being subject to the customs laws of the United States, except as otherwise provided in this act, be brought into a zone and there stored, exhibited, broken up, repacked, assembled, distributed, sorted, refined, graded, cleaned, mixed with foreign or domestic merchandise, or otherwise manipulated, or manufactured, and be transshipped, exported, or sent into customs territory of the United States therefrom, in the original package or otherwise; but when merchandise is so sent from a zone into customs territory of the United States it shall be subject to the laws and regulations of the United States as imported merchandise: Provided, That when the privilege shall be requested, the collector of customs shall supervise the unloading of the merchandise in the zone, cause such merchandise, or any part thereof, to be appraised, and the duties liquidated thereon. Thereafter it may be stored, manipulated, or manufactured under the supervision and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and within three years after such unlading such merchandise may be sent into customs territory upon the payment of such liquidated duties thereon.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Treasury shall assign to the zone the necessary customs officers and guards to protect the revenue and to provide for the admission of merchandise into customs territory.

SEC. 5. Vessels entering or leaving a zone shall be subject to the operation of all of the laws of the United States, except as otherwise provided in this act, and vessels leaving a zone and arriving in customs territory of the United States shall be subject to such regulations to protect the revenue as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 6. Each application shall state in detail—

(1) The location and qualifications of the area in which it is proposed to establish a zone, showing (a) the land and water or land or water area or land area alone if the application is for its establishment in or adjacent to an interior port; (b) the means of segregation from customs territory; (c) the fitness of the area for a zone; and (d) the possibilities of expansion of the zone area;

(2) The facilities and appurtenance which it is proposed to provide and the preliminary plans and an estimate of the cost thereof; and the existing facilities and appurtenances which it is proposed to utilize;

(3) The time within which the applicant proposes to commence and complete the construction of the zone and facilities and appurtenances;

(4) The methods proposed to finance the undertaking;

(5) Such other information as the Secretary may require.

The Secretary may upon his own initiative or upon request permit the amendment of the application. Any expansion of the area of an established zone shall be made and approved in the same manner as an original application.

SEC. 7. If the Secretary finds that the proposed plans and location are suitable for the accomplishment of the purpose of a foreign-trade zone under this act, and that the facilities and appurtenances which it is proposed to provide are sufficient, he shall make the grant. If the findings of the Secretary lead him to refuse the grant, the applicant may appeal to a board consisting of the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of War, whose decision shall be final as to the grant of the application.

SEC. 8. The Secretary shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this act.

SEC. 9. The Secretary shall cooperate with Federal, State, and municipal officers or agents in the enforcement in and in connection with the zone of police, taxation, sanitary, and other laws applicable thereto.

SEC. 10. For the purpose of facilitating the investigations of the Secretary and his work in the granting of the privilege, in the establishment, operation, and maintenance of a zone, the President may direct the executive departments and other establishments of the Government to cooperate with the Secretary, and for such purpose each of the several departments and establishments is authorized, upon direction of the President, to furnish to the Secretary such records, papers, and information in their possession as may be required by him, and temporarily to detail to the service of the Secretary such officers, experts, or engineers as may be necessary.

SEC. 11. If the title to or right of user of any of the property to be included in a zone is in the United States, an agreement to use such property for zone purposes may be entered into between the grantee and the proper department or officer of the United States under conditions, approved by the Secretary, as may be agreed upon.

SEC. 12. Each grantee shall provide and maintain in connection with the zone—

(a) Adequate slips, docks, wharves, warehouses, loading and unloading, and mooring facilities.

(b) Adequate transportation connections with the surrounding territory and with all parts of the United States, so arranged as to permit of proper guarding and inspection for the protection of the revenue.

(c) Adequate facilities for coal or other fuel and for light and power.

(d) Adequate water and sewer mains.

(e) Adequate quarters and facilities for the officers and employees of the United States, State, and municipality whose duties may require their presence within the zone.

(f) Adequate inclosures to segregate the zone from customs territory for protection of the revenue, together with suitable provisions for ingress and egress of persons, conveyances, vessels, and merchandise.

SEC. 13. The grantee may, with the approval of the Secretary and under reasonable and uniform regulations for like conditions and circumstances, permit private persons, firms, corporations, or associations to erect such buildings and other structures as will meet their particular requirements: Provided, That such permission shall not constitute a vested right as against the United States, nor interfere with the regulation of the grantee or the permittee by the United States, nor interfere with or complicate the revocation of the grant by the United States: And provided further, That in the event of the United States or the grantee desiring to acquire the property of the permittee no good will shall be considered as accruing from the privilege granted to the zone: And provided further, That such permits shall not be granted on terms that conflict with the public use of the zone as set forth in this act.

SEC. 14. Each zone shall be operated as a public utility, all rates and charges for all services or privileges within the zone shall be fair and reasonable, and the grantee shall afford to all who may apply for the use of the zone and its facilities and appurtenances uniform treatment under like conditions, subject to such treaties or commercial conventions as are now in force or may hereafter be made from time to time by the United States with foreign governments.

SEC. 15. No person shall be allowed to reside within the zone except Federal, State, or municipal officers or agents whose resident presence is deemed necessary by the Secretary.

The Secretary shall prescribe rules and regulations regarding employees and other persons entering and leaving the zone. All rules and regulations concerning the protection of the revenue shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Secretary may at any time order the exclusion from the zone of any goods or process of treatment that in his judgment is detrimental to the public interest, health, or safety.

No retail trade shall be conducted within the zone, except under permits issued by the grantee and approved by the Secretary. Such permittees shall sell no goods except such as are brought into the zone from customs territory.

SEC. 16. The form and manner of keeping the accounts of each zone shall be prescribed by the Secretary.

Each grantee shall make to the Secretary annually, and at such other times as he may prescribe, reports containing a full statement of all the operations, receipts, and expenditures, and such other information as the Secretary may require.

The Secretary shall make a report to Congress on the first day of each regular session containing a summary of the operation and fiscal condition of each zone and transmit therewith copies of the annual report of each grantee.

SEC. 17. The grant shall not be sold, conveyed, transferred, set over, or assigned.

SEC. 18. In the event of the continued violation of any of the provisions of this act by the grantee, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Treasury, or a majority of them, may revoke the grant after four months' notice to the grantee and affording it an opportunity to be heard. The testimony taken before the Secretaries shall be reduced to writing and filed in the records of the Department of Commerce.

In the conduct of any proceedings under this section for the revocation of a grant, the Secretaries may compel the attendance of witnesses and the giving of testimony and the production of documentary evidence, and for such purpose may invoke the aid of the district courts of the United States.

An order under the provisions of this section revoking the grant, issued by the Secretaries, shall be final and conclusive unless within 90 days after its service the grantee appeals to the circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which the zone is located by filing with the clerk of said court a written petition praying that the order of the Secretaries be set aside. The clerk of the court in which such a petition is filed shall immediately cause a copy thereof to be delivered to the Secretaries, and they shall forthwith prepare, certify, and file in the court a full and accurate transcript of the record in the proceedings held before them under this section, the charges, the evidence, and the order revoking the grant. The testimony and evidence taken or submitted before the Secretaries, duly certified and filed as a part of the record, shall be considered by the court as the evidence in the case.

On such appeal the court shall review the record of proceedings before the Secretaries, and if the decision of said Secretaries shall be supported by evidence, shall only make decision on errors of law.

SEC. 19. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to certain circumstances be held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provisions to circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 20. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

ANALYSIS OF BILL.

Section 1 defines the meaning of certain terms used in the bill.

Section 2 authorizes the Secretary of Commerce, subject to the conditions and restrictions and rules and regulations made under the act, to grant to public corporations the privilege of establishing and operating foreign trade zones in or adjacent to ports of entry under the jurisdiction of the United States. It provides that not more than one zone shall be established at any port of entry except where a port is located within the confines of more than one State. This exception is intended to meet a condition which might arise in the larger ports where the customs district extends over the border line of one State.

Section 3 provides that merchandise of every description, except such as is prohibited by law, may enter the zone. This general assemblage of goods, foreign and domestic, is primarily for the benefit of export and transshipment trade.

However, in order that vessels may unload goods destined for customs territory of the United States, provision is made that the customs officials may be called upon to supervise unlading of goods which the consignee intends for shipment to the interior through the customs gate. Unless the consignee shall make such request, all goods entering the zone are freely handled and thereby lose their identification and are shorn of the possibility of transmission into the interior on equally favorable terms with goods entering customs territory.

Foreign goods, moreover, that the consignee may desire to delay in the zone, retaining the character of their origin, may be stored in special warehouses subject to the same guarding and identification. These goods may remain in such warehouses for a period of not more than three years. In such warehouses goods may be sorted, mixed, or blended as well as in the unrestricted part of the zone. The privilege of option as to foreign or domestic shipment is one for which the consignee should pay the costs of segregation and guarding.

Should foreign goods come into the zone for the purpose of being mixed with American goods, their identity must equally be maintained if, on shipment into customs territory, duties are to be levied solely on the foreign content.

As concerns American goods entering the zone, they may be sent back into customs territory just as under the present law regarding goods returning from a foreign country, without payment of duty, but subject to identification.

If after mixing American and foreign goods there be a desire to return the mixture into the United States, the identification maintained over the foreign content will indicate the amount of duty to be paid.

There remains one more contingency, and that is in cases where foreign or American goods have entered the zone without being subject to continuing identification, which will be the case with the larger portion of goods intended primarily for transshipment.

If such identification is not established and maintained, and such goods have lost the identification upon which duties are based in customs ports, they must necessarily be rated on a different and less favorable basis of valuation than goods dated and identified as to their foreign or domestic nature or content. There is necessarily considerable latitude left in this latter contingency to the Secretary of the Treasury, which is consonant with existing law.

Section 4 provides that the Treasury Department shall detail the necessary customs officers to the zone to protect the revenue and to provide for the admission of merchandise into customs territory. In the judgment of men experienced in the customs department, the centralization of their work will bring about an economy in administration.

Section 5 relates to vessels entering or leaving the zone and does not in any way modify or amend any of the shipping or other laws relating to the merchant marine. It is also provided in this section that vessels leaving a foreign trade zone shall be subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, which regulations will protect the revenues and prevent the shipment into customs territory of imported merchandise on which duty has not been paid.

Section 6 prescribes that the applicant shall state in detail the location and qualifications of the area in which it is proposed to establish a foreign trade zone, and also requires the applicant to make satisfactory presentation of the facilities which it is proposed to install. The applicant is also required to show the proposed method of financing the undertaking and to give the Secretary such other information as may be required. In the event that an established zone proposes to expand its area applications for such expansion must be made and approved as an original application. Under this provision the Secretary of Commerce may determine whether the commercial needs of the zone justify an extension, and also gives the department sufficient discretion to decide whether the facilities proposed are needed and sufficient.

Section 7 provides that the Secretary shall issue the grant if the application complies with all requirements. If the Secretary refuses the grant, the applicant then has an appeal to a board composed of the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of War, whose decision as to the grant of the application shall be final.

Section 8 authorizes the Secretary to prescribe necessary rules and regulations for carrying out the act.

Section 9 requires the Secretary to cooperate with Federal, State, and municipal officers or agents in the enforcement of police, taxation, sanitary, and other laws applicable to the zone.

Section 10 authorizes governmental departments, upon direction of the President, to assist the Secretary of Commerce in procuring data which may be required in connection with the zone.

Section 11 provides that if any of the property to be included in a zone belongs to the United States, an agreement approved by the Secretary of Commerce as to conditions may be entered into between the grantee and the proper department or officer of the United States.

Section 12 requires the grantee to provide adequate slips, docks, wharves, warehouses, loading and unloading and other facilities; adequate transportation facilities; adequate facilities for fuel and power; adequate water supply and sewage mains; adequate housing and other facilities for officers of the law whose duties require their presence in the zone; and an adequate inclosure to separate the zone from customs territory and protect the revenue.

Section 13 authorizes private persons, firms, corporations, or associations to erect buildings and other structures to meet their particular requirements, and it is provided that if such buildings or structures are constructed by private capital no vested right shall accrue as against the United States and that no interference with the regulations of the Secretary or the grantee shall be allowed. It also provides that in the event the United States or the grantee desires to acquire the property no good will shall accrue from the privilege granted to the zone, and further that permits shall not be granted upon terms that conflict with the public use of the zone as set forth in the act. The purpose of this section is to permit steamship companies or warehousemen to finance, under proper restrictions, the construction of buildings or facilities which will expedite commerce.

Section 14 requires that each zone shall be operated as a public utility and that all rates and charges for all services and privileges shall be fair and reasonable; and it also requires grantees to afford uniform treatment under like conditions to all who may apply for the use of the zone, subject to treaties or commercial conventions between the United States and foreign Governments now or hereafter in force.

Section 15 prohibits residential population within the zone, except such Federal, State, or municipal officers whose resident presence is deemed necessary by the Secretary. The Secretary is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations regarding employees and other persons entering and leaving the zones, and all such regulations which may concern the protection of the revenue shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. Further, the Secretary is authorized to exclude from the zone any goods or process of treatment that may be detrimental to the public interest, health, or safety. This provision is intended to give the Secretary authority to exclude obnoxious chemical establishments or places in which explosives might be made or stored.

It is also provided that no retail trade shall be conducted in the zone except upon permits issued by the grantee and approved by the Secretary, and no goods can be sold at retail in the zone unless they are brought in from customs territory.

Section 16 gives the Secretary authority to prescribe the manner of keeping accounts and making of reports and requires annual reports to be made to Congress.

Section 17 prohibits the sale, conveyance, transfer, or assignment of the grant.

Section 18 provides that in the event of continued violation of the provisions of this act the grant may be revoked by a board consisting of the Secretary of Commerce, Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of War, or a majority of them. Such revocation can be made only upon notice and the grantee is given the right of appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals.

Sections 19 and 20 are the usual reservations provided by Congress in general legislation.

Mexico—A Running Sore on the Body of the Western Hemisphere.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. J. WILL TAYLOR,
OF TENNESSEE,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, October 30, 1919.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, our Mexican policy, or rather our lack of Mexican policy, is a burning shame and disgrace. The repeated outrages and atrocities committed by Mexico on American rights, both public and private, is enough to bring a blush of shame to the cheek of every true American. During the last six years we have seen hundreds of American subjects, men, women, and innocent children, brutally slain by alleged Mexican bandits; we have permitted Mexican outlaws to appropriate and destroy, with absolute impunity, American property into the multiplied millions; and still we have done nothing but protest. This last performance, the kidnaping of Consul Jenkins, is the crowning act of Mexican perfidy and audacity. Behold the spectacle! A high American official kidnaped by bandits within the very shadow of the Mexican capitol and $150,000 ransom demanded for his release. It is downright incredible. It sound like the most ludicrous and unreasonable sort of fiction.

When will our tolerance and forbearance toward this sort of high-handed and red-handed business cease to be a virtue? How long will the American people stand for the criminal indifference of those charged with the power, authority, and obligation to act?

The abduction of American citizens in Mexico by Mexican bandits has got to be of almost daily occurrence. Kidnaping American subjects for booty has got to be a Mexican habit and her principal industry. The American people are tired and disgusted with this tomfoolery, and they are not going to put up with it much longer.

If I had my way about it, Uncle Sam would immediately send a company of civil engineers into Mexico, backed by sufficient military forces, with instructions to draw a parallel line to and about 100 miles south of the Rio Grande, and we would change our southern boundary accordingly. I would annex this territory as indemnity for past depredations and as a grim reminder that we are not going to permit a continuation of these outrages. And if this reminder should not have the desired effect I would continue to move the line southward until the Mexican Government was crowded off the North American map.

The Mexican Government is a putrid, suppurating sore on the body of the Western Hemisphere, and the world is looking to Uncle Sam to perform the necessary surgery to remove the very roots of the disease. The operation must be performed with judgment and discretion, but firmly. Vacillation, equivocation, and irresolution will only encourage a repetition of past misconduct.

It is a melancholy fact that American citizenship possesses no particular value or significance in foreign lands. In many countries, owing to the extreme lack of appreciation of America and American institutions in their own protection, our subjects are forced to disguise their citizenship, discard their national identity, and represent themselves as subjects of other nations. This is a sad commentary; nevertheless it is the absolute truth.

I want to live to see the day, and I trust it is not far distant, when American subjects will be protected and respected the world over, on land and on sea. I want to see the day when an American citizen can boast, as of yore, that he is an American, in whatever land or clime he may find himself. I want to see the old "U. S. A." restored to its former prestige and glory. The time was when the "Stars and Stripes" was loved and revered at home and honored and respected abroad; when there was no greater pride or privilege than to be an American citizen. God hasten the return of that blessed day.

SPEECH

OF

HON. CHARLES D. CARTER,

OF OKLAHOMA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 23, 1919.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2480) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York, in charge of this bill, has so well stated the case that I hesitate to have anything to say in the premises. The bill, as was stated by the gentleman from New York, presented for consideration is the result of the work of the last session of Congress. The estimates were given by the department in the usual way, and when the bill was made up by the committee these estimates were reduced by some $700,000, if I remember correctly. Then the bill passed through the House at about the same amount as was reported by the committee.

Then the bill went to the Senate and the Senate raised the amount appropriated by the House by some $422,000. In conference this Senate increase was reduced by $376,000, making the conference report carry $76,000 more than was carried by the bill as it passed the House. This bill presented here to-day is the exact conference report without the change of a word or a letter, having had consideration first by the House, then by the Senate, then by the conference, and afterwards the conference report having been considered and passed in the House, and it only failed in the Senate on account of the filibuster conducted by Senators FRANCE, SHERMAN, and LA FOLLETTE at that time. So there is really no new matter in the bill. There is nothing that was not given the most serious consideration by the last Congress, and therefore I hope we will be able to pass the bill without very much discussion under the five-minute rule and in a reasonably short time. Of course, the House must always consider these matters. There are many new Members here who do not know what is in the bill and will want to know, and I, with the gentleman from New York, will be very glad to give any information I can at any time with reference to any of these items contained in the bill.
